If it was the purpose of those controlling the Senate on this subject merely to reject the League of Nations from the treaty and to secure the ratification of peace with Germany, the opportunity was here for more than nine months. It was within the power of the majority of the Senate to have amended the treaty by striking out of it all the provisions that related to the covenant of the League of Nations, and to have ratified the treaty with that amendment. If that had been done, all that is in this resolution would have been accomplished, and more, because the Imperial Government of Germany was only a party to the treaty so far as the covenants of peace were concerned, and was not a party to the treaty so far as the covenants that related to the League of Nations were concerned. We could have established lasting peace with Germany if action of that kind had been taken and had been accepted by the President.

But that opportunity of acceptance or rejection was not presented to the President of the United States. Therefore I think that the party in control of the Senate, when they returned the treaty to the President without amendment, foreclosed the opportunity to conclude the treaty of peace that ourselves and our allies had made.

Now, so far as my own individual views are concerned, I am not disposed to take the time of the Senate in restating them. More than a year ago I discussed the treaty in the Senate and expressed my views in favor of unconditional ratification. I have not changed my view personally as to the wisdom of unconditional ratification at that time, but I know that my viewpoint is not reflected by many of my colleagues.

I have never regarded the question of reservations as the important question that faced the country. I have always believed that the Constitution of the United States in all its details was written within the terms of the treaty, and that it would be impossible for any action of the executive or the legislative branch of the Government to prevent the Constitution and its limitations from being within the terms of the treaty. Therefore I did not believe that express reservations were necessary to establish that fact. I was very anxious and am now that peace might be concluded with the German Government, but when the Senate returned the treaty of peace to the President, I think, at least for the time, the opportunity was foreclosed, and peace can not be accomplished as is proposed in the pending resolution.

Briefly I wish to express my reasons for the conclusion that I have reached. The resolution passed by the House of Representatives and amended by the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate attempts to accomplish three objects: It attempts, by repealing the war statute or the declaration of war, to declare that the war with Germany has ceased; it attempts, by congressional enactment, to tie ourselves into the terms of the treaty of Versailles so far as the rights and privileges we were to obtain under that treaty are concerned; and it attempts to declare peace or the end of the war with the Government of Austria.

Let us see whether those objects can be accomplished by the resolution. The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the author of the pending amendment, in his able speech to the Senate on May 5 last, laid down the following propositions:

> In this discussion it is necessary, as pointed out in the majority report upon the House resolution, to recall that wars may be terminated in one of three ways: First, through the abstention by both parties from further acts of war, or, as one writer puts it, "War may silently cease and peace be silently renewed" (III Phillimore, 772; II Oppenheim, 323); or, second, war may be ended by the establishment of peace "through a special treaty of peace"; or, third, one of the belligerents may completely subjugate his adversary.

I agree with what the Senator said, that those are the three ways in which we can accomplish a status of peace. Now, let us reverse the order in which he stated the problem and see what confronts us. Making the first last, he asserts:

> One of the belligerents may completely subjugate his adversary.

That has not been accomplished in this war, and, therefore, peace will not arrive in that way.

> Second. War may be ended by the establishment of peace "through a special treaty of peace."

The accomplishment of peace in that way was proposed by the Executive. A treaty of peace was negotiated and submitted to the Senate. The Senate might have rejected it by a direct vote; it might have ratified it——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire if I correctly understand the Senator from Alabama as saying that the enemy has not been completely subjugated?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not in the sense, I think, that we have made peace in that way.

Mr. KNOX. Did not the President of the United States on at least two occasions, and on each occasion by two or three different methods of expression, each one stronger almost than the other, say that the war was at an end; that Germany had been destroyed; that she was unable to renew hostilities, and that all of the purposes of the war had been accomplished?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not trying the case on the statement of the President, and I do not think that is conclusive of the matter; but I am sure that the Senator from Pennsylvania himself will not insist that we have arrived at a state of peace by the subjugation of Germany in the sense that is used by the text writers from whom he quotes. Subjugation in that respect means the destruction of the government, making the people of the conquered territory absolutely subject to the will and control of the conquerer. That has not been done in Germany.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me further, I do not want to interfere with the course of his argument——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. KNOX. But I wish to call his attention to the language of the armistice, which the President read to us and commented upon; that all hostilities on land, in the air, and on the sea were terminated, and all of the instrumentalities of war which pertained to the conduct of the war upon the land and in the air and upon the sea were surrendered to the belligerent forces that were attacking Germany.

If the Senator will permit one more sentence, I think the Senator from Alabama fails to discriminate between the fact of peace and the terms upon which we propose to arrive at peace, which are the usual functions of a treaty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all; I am coming to that, and I am trying merely to analyze what the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania said in his opening speech in the discussion of this question.

I take it that there is a vast difference between conquest and subjugation. I concede—and I think what the President has said and all that the Senator has said carries out the idea—that Germany has been conquered; but that is very different from saying that Germany has been subjugated. There can be no question of subjugation involved here. Subjugation means the destruction of the enemy's government, reducing their population to a servile condition subject to the will of the conqueror. No such condition exists. There has never been an hour since the war was declared when a government functioning for the great majority of the German people has not been in existence and performing the duties devolving upon it. There has never been an hour since the war was declared when the great body of the German people have not been under the orders and the control of their own Government, and not under the control of the conquering nation. So I think it is conclusive that the war has not been concluded by subjugation. The enemy has been conquered; he has surrendered according to terms; but there is nothing of which I know in the terms of the armistice signed that indicates that the Germans now or for the future are to be a subjugated people, subject absolutely to the will and control of their conqueror. I think that eliminates the third proposition as to whether peace has been declared by subjugation.

Then the first proposition, as stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania, is this:

> Through the abstention by both parties from further acts of war, or, as one writer puts it, "war may silently cease and peace be silently renewed."

I am perfectly willing to agree that actual hostilities have ceased. The Senator's interesting speech presented many details to demonstrate the fact that hostilities have ceased, and, in my opinion, in that respect he conclusively proved his case. I think, however, I can go one step further in aid of the argument made along that line to prove that hostilities have ceased, and the illustration is so spectacular that no man can deny the result. After the declaration of war we moved 2,000,000 men across 3,000 miles of ocean, put them on the battle lines of France, and after the armistice was signed we moved those 2,000,000 men back across 3,000 miles of water to our own country, demobilized them, and returned them to their homes.

To-day we have on German soil merely a picket line of a few thousand American soldiers, representing the Army of the United States, there only for the purpose of showing that we are still a part of the negotiations of the supreme council that was established by the armistice, and for no other purpose. I do not think it is possible for any man to assert that there can be any question that hostilities have ceased when one of the great conquering nations has returned its army home and demobilized it. So I think that the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania that hostilities have ceased can well be conceded. But the time referred to in the second part of this sentence, in my judgment, has not yet arrived.

In the Senator's quotation he says:

> War may silently cease and peace be silently renewed.

True, it can be, and there are instances in history where peace has been accomplished in that way; but not overnight, not in a year or an hour. It has been through the endless tract of time that a status of peace has been recognized in that way. I am not prepared to say that in the course of years, if no further action is taken by our Government or the Government of Germany toward the renewal of hostilities, peace might not be silently recognized; but we certainly have not yet reached that period. The accomplishment of that result, so far as fixing the status of these Governments on a peace basis is concerned, certainly has not arrived up to this hour.

What is the condition that really confronts the country?

I think there are three questions that are involved in the return from war to peace.

The first is the cessation of hostilities. That undoubtedly has been accomplished.

The second is the repeal of war legislation on the part of our Government. During the period of the war, for the purpose of carrying on the war, it became necessary for the Congress to pass and the President to enforce certain war legislation in order that our efforts to conquer the enemy might not fail. It is legislation that is not acceptable to our people in time of peace. It is legislation that is not necessary to the life of our Nation in time of peace. It is legislation, unquestionably, that should be repealed. Now, the Congress contemplated the repeal of this legislation when it was enacted, because, I think, there was not one bill carrying war legislation that did not carry within its terms a clause providing that it should either cease to exist instantly upon the ratification of a treaty of peace with the German Government or within a short stated period immediately thereafter.

I think this legislation should be repealed. I have not examined it in all its details. There may be some particular piece of legislation that it may be advisable to carry on for a short length of time; but if there is, I am not advised of the fact. I see no reason why this legislation should not have been repealed when the President returned the American Army from the battle fields of Europe to American soil. That was notice to the Congress that hostilities had ceased. The legislation was not passed to protect a status of war. The legislation was passed to carry on actual hostilities; and now that it is conceded by all that actual hostilities have ceased for more than a year, I see no reason why war legislation should remain on the statute books. Bill after bill has been introduced in this Congress looking to the repeal of this war legislation, in whole or in part. The party to which I hold allegiance is not in power in either branch of Congress. The responsibility for legislation rests with the majority party. For more than a year the majority party in the Congress has had a full and ample opportunity to repeal war legislation by the express enactment of statutes, and no action has been taken except the proposal in this joint resolution to tie the repeal of war legislation with the issues involved in establishing peace relations with Germany. I think they are issues that are entirely separate and distinct.

The German Government has no interest in or power to control the repeal of war legislation. The only interest it has in the matter is in questions in which the two Governments are involved in reference to their commerce and their diplomatic relations. So I say it is no answer to the problem to assert that the joint resolution should be passed through Congress because we want to repeal war legislation. There are other ways in which to repeal war legislation. There has been ample time, within the life of this Congress, to have repealed the war legislation if the Congress had desired to do so; so I take it that the repeal of war legislation is not a ground for the passage of this joint resolution.

The third accomplishment that will bring us to a status of peace is the renewal of diplomatic and commercial relations with the Governments with which we have been at war. That is the only question that is really involved—the only question that is at issue—in the proposals of a treaty of peace. It is conceded by all that hostilities have ceased and that they will not be renewed, because if there had been any intention of renewing hostilities the President would not have withdrawn our armies from the battle field and the Congress would not have remained silent during the withdrawal. So that the only issue now involved outside of the domestic one—a mere question of legislation that is purely domestic and relates only to our internal affairs—is the question of the renewal of diplomatic relations with our late enemies and the renewal of commercial relations with them.

How can that be accomplished? In a way, it is being accomplished to-day. We are trading with Germany and Germany is trading with us. We have no direct diplomatic relations, but indirectly we are carrying on certain negotiations with her—a very unsatisfactory condition, I admit, but one that is proof of the cessation of hostilities.

Here are two great Governments, representing millions of people, who for generations had close commercial relations that it is to the interest of both peoples to renew. How are you going to renew these relations? By our assuming that we can establish a fact, and that that fact will be accepted for all time by an alien country? The thought is impossible. If we desire to renew diplomatic and commercial relations with our enemy, we must do so in one way, and one way only, and that is by contract—by mutual understanding—and that can no longer be accomplished by a declaration such as this joint resolution proposes, telling the enemy the terms on which we will renew our commercial life and intercourse with them when we no longer have the power to enforce our demands. That power was removed from the battle fields of France more than a year ago, or at least its removal was begun, and was accomplished many months ago.

I do not know what this joint resolution means when you take it by its four corners, in so far as it seeks to establish commercial relations with Germany, unless it is a bluff; unless we are saying to the German Government: "You must accept these terms and, without our ratifying the treaty of Versailles, without our becoming a party to it, you must accept the terms and the burdens of the treaty of Versailles," when there is not a bayonet on the border to enforce our bluff.

You may say there are 8,000 men there, a mere picket line. You have brought your armies home. You have refused to ratify the treaty when your Government said "Sign on the dotted line," and now you propose to offer this declaration without guns and soldiers and bayonets to enforce it, and you know full well that the American people are not going to countenance the sending back to France of the boys of America to force the signing of this contract. You have let the opportunity go by, and to satisfy the American people you are trying to build a wall of paper as a camouflage in its place.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator makes the point that we have no Army to compel Germany to negotiate a treaty with us. That is true, and Germany has no army or no navy to resist ours should we bombard their ports. But the question I wish to ask the Senator is, would not the economic pressure which the United States can bring to bear upon Germany, and Germany's desire for our raw material and commerce generally, compel them to accept almost any sort of a negotiated treaty? I refer the Senator to the very able argument just made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], in which he demonstrated that Germany economically is at the feet of the United States, and that we could by economic force compel them to do almost anything.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am in accord with the view expressed by the Senator from Tennessee. I think that is true. But that is not within the four corners of this joint resolution. There is but one way to accomplish that, and I think it can be accomplished, and that is by a contract between the two Governments, by a treaty of peace.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is another question about which I would ask the Senator's view. The President, fully cognizant of the entire situation, saw no objection to negotiating a separate treaty with Germany when only recently he threatened to withdraw the treaty from the Senate. I submit that when the President, with his full knowledge of the facts, was willing to undertake to negotiate a separate treaty, abandoning this one, as he threatened to do, does not the Senator think it reasonable to presume that it could be accomplished?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the treaty of Versailles is not ultimately ratified, a separate treaty with Germany must be made. There is nothing else to do. I agree with my friend entirely about that matter. If you can not ratify the treaty of Versailles, then we must ultimately make a treaty with Germany. But this joint resolution does not accomplish that. This is a declaration on our part which is as sounding cymbals.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the fact that in the President's letter he referred to the danger that if this treaty were rejected he would be reduced to the unthinkable task, as he expressed it, of being compelled to attempt to negotiate a treaty with Germany. He described it as an unthinkable thing to do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I remember very well the President said that in his letter, as I recall, last December, when he wished the Democratic Senators not to agree to the ratification of the treaty. Is that the occasion, or was it on the occasion of the Jackson Day dinner?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was the Jackson Day dinner to which I was referring.

Mr. SHIELDS. That was equally intended to affect the Democratic Members of the Senate. But I want to know how the Senator makes that consist with the declaration of the President to the powers, Great Britain, France, and Italy, that if they did not agree with his ideas about settling the little shoe string of territory on the Adriatic coast he would withdraw this treaty, and therefore he would negotiate a separate treaty, for, in the language of the President, it is unthinkable that he intended this country forever to continue at war with Germany. If he withdrew the Versailles treaty, he certainly intended to negotiate a separate one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator can only make an inference in that matter. The President did not state that he would make a separate treaty with Germany. He has always deplored, as in the letter referred to deplored, the danger that if this treaty was rejected he would be reduced to the unthinkable task of attempting to enter into a separate treaty with Germany.

Mr. SHIELDS. And he impliedly proposed to do that unthinkable task.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator draws his inference, but the President did not state it, and I deny the inference. There are other methods of accomplishing the same thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the point I am seeking to make is that the renewal of diplomatic and commercial relations can not be accomplished by the pending joint resolution, that in the end it must be by a treaty of peace. We must in some of its details, in whole or in part, ratify the treaty of Versailles, or ultimately we must be driven to making a separate treaty of peace with Germany; but it can not be accomplished in this way.

I was interested in an amendment which was proposed yesterday or the day before, and accepted by the Senate, offered by the leader of the majority party in the Senate, which seemed to reflect the views of his party on this question of making peace.

When the joint resolution was originally introduced and reported, after reciting the necessity for commercial relations, and so on, it contained this clause:

> To these ends, and for the purpose of establishing fully friendly relations and commercial intercourse between the United States and Germany, the President is hereby requested immediately to open negotiations with the Government of Germany.

In other words, to establish peace through a treaty. That is all it meant, and the joint resolution itself as introduced and indorsed by its distinguished author, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], recognized that we could not reestablish diplomatic and commercial relations merely by a declaration of Congress, but that it must be followed up by something else.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I think the Senator from Alabama has not read the joint resolution quite as closely as he should; otherwise, he would not have put the construction he has upon it. There is a large difference between reestablishing commercial relations through diplomatic and consular intercourse and the establishment of peace. Of course, if your diplomatic and consular relations have been broken and suspended, you can not resume them except by an arrangement, and that arrangement, not necessarily always, but very frequently, follows the establishment of peace.

I was perfectly willing to have the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] agreed to. He asked my consent to have the amendment made, and I assented to it upon this ground, that if the joint resolution repealing the war resolution, supplemented by the fact that hostilities have ceased for a year and a half, that we are already dealing with Germany and Germany is dealing with us, as the Senator has just now said, terminates the state of war, it is the obvious duty of the President to renegotiate a treaty of amity and commerce with Germany. The only purpose of putting it in the joint resolution originally was to accentuate that fact, and I did not care to rub it on the President, if anybody thought it was wise to let it go out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Senator evidently felt that it was proper to point out that a treaty must be made.

Mr. KNOX. Absolutely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator concedes that it must be made, and, therefore, if it must be made in order to establish entirely peaceful relations between the countries, and that diplomatic relations be renewed and commercial relations encouraged, then what I say about the joint resolution is true—that the passage of the joint resolution does not accomplish the desired result.

Mr. KNOX. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me for just a moment longer, that is not a treaty of peace which is contemplated there; it is a treaty of amity and commerce. You may be at peace with a nation without having any treaty whatever defining your commercial relations or determining the friendly position upon which the two countries will stand in respect to each other. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to an illustration of that with which he is entirely familiar. Back in 1911 the House of Representatives passed a joint resolution to abrogate the treaty with Russia. It was about to pass the Senate when the Department of State took advantage of the terms of the treaty, and the treaty was abrogated according to its own terms; and from 1911 down to the present moment of time we have had no treaty whatever with Russia relating to consular and diplomatic intercourse; and we have always been at peace.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely; but we never established a condition of war, and therefore the former conditions of peace moved on, with some interruption of our consular and trade relations, but only to a slight extent.

The Senator, I hope, will not understand me to say that it is necessary for us to write an entire treaty of peace with Germany to wipe out the conditions of the war. I have already said that on the termination of the war hostilities must cease. As a rule that is one of the conditions in a treaty of peace; but I think that condition has been established by the armistice. There is no point of difference between the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself on that subject. We both agree that hostilities have ceased. That is one of the points in reaching a peace conclusion that has been accomplished.

The other point I referred to was the repeal of war legislation. That is not involved in this controversy at all. That is a responsibility which rests on the majority party which controls the Congress of the United States, and in their good time I hope they will see that the war statutes are repealed.

Then, as to the other question, with the ceasing of hostilities, when neither party to the contract is claiming the soil of the other belligerent, as the fact exists between this Republic and the Government of Germany, there is nothing left of accomplishment in a treaty of peace except the clauses which relate to reparation, and that is being handled by the supreme council appointed by ourselves and the Allies when we signed the armistice.

So there is no question involved except a renewal of our diplomatic and consular relations and our commercial relations, and the Senator from Pennsylvania has just conceded that that has to be accomplished by a treaty; that this clause was inserted in the joint resolution in the beginning in recognition of that fact and withdrawn by the majority party because they did not wish to push that question on the President at this time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator from Alabama intend to state that if the joint resolution should be passed a treaty is necessary in order to restore diplomatic and consular relations with Germany?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I certainly do; most emphatically.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is it not a fact that if the joint resolution is passed the President, so far as this country is concerned, may appoint consular agents and diplomatic representatives, and, if received by Germany, those relations are restored?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly, if received by Germany.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does it require——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If received by Germany! Of course, if Germany agrees to accept them. In part you have entered into a contract and understanding, which, in other words, would be a treaty only in part. There are other things to be accomplished.

Mr. KELLOGG. If Germany simply receives our representatives?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator admits himself out of court when he uses the words "if received by Germany"; because when Germany agrees to the contract it will be binding, and it never will be binding until Germany agrees to the contract. Yet here we are trying to establish a declaration of peace on our own part, throwing it out into the endless limitations of time, with no understanding that it will now or ever be accepted by the German Government, declaring on our own part that the contracts made by German nationals shall have the status of peace conditions, and leaving contracts made by our own nationals subject to rejection because Germany herself has not agreed to a treaty of peace.

It seems to me that that would be a most enlightening position for a great Government to take, to stand for a provision that we recognize peace, and that if one of our nationals makes a contract with a German citizen, because we have recognized peace he is bound, and leaving it open to the German national who makes the contract to fall back and say, "This was a war contract, and not binding," and to reject his contract. That is what it means. Not only that, but one might go on in endless detail pointing out the objections to a one-sided declaration of peace.

There is but one way to make a contract of peace, and that is by treaty, and that is what we have ahead of us. The statement that because Congress can declare war it can repeal its declaration of war and accomplish peace, it seems to me, in the face of the Constitution of the United States, is an idle declaration.

This Government of ours is a government of delegated and limited powers. There can be no question, with the precedents of 100 years behind us, that the power to declare war vested in the two Houses of Congress does not carry with it the question of making peace any more than it carries with it the control of the armies of the United States on the battle field, when the Constitution recognizes the President of the United States as Commander in Chief.

The language of Article III, section 2, of the Constitution says: "He"—the President—"shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties of peace, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur."

This question has been referred to many times in this debate, and I shall not delay the Senate with an extended discussion of the problem, but I hold in my hand a very interesting pamphlet prepared by our distinguished ambassador at the Court of St. James on the "Treaty-making power of the United States." He quotes Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, of South Carolina, a member of the Constitutional Convention, as saying:

> At last it was agreed to give the President the power of proposing treaties, as he was the ostensible head of the Union, and to vest the Senate, where each State has an equal voice, with the power of agreeing or disagreeing with the terms proposed.

That comes from the mouth of one of the men who wrote the Constitution. I want to quote a statement that I think will be recognized on this side of the Chamber as authority. Thomas Jefferson, in his Manual of Parliamentary Practice, which has been adopted by the Senate as a part of its rules of order, said:

> By the Constitution of the United States this department of legislation is confined to two branches only of the ordinary legislature, the President originating and the Senate having a negative—

Referring to the treaty-making power. I think that clause in the Constitution can not be questioned. I think there is but one question left in the conclusion of peace, and that is the renewal of our diplomatic and consular relations, provided we desire to scrap all the clauses that were put in the treaty of Versailles for the protection of American citizens who lost their property in the Great War and for those advantages that were received by our Government for being a conquering nation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire the Senator to correct me if I am wrong, but I understood him a few moments ago to read the provision of the Constitution regarding treaties, and I understood him to read it that "he shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties of peace." Of course, there is no such term as that in the Constitution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was quoting from the American ambassador to Great Britain.

Mr. LODGE. Does he quote the Constitution in that way?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He quotes the Constitution as follows:

> The language of the Constitution, Article III, section 2, is that "he"—the President—"shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur."

Mr. LODGE. That is the way it reads. I understood the Senator to read it "treaties of peace."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no; I think I read it as it is here. Of course, treaties of peace are treaties. The treaty-making power is broad and extensive in its area. It goes far beyond making treaties of peace, but treaties of peace are within the power, and it is the only way to accomplish this result.

In conclusion let me say that there is no man on the floor of the Senate, now that the war is over and actual hostilities have ceased, who is more anxious than I am to wipe out war legislation, to bring our Government and our people back to peace conditions, to renew our commercial relations with all the world, our enemies included; but when we come to that accomplishment I want it done in a way that will be productive of final results. I do not believe that the majority party in control of this Congress would be willing to stand on this resolution as a final conclusion of this matter, if they thought that this way of closing the war was all that was to be done.

As a matter of fact, we know now what it means. We know what the result will be. We know that the majority party commands a sufficient number of votes to pass the resolution this afternoon. We know equally well that to be effective it must be approved by the President, and that the President of the United States would not approve this joint resolution, so that in the course of a few days it must be returned here. So far as I am concerned, it is merely a political play. Our friends on the other side of the Chamber recognize that this session is drawing to a close, that before the Congress meets in session again we will go to the country for the election of a President of the United States and a Congress of the United States. They realize the fact that they have been in control of the legislative branch of the Government for more than a year, that they have passed through that year without the repeal of war legislation when it was in their power to accomplish that result. They recognize that they had the treaty of Versailles before them, at least the Senate had, for acceptance or rejection.

They recognize the fact that after months and months of consideration and debate they did not propose by affirmative action or accept one single amendment to the treaty, and that their entire proposals were in the nature of so-called reservations defining what they understood the President meant when he signed the treaty. Then, when their understanding could not secure sufficient votes to pass the resolution of ratification, they rejected the treaty entirely and returned it to the President without affirmative action.

I am not at all surprised that our friends on the other side of the Chamber should feel a hesitancy in closing the legislative book for this session without attempting in some way to demonstrate to the American people that they were really desirous of the repeal of the war legislation and the renewal of our commercial relations with the great powers of the world; and, as they foreclosed the door on themselves to further consideration of a peace treaty, they now at the eleventh hour—at 11.55—bring a proposal that they expect the country to accept as their position in this matter, a proposal that they know can not become a law, and which, if it should become a law, according to their own confession must yet be sustained by the making of a treaty. However, as that is all they can do after their unfortunate effort at restoring peace in the country, I do not blame them, at the eleventh hour, for making a proposal on which they hope to go to the country, but I must say that our friends on the other side of the Chamber must believe the American people are blind—very, very blind—if they think that the smoke clouds of this resolution are going to fool the American people as to who is really responsible for the present existing state of affairs and the failure of this country to be at actual peace with the nations of the world.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, it is with some reluctance that I have decided to vote against the pending joint resolution. I realize that we are in an anomalous position; that we are neither at war nor at peace—a most unsatisfactory condition. I realize that the unsettled affairs of the world need the stabilizing effect of peace. However, I believe we should have a treaty of peace with Germany; I believe we should have a treaty containing some terms, and, among others, terms to impose some punishment upon Germany for her great wrongs. I do not believe we will get a treaty of peace with Germany until after the 4th of March, 1921; but I believe we would better wait until after that time and have a treaty of peace containing some terms than to have merely a resolution of peace without setting forth any terms or making any provision for just punishment of the guilty.

It is now 18 months since the unfortunate, mistaken, ill-fated armistice was entered into, and I think we would better wait 10 months longer in the hope of having a treaty of peace with some terms to it and some justice in it than to have merely a peace by resolution which has no terms or provisions for justice in it. I believe justice requires that we should have a treaty of peace with Germany, and that among the terms of the treaty should be some terms for the punishment of the late Kaiser of Germany. I believe it would be a burning shame and scandalous outrage for that arch criminal of all time to go unpunished of his monstrous crimes. On that subject I have here a short editorial which appeared recently in the Sioux City (Iowa) Tribune, which expresses my views. I will read it. It is as follows:

TREATY "CRUEL" TO GERMANY?

["One German mother said it was hardest at night after the children were in bed and one heard them crying and whimpering from hunger until they fell asleep, and even after." From Jane Addams's report of investigation in Germany in the summer of 1919.]

This is the work of Wilhelm Hohenzollern even unto the people of his own blood. And yet there are those who say he should be left alone to skulk behind the protecting folds of a queen's skirt, and putter over his sawbuck.

Is the Lusitania forgotten, and the floating bodies of women and children? Is there no justice for the girls of Belgium, deported into slavery and prostitution? Is there none for the French girls who choked their illegitimate infants with their own fingers? What of the dumb appeal of civilians shot down in cold blood? What of the thefts and pillages, the broken homes? What of the bones of the Armenians bleaching on desert sands? What of the scourge of typhus, and starvation, tuberculosis, and influenza inflicted upon the world? What of the widows and mothers and fathers of the men who fell on battle fields, sons and husbands of all nationalities—for wifehood, motherhood, and fatherhood know no nationality. What of the German babies sobbing in their sleep because of hunger?

Are all these to pay and the author of this human misery to escape? Nor will this generation alone pay for the madness of this vain lump of clay that called itself Kaiser. Thousands of girl babies the world over, now deformed by rickets, will pay years hence at childbirth. Thousands of boy babies will cough out their lives.

"The children who die," says Dr. Hilda Clark, who investigated child life in war-worn countries, in Germany and Austria in particular, "are, perhaps, the most fortunate, as those who survive will be stunted in mind and crippled in body."

"Looking upon myself as the instrument of the Lord, without regard to the opinions or intentions of the day, I go my way," said this Kaiser blasphemer in 1910. And his way led millions into the shambles of war.

Men were slaughtered like sheep, but not the Kaiser nor any of his family.

Women and children, starved to death, gasped their last in the death throes of war disease, but not one pang of hunger, not one pain shot through this Kaiser's body.

Posing as a patron of art, and peace, and theology, and science, and music, this Judas spun his web and betrayed humanity. And while men died in the agony of battle, while women wept out their sorrow, this Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde dined on quail, and picked violets. So Nero quaffed wine from his goblet of gold and cast flowers down into the Roman arena as the jaws of his lions closed down upon the tender flesh of naked, screaming Christians.

"Leave the Hohenzollern to the torture of his own conscience?" He has no conscience.

Who says, "The King can do no wrong?" Enough of this quibbling about "precedents," and "traditions." Let the criminal be brought before the bar!

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and while I listened I thought, perhaps, he overlooked the chief significance of the pending resolution. I do not regard a pronouncement of formal peace as tremendously essential to the welfare of the United States or to the promotion of our trade relationships with the other nations of the world. I do not think a formal declaration of peace is essential to continued freedom from hostilities; I do not think it possible that Germany is likely to resume armed warfare against this Republic in two generations to come; nor does it seem to me necessary to have this formal declaration, particularly in this form, in order to resume our commercial relations with Germany, for they are already more or less resumed, and, in the very nature of things, trade relations with Germany will be developed according to the needs of that people and our own inclination to trade.

There has been but one way of recovery from war and war waste since the world began, and that is to work, to produce, and exchange; but we need not worry on this side of the Atlantic, for the war-torn nations of the Old World are just as certain to seek our favors in trade as that to-morrow shall come. So the peace resolution is not seriously involved in a continuation of peaceful relationships.

I think the significance of the passage of this resolution lies in its reestablishment of the constitutional powers of the American Congress. It not only reestablishes the powers of Congress, but it particularly emphasizes the powers of the Senate as a coordinate body in the making of treaties. I like to think that the so-called Knox resolution is going to do for America what the World War did for the autocrat of Germany. The World War demonstrated that no one man and no one power can rule the world, and the Knox resolution is going to be a formal demonstration that no one man can run the United States of America. I hope that it will not be considered out of place to say——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARDING. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Can 12 men on this side of the Chamber run the United States of America?

Mr. HARDING. I think they can do so better than one man. I do not think any one man is big enough to run the United States Government, much less to attempt to run the world; and I believe it is going to be a fortunate hour in American history when this Congress has demonstrated once more that this Republic is not subject to the dictation of one man.

I know of nothing in this Republic so valuable in the promise of influence for a popular representative government as the proof of the capacity of Congress to function. Mr. President, we surrendered that capacity very largely during the war. I voted for that surrender. We were willing to give unlimited authority to the Chief Executive in time of anxiety and stress; but while we gave during the war, we are going to be just as insistent in refusing to give in time of peace. I think America's greatest contribution to the world lies in the fact that it has furnished the best example of representative popular government the world has ever seen, and I rather rejoice in the manifestation we made of the willingness of Congress to submerge itself in the hour of extreme anxiety. I am only sorry that the Chief Executive of this Republic, because of Congress's willingness to surrender at that time, has gone on to assume continued powers for peace.

It is a very easy thing, Senators, to become intoxicated with power; aye, and it is a very easy thing to be carried away with a consuming ambition. I can sympathize, to a reasonable degree, with the ambition of the President to write for himself the most eminent page in the history of the world. It would have been a very remarkable thing to have committed 30 nations of present-day civilization to a supergovernment of the world, and I can see how the historian was led far afield by a very natural ambition.

But the President was warned when he went abroad. I found no fault with his going. He was not only warned before he went by a referendum to the American people on his own appeal in the elections of 1918, but he was specifically and formally warned by Members of this body after he went abroad, when notice was given that the Senate of the United States of America had no thought to surrender American independence of action. But in spite of these things—warnings from the people on the one hand and warnings from the Senate on the other—the President insisted: "My will or none."

Senators on the other side of the Chamber know just as well as I do that the League of Nations would have been disposed of months ago, and this Republic would have been enjoying formal peace, if it had not been for the insistent obstinacy of the Chief Executive of this Republic. And so, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact, more for the RECORD than anything else, that in the passage of this joint resolution we are demonstrating to the people of the United States of America and giving notice to the world that the Chief Executive alone does not run the Republic of the United States of America; that this is still a representative, popular government under the Constitution; that the Senate has equal and coordinate power with the President in the making of treaties, and that neither to-day nor to-morrow shall there ever be a Chief Executive of this Republic who, in the lure of ambition or the intoxication of power, can barter away anything essential to the welfare of this Republic.

This joint resolution will establish that fact, and that a Congress willing to submerge in war is once more functioning in peace. It will be the most wholesome message that can be sent to the world, and it will be the most reassuring message that can be given to the people of the United States of America.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARDING. I yield. I am quite through. I will yield the floor.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I merely desire to ask the Senator if he feels that the passage of this joint resolution is all that will be necessary to restore relations with Germany in the way that this country hopes it may be done?

Mr. HARDING. So far as legislation is concerned, I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator feels, then, that the passage of this joint resolution is all that needs to be done by the United States of America with reference to its relations with Germany?

Mr. HARDING. So far as the United States Congress is concerned, yes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I suppose, then, the Senator feels that at some time it will be necessary to have a treaty of peace with Germany, will it not?

Mr. HARDING. I think it could be accomplished by the resumption of diplomatic relations, and that could be done——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Without any formal treaty of peace?

Mr. HARDING. I think so.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does not the Senator realize that thus far the Senate of the United States has failed to function by giving its support to any treaty of peace by a two-thirds majority of the Senate, the constitutional number?

Mr. HARDING. Yes; I quite agree; and let me call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to this point:

Throughout the period of the war this Republic was not in any way allied with those with whom we fought. We are known only as an associated power; and because of the obstinacy of the Chief Executive, whose dictum we refused to accept, we have stood aside and witnessed the Old World restore itself to peace, and we are left on the outside. Now, I agree in one respect with the Senator from New Mexico—I was one who believed in some new international relationship. I am sorry that we could not go into it on our own terms, as we ought, when the league covenant first came back. But we frittered away our day of opportunity to dictate the terms on which we might enter. It ought to have been done in the beginning.

Now we witness the world at peace, and here is the United States of America at formal war with Germany, and there is no necessity for it. There is no sense in it. It ought not to be for a single moment. We are literally at peace. Why not say so? And if the President of the United States in his obstinacy refuses to say so, then let the Congress assert itself and say that war no longer abides.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, does the Senator feel that the duty was incumbent upon the Senate to frame something to which two-thirds of the Senate could agree and bring about peace in the ordinary and the orderly way?

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from New Mexico would not press me for an answer to that question. I think it ought to be said—and perhaps I can say it with the courtesy that becomes a Senator—that I have talked to individual Members upon the other side of the Chamber who spoke in infinitely more emphatic terms than I have ever assumed to speak in opposition to the presidential dictation over what should be done with the treaty; and I should like to say for the Members on the other side of the Chamber that if they had been left to follow their own inclinations and convictions the League of Nations covenant would have been adjusted and protected with reservations and disposed of six months ago. Nobody knows that better than the Senator from New Mexico, and there is not a single thing but presidential dictation that has interfered. I want the thing put aside, and let America get down to business, and let us put our own house in order once more. It would be well for us to put America in order before we assume to run the remainder of the world.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] has advanced an entirely new and highly interesting reason as to why this joint resolution should be passed. It does not seem to be for any practical purpose of promoting trade. It does not seem to be for any altruistic purpose of establishing peace. It seems, according to his reasoning, to be for the personal purpose of showing the President of the United States that he is not running this country, and for the purpose of indicating to him that certain Senators are running the country.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska must not misrepresent me. I did not say any such thing at all. I have stood here to advocate coordinate government under the Constitution; not government by the Senate, but government through the Executive and the Senate, on these matters, in cooperation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is hardly justified, I think, under the course he has followed, in making that statement. The President of the United States had the constitutional power, and the sole constitutional power, to negotiate a treaty. He negotiated it, and he brought it to the Senate and delivered it to the Senate in an address on the 10th day of July of last year. That treaty was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which the Senator is a member. It was kept locked up in that antagonistic committee for two months—two months of aggravating and disastrous delay, disastrous not only to the United States, but disastrous to the world also.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. HARDING. What does the Senator construe the Constitution to mean where it says "with the advice of the Senate"?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I construe that to mean that as the President is given the sole power to negotiate treaties, the advice and the consent which the Senate may give can not interfere with his right to negotiate. In the exercise of that sole power—a power which all the writers recognize as sole—the President negotiated a treaty, and if I had the time I could show that in negotiating that treaty he was carrying out what he believed to be the desire of the people of the United States, as he had expressed it with the approval of the country in his speech of January 8, 1918, to the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. HARDING. What does the Senator mean by "with the approval of the country"?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean that when the President delivered that address at a joint session of the House and the Senate on the 8th of January, 1918, in the midst of war, and at a time when the prospects of success were gloomy, when we realized the probability that we would not only have to fight all through 1918 but probably through 1919, he called the two Houses in joint session in order to specify and designate not only to the Senate and the House of Representatives, but through them to the people of the United States as well, and to the world at large, the objects for which we were engaged in fighting. He delivered that message, and one of the purposes which he specified as the object for which the United States had entered the war and was carrying on the war was at its conclusion to establish an association of nations or a league of nations to make future wars impossible.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In a moment. Now, Mr. President, that was a statement made officially by the Executive of the United States, who alone had power to negotiate treaties. It was a notice to the Senate and to the House of Representatives and to the people of the United States that when he came to negotiate the treaty that would be one of the things incorporated in the treaty. That was a message to the Senate and House of Representatives. If there had been any substantial opposition to that object of the war, it would have been perfectly proper to refer the message to the proper committees of the House and Senate, and it would have been perfectly proper for the committees to report upon the message, and perfectly proper for the House of Representatives and the Senate to discuss the message. Then, if at all, was the time for opposition to raise its head and say whether or not that was one of the objects of the war.

Mr. HARDING. Does the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will pardon me a moment. But not a voice was raised either in the Senate or House of Representatives, and for eight months the declaration of the President, that that was one of the purposes of the war to be incorporated in the peace settlement, went unchallenged in the Congress of the United States.

I need not say it was received with acclaim by the people of the United States; I need not call attention to the fact that Republican statesmen as well as Democratic statesmen indorsed the statement; I need not say that Republican newspapers throughout the country as well as Democratic newspapers approved the plan; but I go further, and I say that when the war was once brought to a successful conclusion, in November, 1918, and the German Government appealed to the United States for a statement of terms of peace to be incorporated in the peace settlement, the President of the United States took their request and laid it before the nations associated in the war with us, and was duly authorized by them to make this reply to the German Government.

Mr. HARDING. Now, may I ask the Senator——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to get the reply in first. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries are violating the rule. It has been so long since they violated it that they have forgotten it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is the reply:

[From the Secretary of State to the minister of Switzerland, in charge of German interests in the United States.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
November 5, 1918.

SIR: I have the honor to request you to transmit the following communication to the German Government:

In my note of October 23, 1918, I advised you that the President had transmitted his correspondence with the German authorities to the Governments with which the Government of the United States is associated as a belligerent, with the suggestion that, if those Governments were disposed to effect peace upon the terms and principles indicated, their military advisers and the military advisers of the United States be asked to submit to the Governments associated against Germany the necessary terms of such armistice as would fully protect the interests of the peoples involved and insure to the associated Governments the unrestricted power to safeguard and enforce the details of the peace to which the German Government has agreed, provided they deemed such an armistice possible from the military point of view.

The President is now in receipt of a memorandum of observations by the Allied Governments on this correspondence, which is as follows:

"The Allied Governments have given careful consideration to the correspondence which has passed between the President of the United States and the German Government. Subject to the qualifications which follow, they declare their willingness to make peace with the Government of Germany on the terms of peace laid down in THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS TO CONGRESS OF JANUARY, 1918, AND THE PRINCIPLES OF SETTLEMENT ENUNCIATED IN HIS SUBSEQUENT ADDRESSES."

Mr. President, that carries us a step further. Not only had the President of the United States, charged solely with the duty of negotiating peace, called the Congress together and notified both the House and the Senate that he proposed the establishment of a League of Nations as one of the purposes of the war, not only had it been received here with applause and without criticism for eight months, but finally, when Germany asked the President of the United States for terms of peace, and he negotiated with the other nations associated with us in the war, they and the President agreed that that speech should be made the basis of settlement. They and the President agreed with Germany that the points set forth in that speech should be made the foundation stones for the peace settlement.

Mr. HARDING. Is the Senator discussing the 14 points?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was accepted by Germany, and yet the Senator from Ohio and other Senators who have delayed and defeated this treaty questioned the right of the President to incorporate in the peace settlement the creation of the League of Nations, with all that splendid certificate of justice and authority and regularity behind it.

Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. Did the Senator expect Members of the United States Congress to take issue with the President over his various and varying rhetorical offerings throughout the war, to divide sentiment in this country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that was the time to do it if the world was to be warned that it was not one of the purposes of the United States. We allowed that to be held out to the world. You allowed it, and every Senator who now opposes the League of Nations permitted the President officially, in the great presence of the House and the Senate, to notify the world that that was one of the objects of the peace settlement which should be incorporated in the treaty of peace.

Mr. HARDING. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that any warning from the Senate would have interfered with the Chief Executive?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it would at least have had the effect of notifying the President that the Senate might not consent to that. It would at least have prevented the other nations of the world from being led to believe that the people of the United States wanted to have the League of Nations incorporated in the peace settlement.

Mr. HARDING. Will not the Senator agree that the notice from the Senate gave him some warning? Will not the Senator agree that the elections of 1918 gave him some warning?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is what I am telling the Senator from Ohio. There was silence, silence, silence in the Senate for eight months.

Mr. HARDING. Yes; a very solemn silence.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. During all that time the world had a right to believe that that pledge was going to be carried into effect. Let me read it to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In a moment. It reads:

A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

You permitted that to go out to the world. You permitted the world to believe that the Senate and the House of Representatives indorsed the President's declaration that a part of the peace settlement should be a guaranty of the political independence and territorial integrity of the nations of the world. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I only want to avail myself of the courtesy of the Senator from Nebraska to acquit myself of the charge which he just now made, that all the Senators upon this side who opposed the treaty allowed the President of the United States to go abroad upon the representation to the powers of the earth that we were to embody the League of Nations in the treaty. For one Senator, I offered upon this floor a resolution, and made a speech in favor of the resolution, before the President departed for Europe, endeavoring to show how disastrous it would be to undertake to link the League of Nations with the treaty of peace, and I pointed out that it had no proper place there. Before I sit down I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska why the President abandoned the other 13 propositions which were contained in his statement?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The President did not abandon the other 13 propositions. The President went there representing one of the powers and he made the best settlement he could with the other countries. But here is an agreement which they all made, and what the Senator says exactly bears out my statement, that it was more than eight months after the President made that declaration before a single Senator raised his voice against the pledge and the promise made in the message to the House and the Senate in January, 1918.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We have to stop the debate at 4 o'clock, and I have an amendment which I would like to offer. The unanimous-consent agreement provides that at 4 o'clock a vote must be taken upon all pending amendments. I am not sure that I will have an opportunity to offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The agreement provides that the vote shall be taken upon any amendments that may be offered. The Chair will rule that amendments may be offered, but not debated, after 4 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very good.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there have been statements made here which have questioned my declaration and the declaration which all of us have made—that the defeat of the treaty was due to opposition on the other side of the aisle. I can not in the brief time which remains recite all the efforts which we made to reach a settlement; but the fact is that everybody knew that the Lodge reservations would defeat the treaty. Everybody knew that if the Lodge reservations were adopted by the Senate and sent to the President he would not accept the treaty. Everybody knew that the Democrats in the Senate would not accept the Lodge reservations; and they did not. When I said that the Senate had failed to function in the matter of this treaty, I said what was true. The Senate did not send the treaty to the President with the Lodge reservations. The Senate refused to consent to the ratification of the treaty after the Lodge reservations had been attached.

The Lodge reservations were attached to the treaty for the obvious purpose of defeating its ratification. When they were attached, the Senators who attached them knew that they might as well vote for the destruction of the treaty. They knew that the vote for the Lodge reservations killed the treaty, and yet they voted that way. And when on several occasions I made every effort to secure a little delay in sending the treaty back to the President—made every effort to keep it here—because I said that as long as it was here there was a possibility of compromise, Senators on the other side voted against allowing even one day's delay, and they gloated over the fact that the treaty had been defeated by affixing the Lodge reservations to it.

Mr. President, I do not want anybody to assert that this side is responsible for the defeat of the treaty. For two long months you kept the treaty locked up in the adverse Committee on Foreign Relations. After it came out of the Committee on Foreign Relations, you prolonged debate to the uttermost moment of time that you could delay debate, and finally, when patience ceased to be a virtue and we introduced a resolution of cloture to put a stop to debate, and it was defeated, and you were compelled to present a resolution of cloture to close debate, one-third of the Senators on the other side of the aisle voted against the resolution of cloture and voted to prolong debate after it had been going on for nearly a year.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, there is no sort of doubt as to who defeated the treaty; there is no sort of doubt as to who delayed the treaty; there is no sort of doubt as to who prolonged the war. To introduce at this time a joint resolution declaring that the war is at an end is an impotent, futile, useless thing to do, and it is done for no other reason under the sun except for political purposes, with a design of deceiving the people of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the unanimous-consent agreement is in effect. The pending question is the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am aware that debate is not in order, but I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and which is in the hands of the Secretary. It is designed to cover a claim by a large manufacturing plant owned in this country and located in Austria which was destroyed during the war. The language of the joint resolution as it stands would not, in my opinion, cover the compensation. I ask the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the author of the joint resolution, to the proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, line 5, after the word "corporations," insert the following words:

Or have suffered damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war.

Mr. KNOX. As the Senator from Connecticut addressed me, I can only reply that I see no objection to the amendment——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments to the amendment? If there are no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. We have arranged a transfer of our pairs so that it will permit the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to vote and that I may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (when Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN'S name was called). I desire to announce in behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], that he is unavoidably absent, and if present would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota was called). The pair of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] has already been announced. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. He is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. If the senior Senator from Wisconsin were present, he would vote "yea," and I understand the junior Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

M. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is necessarily absent from the Senate, and I have agreed to pair with him on all questions arising under the joint resolution. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). Referring to the statement made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is unfortunately absent on account of illness, to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. That Senator is absent, and I am therefore not at liberty to vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. The Senator from Mississippi has transferred his pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and voted. I therefore transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ROBINSON. My colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], is necessarily absent. As announced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], my colleague is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. If present and at liberty to vote, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. STANLEY. My colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 38, as follows:

So the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

That the joint resolution of Congress passed April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States, and making provisions to prosecute the same, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and said state of war is hereby declared at an end: Provided, however, That all property of the Imperial German Government, or its successor or successors, and of all German nationals which was, on April 6, 1917, in or has since that date come into the possession or under control of the Government of the United States or of any of its officers, agents, or employees, from any source or by any agency whatsoever, shall be retained by the United States and no disposition thereof made, except as shall specifically be hereafter provided by Congress, until such time as the German Government has, by treaty with the United States, ratification whereof is to be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, made suitable provisions for the satisfaction of all claims against the German Government of all persons, wheresoever domiciled, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States, whether such persons have suffered, through the acts of the German Government or its agents since July 31, 1914, loss, damage, or injury to their persons or property, directly or indirectly, through the ownership of shares of stock in German, American, or other corporations, or have suffered damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war, or otherwise and until the German Government has given further undertakings and made provisions by treaty, to be ratified by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for granting to persons owing permanent allegiance to the United States, most favored nation treatment, whether the same be national or otherwise, in all matters affecting residence, business, profession, trade, navigation, commerce, and industrial property rights, and confirming to the United States all fines, forfeitures, penalties, and seizures imposed or made by the United States during the war, whether in respect to the property of the German Government or German nationals, and waiving any pecuniary claim based on events which occurred at any time before the coming into force of such treaty, any existing treaty between the United States and Germany to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That in the interpretation of any provision relating to the date of the termination of the present war or of the present or existing emergency in any acts of Congress, joint resolutions, or proclamations of the President containing provisions contingent upon the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, notwithstanding any provision in any act of Congress or joint resolution providing any other mode of determining the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency.

SEC. 3. That until by treaty or act or joint resolution of Congress it shall be determined otherwise, the United States, although it has not ratified the treaty of Versailles, does not waive any of the rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages to which it and its nationals have become entitled under the terms of the armistice signed November 11, 1918, or any extensions or modifications thereof or which under the treaty of Versailles have been stipulated for its benefit as one of the principal allied and associated powers and to which it is entitled.

SEC. 4. That the joint resolution of Congress approved December 7, 1917, declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provisions to prosecute the same, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and said state of war is hereby declared at an end, and the President is hereby requested immediately to open negotiations with the successor or successors of said Government for the purpose of establishing fully friendly relations and commercial intercourse between the United States and the Governments and peoples of Austria and Hungary.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BALL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY (when Mr. BECKHAM's name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (when Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as to the absence and pair of my colleague [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] that I previously made.

Mr. GERRY (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota was called). The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is paired. If present and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. KIRBY's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. If present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], who, I understand, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I announce again the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. If the Senator from Iowa were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). Referring to the statement made a while ago by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote nay.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I repeat the statement made on the preceding roll call and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT. For the same reason as that announced by me on the last previous vote, I am unable to vote on this question. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 38, as follows:

So the joint resolution was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee report to strike out the preamble of the joint resolution. Without objection, the preamble will be rejected.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany, and the joint resolution of December 7, 1917, declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and the Austro-Hungarian Government."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts subsequently said:

Mr. President, I desire to state very briefly my reasons for voting in affirmation of the joint resolution which has just been passed, as I had no opportunity to get the floor before the vote was taken.

I can now only hastily outline the basis and reasons for my views pertaining to this resolution. I am convinced that the Chief Executive of the United States will not accept any changes in the treaty of Versailles which might be recommended or suggested by the Senate. Again, in my way of thinking, the Senate will not accept the treaty of Versailles as submitted by the President.

The only constructive measure suggested tending to remove the chaotic state of neither peace nor war in which this country finds itself at the present time is the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations as an amendment to the House resolution.

If any explanation is necessary on the part of a Democrat voting for this joint resolution, I want to say that in my opinion the treaty of Versailles submitted to the United States Senate is pregnant with international injustices. I regard it a service to my country to do whatever may be possible to prevent ratification in its original form. I feel that since the joint resolution helps to put this question behind the Senate and helps to remove a possible ratification of the treaty in its original form, a vote directed toward that end is in the interest of this Republic and its people.

It is one thing to uphold and support the principles and ideals of the Chief Executive of the United States—and I am willing and ready and prepared to stand by them and with them—but it is another thing to thrust upon a political party and upon a nation the acceptance of international intrigue and the exploitation of the world by foreign powers and the representatives of foreign powers. As a Democrat I protest against my political party being forced to defend in the next election not the international doctrines of the present leader of the party but the international injustices and robberies and exploitations which the powers of Europe have inculcated into the treaty and into the covenant of a League of Nations.

I want it to be clear and unmistakable that in voting as I have upon the treaty and the reservations I have attempted not to depart in one iota from the principles advocated by the Chief Executive of this country during the war and before his participation in European diplomacy in Europe. I protest against the ratification by my country of a treaty which will for the first time associate its name with the Governments of the world which have a long history in the performances of international injustice, secret diplomacy, and selfish, imperialistic aggrandizements.

This brief explanation, Mr. President, outlines the causes which have prompted me to record my vote in favor of the joint resolution.

REPEAL OF WAR LEGISLATION.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] believes that it would be wise to repeal certain war legislation that is now upon the statute books, as I understand from his statement. I introduce the following bills and ask that they may be appropriately referred: One proposes to repeal what is known as the Overman Act, another to repeal certain powers of the Shipping Board, and the other to repeal the trading-with-the-enemy act.

A bill (S. 4390) repealing the act of May 20, 1918;

A bill (S. 4391) to repeal the act of October 6, 1917; and

A bill (S. 4392) to repeal the act of October 6, 1917, relative to trading with the enemy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR POMERENE.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the address delivered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] before the Virginia State Bar Association at its recent session at Richmond on the subject of our recent Federal railroad legislation be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. POMERENE's address is as follows:

OUR RECENT FEDERAL RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

"No domestic problem has been presented to the Congress in the last generation which has been so difficult, so involved, and so fraught with consequences to America as the recent railroad legislation known as the 'transportation act of 1920.'

"Think of it! Two hundred and sixty thousand miles of railroad, valued at from $17,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000—probably one-twelfth of the entire national wealth—serving as they do the activities of 110,000,000 of people.

"They are the nerves and arteries of our national organism. Without them our industrial, commercial, and social life would be paralyzed.

"Looking at it from a financial standpoint in its more comprehensive aspect, we must remember there are 672,930 stockholders owning 97,475,776 shares in the class 1 roads. These stockholders are men, women, children, and institutions of all classes, rich and poor.

"The 20 largest stockholders in each road aggregate 8,301 persons, estates, corporations, and partnerships, with 873,322 shares, or a little more than half; 46,602,454 shares, or a little less than one-half of the total number, are held by 619,629 men, women, children, and other holders, the average holdings being about 75 shares. Some of the railroads are practically close corporations. The majority of the great systems are not.

"While 13 stockholders own and control entirely all of the stock of the Philadelphia & Reading, in the Pennsylvania Railroad system there are 100,038 stockholders, the 20 largest owning only 8.9 per cent of the entire capital. While 326 stockholders own 99.5 per cent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, there are 27,062 stockholders in the New York Central Railroad, the 20 largest owning only 25.1 per cent of the whole. While 17 stockholders own the entire capital stock of the Pennsylvania Co., there are 29,360 stockholders in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., the 20 largest owning only 17.4 per cent of the whole. In the Southern Pacific there are 37,853 stockholders, the 20 largest owning only 23 per cent thereof. In the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe there are 44,561 stockholders, the 20 largest owning only 14.3 per cent of the stock. In the Great Northern there are 26,716 stockholders, the 20 largest owning only 18.5 per cent. In the North Pacific there are 25,780 stockholders, the 20 largest owning only 19.8 per cent. And in the Northern Pacific there are 33,875 stockholders, the 20 largest owning only 17.8 per cent.

"We find that the life insurance companies reporting to the superintendent of insurance of the State of New York for 1918 held railroad bonds valued in the aggregate at $1,681,242,371. The savings banks and life insurance companies together own over $2,000,000,000 of railroad bonds. The railroad companies on December 3, 1916, held $2,135,086,517 worth of bonds.

"In short, it will be found that these bonds are widely held, and any fair-minded man must conclude that any legislation which affects seriously either railroad stocks or bonds is embarrassing, either directly or indirectly, every financial institution in the country.

"It is the best judgment of the National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities that there are between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000 institutional and individual owners of railroad stocks, and probably 7,500,000 institutional and individual holders of American railroad bonds.

"During the development period of the railroads the public was made the victim of stock and bond manipulations by men who were adepts at high finance, and who knew little or nothing about practical railroading. By the changing of traffic rates and regulations they built up communities where they chose and destroyed others when they chose.

"Out of these injustices originated the Interstate Commerce Commission and regulatory bodies in each of the 48 States. Reaction set in. The pendulum swung too far the other way. Some of the new legislation was good, some bad, and some indifferent. Every scheming politician in the country saw his opportunity to promote his political fortunes by proposing, and having enacted, if he could, some legislation the effect of which was to cripple if not to destroy our transportation system, giving little thought to the consequences.

"Railroads, broadly speaking, are interstate or intrastate in character. Theoretically speaking, interstate commerce is controlled wholly by the Congress; and intrastate commerce wholly by the legislatures of the 48 several States. Eighty-five per cent or more of our transportation is interstate. Not to exceed 15 per cent is intrastate. As a practical problem, whether we speak of it financially or economically, all of this commerce is affected directly and indirectly both by Federal and State legislation.

"The commerce of the country thus became the subject of consideration by the Congress of the United States, and the legislatures of the 48 States and their regulatory agencies. The result has been that those who viewed the subject from a national standpoint sought to treat all commerce as interstate, while the States, through their agencies, either directly or indirectly, sought to impose burdens upon interstate commerce, if thereby they thought they could benefit the shippers of their respective States. As a further result State traffic in many instances did not bear its portion of the burden of transportation, and interstate commerce was compelled to shoulder too great a portion of the cost of maintenance and operation. As a still further result, for the past five or ten years the railroads were not able to keep pace with the industrial, agricultural, and commercial development of the country. So great a railroad expert as James J. Hill, several years before his death told the country that the railroads ought to spend for a period of years $1,000,000,000 annually in the further development of the transportation needs of the country. Because of the severe regulatory measures which had been adopted in some of the States, and the disposition of many to further starve the railway systems of the country, it was impossible to finance the roads as they ought to have been financed; and when on April 6, 1917, this great Nation of ours found itself hurled into the maelstrom of a World War, the railroads broke down and the National Government was compelled to assume control.

"The activities of peace were superseded by preparation for war. The brains and brawn of 110,000,000 of men, women, and children were directed to the task of winning the war for our country and humanity.

"For some years students of the railroad problem, particularly in the Congress, were giving their best thought to some constructive legislation for the purpose of improving our transportation methods. After the signing of the armistice the Congress took up the problem with renewed energy.

"By the railroad control act the President was authorized to retain possession of the roads for the period of the war, and for 21 months after the proclamation of the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, but he had the power to return them at any time he saw fit.

"In January, 1919, the Director General of Railroads appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate and advised us that there was a deficit under Federal management, largely due to the increase in the scale of wages which was made to date from January 1, 1918, while the increase in freight rates amounting to 25 per cent on freight and 50 per cent on passenger traffic dated only from July 1, 1918. But he assured the committee that with the increased freight and passenger rates there would be a net profit of more than $100,000,000 over and above the Government guaranty during the current year. Substantially the same statement was made by his successor, Mr. Walker D. Hines.

"The Directors General of Railroads urged an extension of Government control and operation for five years, and this after active hostilities had ceased. Had the Congress acceded to their suggestion, the Government would have been put in the position of having said to the railroad companies: 'It is true you turned over the roads to the Government to help win the war, but now that we have them we are going to keep them.'

"They wanted to continue control of these roads, not because they had any constructive plan of reorganization in mind—they did not have any. They wanted to develop a plan. They wanted five years in which to do it, and they asked the Congress for the necessary authority. It was not their property. It was not the Government's property. It was the property of the hundreds of thousands of stockholders and bondholders. In substance, their position was: 'If in five years we devise a plan which is successful, the Government will keep the roads, but if we fail and succeed only in scrapping them we shall turn the roads back to you.'

"Stripped of all its veneer, that was the naked proposition. Whatever may have been their purpose, and I do not question their motives, if the Congress had acceded to their wishes the Government would have been guilty of dishonesty in dealing with the owners of the railroads. It would have taken possession of the roads for one purpose, and having secured them sought to retain them for another. That course could not have been defended by an honest Government, and Uncle Sam always means to be honest.

"Men whose wages were increased by the Government feared that their wages would be lowered if the properties were returned to private ownership and accordingly they favored Government operation or ownership. Other men who have dreamed dreams all their lives and who could not recognize an economic problem if they met it on the street under a midday sun, continued to dream and to hope for Government control and ownership. They had learned something of the problem 25 years ago, when the railroads were under the control of stock manipulators and they have never learned anything about the railroads since.

"Most of them cared little for the effect it would have upon the country. They thought Government ownership would be something new, and by reason thereof they might be able to promote their political fortunes. They forgot that nearly every man in the country either is a shipper or a traveler, knows something about the inefficiency of Government management, and is controlled by his own experience rather than by the theories of dreamers.

"The roads instead of having a net surplus of $100,000,000, as promised by the director general, for the calendar year 1919 had deficits and surpluses as follows:

For January the deficit was	$36,658,972
For February the deficit was	36,387,644
For March the deficit was	56,895,604
For April the deficit was	40,987,467
For May the deficit was	38,267,595
For June the deficit was	31,174,088
For July the surplus was	1,526,320
For August the surplus was	4,715,168
For September the deficit was	14,359,851
For October the deficit was	18,726,436
For November the deficit was	61,729,931
For December the deficit was	60,026,036
The total deficit for 10 months was	395,213,624
The total surplus for 2 months was	6,241,488
The net deficit for the year was	388,972,136

"It has grown since. When the 'Transportation Act of 1920' was in conference, our information then was that the total loss to the Government due to Federal operation would amount to $750,000,000, then admitted, to which should be added claims growing out of depreciation, which still are unliquidated.

"Since that time the net loss to date of the Government has been ascertained to be $905,000,000, to which must be added $200,000,000, the estimated cost of the six months' guaranty ending September 1, 1920, and the estimated payment to the short lines of $25,000,000. Also, we must not forget the claims growing out of depreciation of $375,000,000 referred to a moment ago. The figures just given do not include $1,146,000,000 which the Government loaned to the railroads, and out of which will probably grow additional losses.

"Railway executives testified last week before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate that the roads, in order to be fully equipped, need 226,000 new freight cars, 9,000 passenger cars, and 3,400 locomotives, the total cost of which, as of date, would amount to about $1,600,000,000. During the present year the car and locomotive shops can produce 100,000 freight cars, 3,000 passenger cars, and 2,000 locomotives, the total cost to be about $610,000,000.

"I have given these figures in order to demonstrate the need of additional finances for the roads, and the necessity for such continued Government action as will help to restore and conserve their credit.

"Our prewar experiences, as well as during the war and since, demonstrated the necessity of greater unity of operation and control of roads, rolling stock, and terminals, if we are to secure to the public a maximum of service at reasonable rates. Another thing is even more important: If the railroads are to be extended and improved so as to keep apace with the growth and increased demands of the country, their credit must be conserved. Of one thing I am certain: these things can not be done by Government ownership or operation.

"There must, however, be strict Government control over the construction, maintenance, and operation, but we must not destroy individual initiative. Whatever may have been the faults of private ownership and operation in the past, the fact is that under private ownership we have had the best and cheapest rail transportation in the world, with the best paid and most efficient labor. Let that not be gainsaid. We have sought by the transportation act of 1920 to improve it. I shall call attention to the more important amendments only.

CAR SERVICE.

"For years the public has suffered for lack of car supply in one section while there was a surplus in another. At all times there has been difficulty in returning empties to the owning roads. Certainly the country is entitled to a maximum of service out of every car for the public good. To this end we have broadened the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"Car service is defined to include the use, control, supply, movement, distribution, exchange and interchange, and return of locomotives, cars, and other facilities used in the transportation of property, including types of equipment and supplies of trains by any carrier by railroad. The carriers are required to furnish safe and adequate car service and to establish, observe, and enforce reasonable rules and regulations and practices with regard thereto. Every unjust and unreasonable rule, regulation, and practice is prohibited. Every carrier is especially required to make reasonable distribution of cars for transportation of coal among the coal mines served by it. They are required to file with the commission from time to time their car-service rules and regulations. Whenever the commission is of the opinion that the shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency exists it is authorized in order to improve the public service to suspend the operation of all rules, regulations, or practices then established and to make new directions concerning car service, provided they are just and reasonable, without regard to ownership during such emergency as in its opinion will best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people upon such terms of compensation as between the carriers as they may be agreed upon, or in the event of their disagreement as the commission may after subsequent hearings find to be just and reasonable.

ROUTING OF TRAFFIC.

"In order to aid further in moving traffic the act provides that whenever any carrier is for any reason unable to transport the traffic offered it so as to serve the public properly it may make such just and reasonable directions for the handling, routing, and movement of the traffic and its distribution over other lines or roads as will in the opinion of the commission best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people upon such terms as between the carriers as the commission may find just and reasonable in the event they fail to agree between themselves.

TERMINAL FACILITIES.

"Because of increased traffic in the large cities and industrial centers it has been impossible for some roads to secure necessary terminal facilities, while other roads had greater capacity than their business demanded. The Congress therefore provided that when the commission finds it to be in the public interest and practicable, without substantially impairing the ability of the carrier owning or entitled to the enjoyment of terminal facilities to handle its own business, it shall have power to require the use of any such terminal facilities, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside such terminal, of any other carrier or carriers, upon such terms and upon such compensation as the carriers affected may agree upon, or, upon their failure to agree, as the commission may fix as just and reasonable, to be ascertained on the principle controlling compensation in condemnation proceedings.

POOLING OF FREIGHTS.

"While pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or the division between them of the aggregate or the net proceeds of any such railroad, or any portion thereof, is prohibited as heretofore, the commission is authorized after hearing upon application of the carriers, or upon its own initiative, to authorize a division of traffic or earnings to the extent the commission may indicate when it shall be for the interest of better service to the public or economy in operation, and will not unduly restrain competition, and this division of traffic or earnings shall be made under such rules and regulations and for such consideration as between such carriers and upon such terms and conditions as the commission may find to be just and reasonable.

NEW LINES OF RAILROAD.

"No carrier shall hereafter undertake the extension of its line of railroad, or the construction of a new line of railroad, or to operate the same, unless and until it shall first have obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require, or will require, the construction, or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line of railroad; and no carrier shall abandon any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, without permission first obtained from the commission.

NEW FACILITIES.

"The commission also is authorized, after hearing, to require by order any carrier to provide itself with safe and adequate facilities for performing as a common carrier its car service as defined in this act. But no such authorization or order shall be made unless the commission finds as to such extension that it is reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, or as to such extension and facility that the expense involved therein will not impair the ability of the carrier to perform its duty to the public. This authority, however, with regard to extensions and the furnishing of facilities does not apply to the construction or abandonment of spur, industrial, team, switching, or sidetracks, located, or to be located wholly within one State, or of street, suburban or interurban railways, which are not operated as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation.

CONSOLIDATION OF RAILROADS.

"The Congress believed that greater efficiency, as well as economy, in management could be secured by authorizing voluntary consolidations. Therefore it is provided in the act that upon application of any carrier the commission may authorize and approve the acquisition by one carrier of the control of any other carrier under a lease, or by the purchase of stock, or in any other manner not involving the consolidation of such carriers into a single system for ownership and operation, if the commission is of the opinion that it will be in the public interest under such rules and such regulations and for such consideration and on such terms and conditions as it shall be found to be just and reasonable.

"The commission is required as soon as practicable to prepare and adopt a plan for the consolidation of the railway properties of the continental United States into a limited number of systems. In devising such systems competition must be preserved as fully as possible, and wherever practicable existing routes and channels of trade and commerce shall be maintained. These systems shall be so arranged that the cost of transportation as between competitive systems and as related to the values of the properties through which the service is rendered shall be the same so far as practicable, so that they can employ uniform rates in the movement of competitive traffic and under efficient management earn substantially the same rate of return upon the value of their respective properties.

"When a tentative plan has been agreed upon by the commission, notice shall be given thereof to the governor of each State, and the commission is required to hear all persons who may file or present objections thereto. This plan may be changed by the commission upon its own motion, or its own application, in the interest of the public. All consolidations must be in harmony with such plan.

"Two or more carriers may consolidate their properties, or any part thereof, into one corporation for ownership, management, and operation upon the following terms:

"(a) The consolidation must be in harmony with the plan of consolidation devised by the commission, and must have its approval.

"(b) The bonds of the new corporation which becomes the owner of the consolidated properties, together with the outstanding capital stock at par, shall not exceed the value of the consolidated properties as determined by the commission.

"(c) When two or more carriers propose a consolidation they must present their application therefor to the commission, and the commission shall notify the governor of each State in which any part of the property sought to be consolidated is situated and the carriers proposed in the consolidation of the time and the place for public hearing. If the commission finds that the public interest will be promoted by the consolidation and the conditions therefor have been fulfilled, it may enter an order approving and authorizing the consolidation, with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, and thereupon such consolidations may be effected in accordance with such order if all the carriers involved assent thereto, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

"The carriers thus consolidated are relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws, State and Federal, so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required pursuant to the provisions of this act.

ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES.

"In the early history of railroading many watered securities were issued, and this continued until within comparatively recent years. While there may have been some excuse for it during the early history of the country because many of the trunk lines were extended into undeveloped territory, and the returns upon the investment were uncertain, they could not have been built except under financial plans which were more or less speculative in character. But that time has passed. Before the passage of the present act the issuance of securities was subject to the approval of the public utilities commissions of the several States through which the roads extended. Delays in financing always occurred in the making applications for and having permits issued. This is particularly true when the system extends through two or more States. It was shown before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate that one of the great continental railroad systems was obliged to secure the approval of the authorities of 14 different States before they could complete their loan. It appeared also that the State authority before granting a permit would often insist that a certain portion of the money be expended in their State, which was largely in excess of its transportation needs as compared with those of other States through which the lines extended.

"Again the delays incident to securing these permits often resulted in the defeat of the loan because we know that while large sums of money can be secured at a given rate to-day, perhaps the loan would not be granted until next month, or the month thereafter, either on account of increased demands or higher rates of interest. As heretofore stated, 85 per cent or more of our transportation is interstate, and not to exceed 15 per cent is intrastate.

"With these facts before it the Congress concluded that the issuance of securities should be under the exclusive control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, at the same time giving to the States and all interested parties a full opportunity to be heard.

"Accordingly the act is made to provide that after 120 days after the act takes effect no interstate common carrier by railroad shall issue any capital stock or bond or other evidence of interest or indebtedness of the carrier, or to assume any obligation or liability as lessor, lessee, guarantor, indorser, surety, or otherwise, except upon application by the carrier, and only to the extent that the commission after investigation shall authorize. And the commission can only make such order if it finds that the issue or assumption is (a) for some lawful object within its corporate purposes and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose.

"The power of the commission is plenary. It can grant or deny the application, in whole or in part, upon such terms and conditions as the commission may prescribe, and may from time to time for good causes shown make such supplemental orders as may seem necessary, or modify the provisions of any previous order as to the particular purposes, uses, and extent to which, or the condition under which, such securities may be authorized or the proceeds thereof applied.

"When any application for such authority is filed with the commission it is required to give a copy thereof to the governor of the State in which the applicant carrier operates. The railroad commission, or other appropriate State authority, has the right to be fully heard for the purpose of preserving and conserving the rights and interests of their people and their States. The jurisdiction of the commission is exclusive and plenary, and when the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission is granted the security may be sold and the obligations assumed without securing the approval of any other authority. It is expressly provided that nothing contained in the act shall be construed to imply any guaranty or obligation as to such securities on the part of the United States.

"These provisions, however, do not apply to notes issued by the carrier maturing not more than two years after the date thereof, and aggregating—together with all other then outstanding notes of a maturity of two years or less—not more than 5 per cent of the par value of the securities of the carrier then outstanding.

"Securities issued or obligations assumed which require the authorization of the commission are void if issued or assumed without such authorization, or if issued contrary to the terms or conditions of such organizations. They shall not, however, be void because of failure to comply with provisions relating to procedure and other matters preceding the entry of such order of authorization. If void securities are required by any person for value and in good faith without notice that the issue is void, he may recover the damages sustained from the carrier and its directors, officers, attorneys, or other agents, who participated in issuing or selling the same, and those who knowingly participated therein are made subject to criminal penalties.

MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM RATES.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission, instead of fixing maximum rates as heretofore, is authorized to establish maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum rates.

"If upon complaint, or upon its own initiative after full hearing, the commission shall be of the opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier, or that any classification, regulation, or practice whatsoever of such carrier is or will be unjust, or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminating, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of this act, the commission is authorized to determine what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or rates, fares, or charges to be thereafter observed * * * and what individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice is or will be just, fair, and reasonable, to be thereafter followed.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is given more complete power over State rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices than heretofore. The reason for this increase of power is found in the fact that heretofore a number of State legislatures and commissions have so reduced their rates as to make it impossible for interstate systems to operate. Rates on intrastate business have often been made very much lower than the rates on interstate business. The effect is that the intrastate business has not sustained its proper portion of the cost of operation and maintenance.

"By way of illustration: This is noticeably true in North Dakota. If the rate-making authorities in adjoining States had made their rates for traffic proportionately low, or if the Interstate Commerce Commission had reduced their rates to the same level it would have forced every one of these roads into receiverships. So the Congress has provided that when any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice imposed by the authority of any State is put in issue by petition, the commission notifies the States interested of the proceeding. The State authorities and others interested have full right to be heard. If any of these State rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand and interstate or foreign commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, it is authorized to prescribe the rate, fare, or charge, or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum rate thereafter to be observed in such manner as to remove such advantage, preference, prejudice, or discrimination. Such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be observed while in effect by the carriers parties to such proceeding, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

Short and local lines have often been put to great disadvantage because the longer or trunk lines would often take advantage of their necessities to force from them a greater portion of the joint fares, rates, or charges than was equitable. This practice has led to serious injustices. The commission is given full power to hear and determine these differences, either on complaint or upon its own initiative, and to make such decisions as are just, reasonable, and equitable under all the circumstances.

CREDIT AND RATE MAKING.

"The discussion thus far demonstrates clearly the necessity of caring for the credit of our transportation system. The power of the Congress to regulate commerce among the States is plenary, but its rates must not be confiscatory. Rates under the old law were required to be just and reasonable, and unjust and unreasonable rates were declared unlawful. My belief is that under this rule rates should have been so adjusted as to provide for the needs of transportation, including a fair return on the actual investment, and thereby lend encouragement to capital to develop our railway systems so as to keep them apace with our national growth. But I fear that these requirements have not always been kept in mind by the Congress or the State legislatures or the rate-making agencies. If there was any doubt about the meaning of the old law in that behalf it has been made perfectly plain in the new act.

"Section 422 provides that—

"in the exercise of its powers to prescribe just and reasonable rates the commission shall initiate, modify, establish, or adjust such returns so that carriers as a whole (or as a whole of each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate) will under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment, earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation." * * *

"The commission shall from time to time determine and make public what percentage shall be uniform for all rate groups or territories which may be designated by the commission. In making such determination it shall give due consideration, among other things, to the transportation needs of the country and the necessity (under honest, efficient, and economical management of existing transportation facilities) of enlarging such facilities in order to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation: Provided, That during the two years beginning March 1, 1920, the commission shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision in whole or in part for improvements, betterments, or equipment, which according to the accounting prescribed by the commission, are chargeable to capital account.

"It will be observed that under these provisions the commission has the power to designate rate groups or territories.

"Rate making has been referred to as the one unsolvable problem, and the more we think of it the more accurate this description seems. Clearly, it is not solvable to a mathematical certainty.

"Roads differ in location as well as in efficiency of management. One line extends from one large center of population to another through a country already industrially well developed. Another road is built through a more sparsely settled country in anticipation of future development. The amount of traffic as well as their earning capacity vary.

"If rates are made lower on one road than they are on another, with the view to equalizing the net earnings on the capital invested, the rule will defeat itself, because the road charging the lower rates will absorb all the business, and thereby impoverish the weaker road.

"If rates are made so as to permit a fair earning on the lower-class road, it will make the earnings on the higher-class road exorbitant and indefensible.

"If the rates are made so as to permit a fair return upon a fairly managed and fairly well-located road, it will not yield revenue enough for the poorly located road and will yield too much to the best managed and best located roads. And it must be borne in mind that most of these roads, if not all of them, serve their part in their respective communities, and all must be given considerate, if not sympathetic, attention by the Congress. Each plays its part on the stage of our national life.

"The Congress therefore declares:

"Inasmuch as it is impossible (without regulation and control in the interest of the commerce of the United States considered as a whole) to establish uniform rates upon competitive traffic which will adequately sustain all the carriers which are engaged in such traffic, and which are indispensable to the communities to which they render the service of transportation, without enabling some of the carriers to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, it is hereby declared that any carrier which receives such an income so in excess of a fair return shall hold such part of the excess as trustee for, and shall pay it to, the United States.

"It is therefore provided that if under the rule prescribed for a fair return upon the aggregate value of railway property, either as a whole or as a whole of each rate group or territory, the net railway operating income for any carrier should exceed 6 per cent on the value of the railway property held or used by it for transportation, one-half of such excess shall be placed in a reserve fund established and maintained by such carrier, and the other one-half shall be paid to the commission for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a railroad contingent fund.

"The carrier is permitted for the purpose of paying dividends or interest on its stocks, bonds, or other securities, or rent for leased roads, to draw from the reserve fund thus established and maintained by it to the extent that its net rail operating income for any year is less than a sum equal to 6 per cent of the value of the railway property held or used by it for transportation. But this fund must not be drawn upon for any other purpose.

"However, such reserve fund need not be accumulated and maintained by any carrier in excess of 5 per cent of the value of its railway property, and when such fund exceeds 5 per cent, such excess may be used by the railroad for any lawful purpose.

"Half of the excess earnings over and above the 6 per cent which each railroad is entitled to earn goes into the general railroad contingent fund, to be used by the Interstate Commerce Commission either to make loans to carriers for expenditures for capital account or to refund maturing securities originally issued for capital account, or to purchase transportation equipment and facilities and leasing them to carriers.

"This raises an interesting constitutional question. Former Justice Hughes, Judge R. S. Lovett, Col. Alfred P. Thom, and other leading lawyers hold that the diversion of these funds from the earning road for the purpose indicated is a taking of property contrary to the fifth amendment of the Federal Constitution.

"On the other hand, great lawyers like ex-Senator Root, Mr. John H. Miller, Mr. Hugh L. Bond, Mr. Forney Johnson, and others hold these provisions to be constitutional. I share their opinion. I shall not take your time to argue the question at length. I prefer to state briefly my reasons for this view without much elaboration:

"The power of the Congress over interstate commerce is plenary. It includes the fixing of rates. They must be just and reasonable. They can not be made confiscatory. They are so involved in the complexity of transportation that no single rate can be considered in and of itself. All rates are correlated. The Congress recognizes this fact. The shipper is not only interested in the shipment from point A to point B to-day, but he is interested in the transportation from point A to every other point in the group or territory in which he is located, nay, in the entire country. The rate he pays and the rate that every other shipper or traveler pays are necessary to the maintenance of the system of transportation without which his business would fail or be seriously crippled. The Congress, the public, and the courts know that it is physically impossible to make any rate so that it will produce mathematically its proportion of the cost of the maintenance and operation, or a fair return upon the whole property of any railroad, or of any rate group or territory. No human tribunal can do better than to approximate exactness in this behalf. The Congress has so declared.

"We realize the impossibility of making one rate for one road and another rate for another road. The rates must be just and reasonable, not only for the shipper of to-day but for the railroad that carries the shipment, not only from point A to point B but from point A to every other point, and from every other point back to point A and to every other point.

"Every student of this subject recognizes that the same rates for the same commodity can not be made so as to maintain every road without giving excess earnings to some or reducing the earnings of other roads below what is just and reasonable. And, this being so, must it follow that the individual carrier shall have the benefit of the excess earnings rather than the public? Since when is the profit of the individual common carrier to be preferred to the interest of the public? Can the Congress be said to regulate commerce if it can not dispose of excess earnings? The Constitution nowhere inhibits the Congress from disposing of excess earnings, provided its action is not confiscatory.

"It will be borne in mind that we do not say that the rate money becomes absolutely the property of the carrier the moment it is paid into its treasury. The Government of the United States keeps control over it until it discovers in the final analysis whether or not the total earnings are in excess of a fair return. I assume that in determining what is a just and reasonable rate the courts will take into consideration the justness and reasonableness of the charge, not only in its relation to the shipper, but the justness and reasonableness of the earnings which the carrier is permitted to have under the system. If the carrier gets a fair return he can not complain because he does not get the excess over and above a fair return, particularly when he is told by the Government in advance he shall not have the excess. If the rates are just and reasonable to the shipper, he has no cause to complain, because he has no reason to complain. If under a fortuitous combination of circumstances some fortunate carrier gets more than his fair return, and a portion of the excess is appropriated by the Government for the improvement of the transportation system of the country—in other words, if an interstate carrier gets the fair return provided for under the law—it can not complain because it does not get more than a fair return; and if the shipper gets his specific service for a just and reasonable rate, he is not in a position to complain if, under the act, the Government provides that a part of the excess over and above a fair return shall redound to the benefit either of the individual carrier receiving it or of the public, of which both the carrier and the shipper are a part.

"Ample provision is made in the act for the commission to give relief in case of overcharges, unlawfully excessive or discriminatory rates, or rates excessive in their relation to other rates. But can it be said that because a rate may be inferentially slightly too high, as reflected by the total earnings of a given road, that a court will take cognizance of things de minimis in order to hold the rate unconstitutional? Surely the Congress has the right to contemplate the transportation system as a whole and to provide for it as a whole, even if this element must be weighed in fixing specific rates on any individual road, or its relation to all the roads and to the commerce of the whole country.

"Again, it must be conceded that by an excess-profits tax the Congress could take all earnings on every road above 6 per cent and devote the proceeds to any purpose it saw fit. To take excess earnings can not be said to be unconstitutional because it is done in a way which departs from the usual form of collecting taxes. Courts look to the substance of the things done, and not to the form, or name, in determining their validity.

LABOR PROVISIONS.

"I can not conclude this discussion without a brief reference to the labor provisions. No one will deny the importance of mining or manufacturing or agriculture, but the relations which exist between the employees and employers of public utility corporations engaged in interstate commerce are far more essential to the national life than are the relations between employees and employers in a manufacturing or mining or agricultural enterprise. The latter are local in character, and however important or serious the disputes, which result in either lockouts or strikes, they remain local in character. But strikes and lockouts on railroads engaged in interstate commerce are not necessarily so. They may be State-wide or even Nation-wide. They may effect all industrial and social life. If transportation is to cease for even a week, the population in large cities like Richmond, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Cleveland, or Chicago, may be reduced to distress, starvation, nay, even death. Such conditions are intolerable.

"During the last six months we have had in quick succession longshoremen strikes, coal strikes, steel strikes, threatened and actual railroad strikes, to say nothing of the innumerable lesser strikes with which the public prints have been filled. Such was the situation when the railroad legislation was pending. That there was need of a proper remedy admits of no doubt. The Congress sought for a remedy whereby to adjust differences constantly arising between railroad companies and their employees, to the end that the railroads, their officials, and their employees should be servants of the public—not their masters.

"The Congress declared it to—"be the duty of all carriers, their officers, employees, and agents, to exert every reasonable effort and adopt every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees or subordinate officials thereof. All such disputes shall be considered and, if possible, decided in conference between representatives designated and authorized so to confer by the carriers, or the employees, or subordinate officials thereof, directly interested in the dispute.

"If any dispute is not decided in such conference, it is to be referred by the parties thereto to the boards created by the act to hear and to decide them. It provides for the appointment of adjustment boards by agreement between any carrier, group of carriers, or the carriers as a whole, and any employees or subordinate officials of carriers or organization or group of organizations thereof. Each such adjustment board shall upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials whose members are directly interested in the dispute, or upon the written application of not fewer than 100 unorganized employees, or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, or upon the adjustment board's own motion, or upon the request of the labor board whenever it is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to interrupt commerce, receive for hearing and decide any dispute involving only grievances, rules, or working conditions not decided by the parties themselves.

"There is also a Railroad Labor Board composed of nine members, three from the labor group to be appointed by the President from not fewer than six nominees, whose nominations are made by the employees in such manner as the commission shall prescribe; three members constituting the management group, representing the carriers, appointed by the President from not fewer than six nominations made by the carriers in like manner; and three constituting the public group appointed by the President. All of these appointees are named subject to the advice and consent of the Senate.

"The labor board is required to hear and to decide any disputes involving grievances, rules, or working conditions, in respect to which any adjustment board certifies to the labor board that, in its opinion, the adjustment board has failed or will fail to reach a decision within a reasonable time, or in respect to which the labor board determines that any adjustment board has failed or has not used due diligence in its consideration. If the adjustment boards are not organized, the labor board, either upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, or upon a written petition signed by not fewer than 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, or upon the labor board's own motion, if it is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to disrupt commerce, shall receive for hearing and decide any dispute involving grievances, rules, or working conditions.

"Also, the labor board upon like application, or upon its own motion, is required to receive for hearing and to decide 'all disputes with respect to wages or salaries of employees or subordinate officials of carriers,' which are not decided by the parties themselves, and the labor board is authorized to suspend the operation of such private agreements if such increase in wages or salaries as may be made are likely to necessitate a substantial readjustment of the rates of any carrier, and they must decide such suspended decision promptly.

"All decisions of the labor board require concurrence therein of at least five of its nine members, but in decisions relating to wages and salaries at least one of the representatives of the public shall concur.

"The labor board is required to establish rates of wages and salaries and standards of working conditions which are just and reasonable, and in doing so they are required, so far as applicable, to take into consideration among other relevant circumstances:

"(1) The scale of wages paid for similar kind of work in other industries.

"(2) The relation between wages and cost of living.

"(3) The hazards of the employment.

"(4) The training and skill required.

"(5) The degree of responsibility.

"(6) The character and regularity of the employment.

"(7) Inequalities of increases in wages or of treatment, the result of previous wage orders or adjustments.

"This act means that the Congress declares it to be the duty of the carrier and the employee to adjust their differences so as to avoid interruption to the operation of the carrier. If they do not reach a decision, then they are required to refer the dispute either to the adjustment board or to the labor board for hearing and decision. All of this is done to the end that the business and life of the country shall continue uninterrupted. What is wrong with it?

"As a member of the subcommittee that framed the Cummins bill and as one of the Senate conferees, I did my utmost to penalize strikes and lockouts in interstate commerce on the railroads. The House would not concur therein. Its Committee on Rules would not even permit a vote on the subject.

"For one, I took the position it was necessary to penalize strikes and lockouts, because there was an apparent determination on the part of certain labor leaders in this country to have the entitre country at their mercy. Some of them came before a committee of the Congress and threatened revolution if they did not get what they wanted. At the time they were urging the passage of the so-called Plumb bill. Others, including Mr. Samuel Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labor, threatened to defy the law if it was passed, and he added before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate that he would not hesitate to advise his fellows to defy it.

"This is the land of plenty. No man who works, or is willing to work, need suffer for the want of food or fuel or any of the necessaries of life, and under the bounty of the Almighty be never will suffer if each of us will play his part in the divine economy of the country. Why should the people in the centers of population starve and freeze while the food products are wasting in the rural districts and the bowels of the earth are filled with coal? Why should industry be paralyzed because it can not get fuel or raw material or its finished products to the market? Why should the people in the country suffer because they can not get the products they need from the factory and the mine?

"No man or class of men ever would clothe the President of the United States, or the Congress, or the Supreme Court, or any other body, in time of peace, with the power to stop the wheels of commerce on our railroads. It is too great a power to be vested in any department of the Government, and if it is too great to be vested in any department of the Government it is too great to be exercised by the would-be autocrats of the country, I care not whether they be of the capital class, the labor class, or any other class.

"I cherish the hope that the labor leaders of this country will take counsel of their experiences during the past few months, and that it will not be necessary for the Congress to pass any more drastic legislation bearing upon this subject. But if they will not profit by experience, there never will be more than one nation-wide strike in this country on the railroads. And if that one strike comes, the American people will send to the Congress men who will have the courage to do their bidding and not quake like aspen leaves before a few lobbyists in Washington. The great American people are patient and long-suffering, but they can be aroused, and when they are aroused there will be a great upswell which will cast aside the autocrats of the country as the great billows of the ocean toss about the flotsam and jetsam of the sea.

"In conclusion, permit me to say that the sponsors of the transportation act do not claim it to be the last word in legislation. They believe it to be a long step forward. They feel confident it will add to the efficiency of our transportation system, restore its well-nigh ruined credit, and prove a great service to the country we love and cherish."

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not intend to interpose any captious objection to the consideration of the conference report, but I am inclined to think that the Senate has done enough for this week and should not be required to consider additional legislation before Monday. For that reason, and for that reason only, I shall object to the consideration of the conference report to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota did not ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report, but moved that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well. Then I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. STERLING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to adjourn is in order. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. STERLING called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I notice he is not in the Chamber, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer the pair which I have just announced to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. GAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GAY. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FERNALD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SHERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who, as I understand, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	Henderson	Reed	Thomas
Culberson	King	Robinson	Trammell
Dial	Myers	Sheppard	Underwood
Gay	Overman	Shields	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	Phelan	Simmons	Williams
Harris	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—29.

Beckham	Glass	Moses	Sutherland
Borah	Gore	Newberry	Swanson
Comer	Hitchcock	Owen	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Penrose	Watson
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Wolcott
Elkins	Kirby	Smith, Ariz.
Fletcher	La Follette	Smith, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Smith, Md.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 1699, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has there been any intervening business which would make a call for a quorum in order at this time? I think not, and I raise that point of order against the call for a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report has been taken up. That is perhaps intervening business.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McLean	Robinson
Borah	Hale	Moses	Sheppard
Brandegee	Harding	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Harris	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Harrison	New	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Spencer

Fernald	Knox	Poindexter	Underwood
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Gay	Lodge	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	McKellar	Reed

Mr. GAY. I wish to announce the absence on official business of the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, when I stated yesterday in my remarks on the New Jersey prohibition case that I did not believe that the people of New Jersey were in sympathy with the action brought by its authorities in the Supreme Court of the United States, I intended to withdraw what I had previously said as to the State of New Jersey, the Vice President having called my attention to the rule. Certainly I had no intention to refer in any objectionable way to a State of this Union or to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and in order that the RECORD may contain nothing susceptible of that construction I desire to withdraw the following part of my remarks of yesterday:

It seems to me that the State of New Jersey, in resisting the action of 45 of the 48 States of the Union in ratifying an amendment proposed under the Constitution, and adopted in accordance with its solemn terms, has put itself on the side of revolution and anarchy.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, because of the noise in the Chamber I did not hear fully the very kind remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in withdrawing the statement he made yesterday during a debate concerning the brief and complaint of the State of New Jersey which I had asked and received the consent of the Senate to insert in the RECORD previously.

I simply want to take this occasion to express my appreciation of the action of the Senator, and to say further that whatever may be the individual thought of Senators upon the question involved, certainly it must be admitted that the orderly and proper method for any State to adopt is to have the subject reviewed by applying to the highest court of the country, the Supreme Court of the United States.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I give notice that at the first opportunity next week I shall call up the conference report on House bill 3184, known as the water-power bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington for a little more definite information on that point. I think there are one or two days next week when I shall not be able to be here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have been trying to get up the report for some time.

Mr. NORRIS. I know it, and I have been here waiting.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator has. I can not fix a definite time. The Senator knows about the condition of the business of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will not call up the report during my absence.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will be absent only a couple of days, I will say to him that I will not; but I do want to call it up at the very first opportunity when Senators who are interested in it can be here.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR RANSDELL.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD the address of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] delivered before the convention of American Cotton Association in Montgomery, Ala., April 14, 1920, on "Economies of high-density gin compression of cotton."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANSDELL's address is as follows:

ECONOMIES OF HIGH-DENSITY GIN COMPRESSION OF COTTON.

"[Address of JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, United States Senator from Louisiana, before convention of American Cotton Association at Montgomery, Ala., Apr. 14, 1920.]

"Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, this intelligent audience of men and women interested in cotton, either as producers, handlers, or manufacturers, is too well posted to require of me any detailed explanation of the present uneconomical and wasteful methods of baling and handling cotton. All of us who have had experience with cotton and are at all familiar with the systems of baling in vogue in India, Egypt, Peru, and Brazil, and with high-density gin compressed bales in our own land, are bound to admit that our old-style, low-density bale, averaging 46 cubic feet, partially covered with loosely woven jute fiber from India, is obsolete and should be replaced as soon as possible with modern, up-to-date methods. There is no other commodity in the world one-tenth the value of cotton which is handled so carelessly and in a manner resulting in so much damage and loss. There is no article of manufacture and no product of the farm put up in packages so unsightly, untidy, bulky, hard to handle as a bale of American cotton when unloaded on the quays at Liverpool or Naples after going through the careless handling to which it is subjected by recompressing, by half a dozen cotton samplers, by extra patching to cover up the rents made by the samplers, by tumbling it around in the mud at the compress and on the wharves before it is loaded on this side, by great holes torn in its sides with hooks in loading, by screwing into the hold of the vessel under tremendous pressure, and by jerking it out with great force on the other side. If ever there was a slovenly, dirty, damaged, disreputable, water-soaked, wasteful, and inflammable package, it is a bale of American cotton when it reaches the spinner on the European Continent; and not only in that case, but before it reaches the spinners of New England it is subjected to substantially the same evil treatment accorded to the exported bale, and is in nearly as bad condition. All of you have seen many bales of cotton, that great product of the Southland of which the whole Nation is so proud, worth annually at least $2,000,000,000, lying in the mud and rain and grime at some plantation gin or river landing, in the yard of some local buyer, on the uncovered platform of some compress plant, or at the big concentration warehouses near large cotton centers. You have seen it lying exposed to the weather and spoiling and being injured in every imaginable way for weeks and months at a time; not a few isolated bales but thousands and hundreds of thousands. Such conditions are hard to believe, and if I were speaking to an audience who did not themselves know the facts I would not expect my hearers to believe me; but you gentlemen know that the whole truth has not been stated when I point out the waste, neglect, and criminal damage done every year to cotton, largely as a result of out-of-date, unscientific, expensive, and crude methods of low-density gin baling, recompressing, and indiscriminate sampling. These three factors—loose baling, compressing, and excessive sampling—are the main evils, and if we can by some method overcome them and eliminate all three of them there is no doubt that the other troubles will to a great extent right themselves.

"I shall give a brief description of the old and new systems of baling and handling cotton, and shall point out what seem to be the defects of the old and the advantages of the new.

"The method by which 98 per cent of all the cotton in the United States is initially prepared for market on the plantations where produced or in neighboring gins results in the ordinary square plantation or box bale. This is a package containing about 500 pounds of cotton fiber pressed to a density of 12 pounds to the cubic foot, partially covered with coarse, loosely woven jute bagging, fastened with six steel ties, has dimensions of 30 by 48 by 56 inches and a volume of 46 cubic feet. This bale is so bulky and awkward that in order to ship it long distances to advantage it is usually sent from the gin to a compress plant, where it is repacked or compressed into a package 30 by 22 by 60 inches, with a density of 22½ pounds per cubic foot, covered with the original bagging and ties, and having a volume of 22 cubic feet, the resulting compress bale having approximately one-half the volume of the gin bale. This compressed bale is then shipped from the compress to the spinner in America or to the seaboard for export.

"There are two methods of high-density gin compression in present use, one known as the square and the other as the round bale process. The high-density gin compressed bale of the square type is a package of 500 pounds weight, put up at the cotton gin, 20 by 25 by 52 inches in size, with a density of 32 to 35 pounds per cubic foot, is entirely covered with closely woven burlap or Osnaburgs, fastened with seven steel bands or ties, and having a volume of 15 cubic feet, about one-third the ordinary plantation bale and a little less than three-quarters the volume of the ordinary compressed bale.

"The standard round bale is 35 inches in length, 20 inches in diameter, weighs 250 pounds, and has a density of 39.3 pounds to the cubic foot, is entirely covered with closely woven burlap or Osnaburgs, securely sewed on, but not tied with metal bands, and having a volume of 6½ cubic feet. As 500 pounds is the unit for a bale of domestic cotton, it takes two of these round bales to make one commercial bale.

"Hereafter when the term 'high-density bales' is used it will be understood to mean high-density gin-compressed bales, either square or round, and not high-density recompressed bales, unless specifically so stated.

"The weight and bulk of cotton is so great and it has to be conveyed such long distances from the cotton fields of the South to the spinners of New England and the Old World that the question of its transportation, as affected by density and compactness, is one of the most important economic problems for us to consider.

"A very interesting and instructive report was issued on April 24, 1918, by the War Industries Board, Council of National Defense, Washington, on improved methods of baling cotton, as advocated by its storage committee in cooperation with the Southern Commercial Congress, National Council of American Cotton Manufacturers, Farmers' Union of Cotton States, and the Cotton States Official Advisory Board, with the approval of the Shipping Board and the Departments of War, Agriculture, and Commerce. This report was prepared by Messrs. James Inglis, president of the American Blower Co., Detroit, Mich.; T. C. Powell, vice president of the Erie Railroad; and J. L. Ackerson, vice president Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Conn., who were prominent and successful business men of Northern States, not connected with cotton, and influenced solely by patriotism and sound business judgment, after the most careful investigation. It impresses me so favorably that I quote it, in part, as follows:

"Cotton is now almost universally compressed at the gin to a density of 12 pounds per cubic foot, and at the first railroad compress reduced to a density of 22½ pounds per cubic foot. There is no objection on the part of the spinners to compression to a density of 33 pounds per cubic foot; but, on the contrary, the users of the cotton are as unanimous as the growers for a change of conditions which will bring about at the earliest possible date the adoption of high-density baling at the gin and compress so that the cotton crop may be moved at less than one-half the present cost and with greater expedition.

"By the introduction of the proper gin compression it is a conservative statement to say that the cotton crop in this country can be moved by the use of only from one-quarter to one-third the number of cars now required in that service. The reduction in ship space, both overseas and coastwise, can safely be estimated as the difference between 22 and 33, or a saving in space of approximately 50 per cent.

"Opposition to this reform in the past on the part of the railroads has been based on the existence of an abundance of cars in which to carry all freight offered. Such conditions no longer prevail, and it must be and is conceded by railway operators, whether under Government or private control, that the loading of cars to full capacity is to be encouraged on selfish as well as economic grounds.

"High-density compression of cotton at initial gin points would not only create imperative war economies in the transportation of the crop but would likewise increase very materially the earnings per car and use of available motive power.

"The maximum of economic savings urged in the better baling of cotton, such as insurance, sampling, waste, country damage, storage, tare, etc., and strict economy in transportation can only be realized by producers and consumers of the American cotton crop through the medium of gin compression, and not by existing methods of recompression at centralized locations in the cotton belt or at the ports.

"The enormous loss of cotton in the shape of city crop, so called—samples taken from the bale from time to time—falls on the grower and is unnecessary. The general introduction of high density baling methods at the gin will bring about entirely new and greatly improved practices in the buying, sampling, and grading of cotton.

"The present allowance, running from 22 to 30 pounds for tare, and the general practice in connection with the covering of the bale are utterly indefensible on any grounds whatever, and an almost incredible saving in wrapping material will inevitably result. In fact, the conservation in material alone, which is only a small factor compared with the saving on transportation, constitutes an item of national importance.

"Equitable freight rates on cotton, with relation to other commodities, will result in preventing useless waste of energy and materials to the value of more than $100,000,000 annually.

"Removal of an unjust burden on cotton in the matter of freight rates will have the result of raising the efficiency of America more nearly to an equality with Egypt, India, and China in the cotton industry."

"Is not this a classic? I think so, beyond question. Every producer of cotton should commit it to memory and follow its advice.

"In this connection permit me to suggest that all delegates secure copies of the supplement to the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record of October 23, 1919, containing proceedings and speeches at the world cotton conference held in New Orleans that month. In it you will find information of much value relating to cotton. I wish also to say that the Manufacturers' Record, under the lead of its great editor, Richard H. Edmonds, has for a quarter of a century been doing truly good work for cotton. This journal has been the persistent, fearless, and able champion of cotton as the principal agricultural product of the South. It has been the special advocate of those who produce cotton by the sweat of their brow, and has insisted in and out of season that they have never received a fair price for their product.

"But to return to my subject, practically all of our cotton is compressed in some form before final shipment to market, and about 2 per cent is now baled by the two high-density gin-compress methods above described. I will therefore, for the purpose of this discussion, treat the crop as a unit of 12,000,000 bales and assume that 10,000,000 bales are moved first from the gin to the compress, and thence to the American spinner, or the seaboard for foreign export, in ordinary 36-foot cars which hold 35 plantation bales, or 75 compressed bales, or 108 high-density gin-compressed bales.

"The trading unit in cotton is 100 bales. To convey 100 bales from the old-style gin and press at my home, Lake Providence, La., to St. Joseph, the nearest compress point, which is 60 miles distant, would require three 36-foot cars; and from the compress at St. Joseph to New Orleans, 233 miles, would require two 36-foot cars, or a total of five cars, and an average of 16 car-days en route and at compress. If I had a high-density press at my gin, the 100 bales unit could be moved direct to New Orleans, a total distance of 293 miles, in one car in three days, a vast saving in time and money.

"In order to move 10,000,000 plantation bales from gin to compress would require 285,714 cars, and to transfer the whole crop of 12,000,000 bales from compress to spinner or to seaboard would require an additional 160,000 cars, or a total of 445,714 cars. If the cotton were all baled at the gins by high-density presses it would require only 111,111 cars to move it to spinner or to seaboard. Deducting this 111,111 cars required for up-to-date methods from the 445,714 actually used under present conditions, we find there would be an annual saving of 334,603 cars in favor of high-density gin compression. I can not state exactly what this would amount to in money, but believe it fair to assume $100 per carload as a minimum figure, and applying that sum there would be a saving in the item of transportation alone of $33,460,300 a year.

"When one considers the great car shortage now existing, which probably will continue indefinitely, the extreme difficulties and delays of securing cars to move commerce at any price; and the colossal sum—nearly a billion dollars—which must be expended by the railroads before there is a normal supply, not only of freight cars, but of passenger cars and locomotives, it will be seen what a tremendous economic advantage would follow if a method is adopted in the baling and handling of cotton that would annually reduce the number of carloads for its conveyance to market by 330,000 or more, which would inevitably result from high density gin compress methods.

"Another way of presenting this matter is to compute the saving in car days in handling 100 bales from gin to spinner or port, as follows:

100 plantation bales:	Days.
Gin to compress, three 36-foot cars 2 days	6
Delay at compress, three 36-foot cars 2 days	6
Compress to spinner or port, two 36-foot cars 2 days	4
Total car days	16
100 square or 200 round high density gin compressed bales:
Gin to spinner or port, one 36-foot car	3
Car days saved	13

"Based on a movement of 10,000,000 bales from gin to compress, and 12,000,000 from compress to spinner or port, the total number of car days saved would be 1,300,000, equal to the constant use of 10,833 cars for four months at a season of the year when the demand for transportation is greatest to move other crops of the country, and a corresponding saving in locomotives, fuel, crews, trackage, and other railroad equipment. The resultant benefit would be of supreme importance to all cotton growers and to every citizen of the Republic.

"The annual saving possible through high density gin compression which I have computed so far has included only that from transportation by rail. While such a saving is a strong argument in favor of gin compression it is by no means the only one. During the use for the past 60 years of our antiquated and stagnant methods of cotton baling and handling, certain leaks and weak spots have been recognized, and some of them have attained characteristic titles, such as 'city crop' and 'country damage.'

"The 'city crop' may be briefly defined as the enormous amount of cotton which annually accrues from excessive sampling and waste. Those who get the benefit of this 'city crop' do not expend any sweat or labor in its production. This 'crop' has been variously estimated by Government and other experts at from 50,000 to 150,000 bales; and we may safely say it will amount to a dollar a bale, or $12,000,000 per annum.

"'Country damage' is the result of criminal carelessness. It is the direct penalty of piling cotton bales, unprotected, in farm yards or on open platforms, on the ground at a store or river landing, and often in the mud of gin and compress yards, there to remain in many instances indefinitely, subject to all the ravages of the weather. This inexcusable loss has been estimated by Government officials as high as $60,000,000, while other experts both in this country and abroad have placed it at from thirty to seventy millions annually. Fifty millions is probably a fair average figure.

"The extra cost of the bagging and ties and the patches used in repairing the great gashes made by samplers, over and above the cost of burlap covering and ties on the round bale, is variously estimated as high as $17,160,000. It may be fairly placed at an average for both the square and the round system of $9,000,000 annually.

"From various estimates, the yearly saving on compressing and recompressing may be stated at approximately $12,000,000.

"On account of its neatness and reduced size, the high-density, gin-compressed bale, both round and square, is at present allowed a reduction in ocean freight rates of 25 cents per hundred pounds, or $1.25 per bale, over the present standard commercial bale. On the average annual exports of 6,000,000 bales, this saving would aggregate $7,500,000.

"The delay of fully 30 days caused by our present method of shipping from gin to compress, unloading, compressing, and reloading results in an annual loss of $7,000,000 through interest on capital invested in cotton.

When we consider the fact that cotton is insured from the time it is baled at the gin until it is delivered to the spinner for manufacture, or to the boat for export, and the further fact that the high-density gin-compressed bale is a much better fire risk than the original bale, we may safely estimate the yearly saving on domestic insurance at the rate of 50 cents per bale, or a total of $6,000,000.

"Marine insurance companies have given the high-density gin-compressed bale an average reduction in rates of 87½ cents per bale on present values, and the possible saving from this source may be put at $5,000,000 on a 6,000,000-bale export movement. This gives a total of $11,000,000 as a saving on insurance.

"'Tare,' as defined by the lexicographer, 'is an allowance made for the weight of the container of goods.' It comes from the Arab word 'tarha,' meaning 'throw away.' The bagging and ties which constitute the tare on a bale of compressed or recompressed cotton weigh about 30 pounds; on the high density square bale about 12 pounds; and on two round bales (equal to 500 pounds) it is 5 pounds. It thus appears that the tare, or waste material, is 18 pounds more on the ordinary bale than on the high density square bale, and 25 pounds more than on the high density round bale. The covering of the cotton is just as much a part of the expense of making it as the rent of the land on which it grows, the cost of seed, preparation of the soil, planting, cultivating, picking, and ginning. Some of our short-sighted cotton growers imagine they are paid for bagging and ties because there is no apparent deduction made for the weight thereof when the cotton is sold to American purchasers. Beyond question, however, the buyer takes into consideration the fact that the bale is covered with 30 pounds of tare, or worthless material, which must be thrown away when the fiber is carried into the cotton factory, and he is obliged to make full deduction for the cost of this covering. The English buyer always deducts 6 per cent from the gross weight for tare. The factory can not spin bagging and ties. It spins cotton, and cotton alone is what it buys. If the bale be an ordinary one the buyer computes 30 pounds as worthless; if it be a high density square gin bale, 12 pounds; and if a round bale, 5 pounds. Therefore there is an actual loss of a sum equivalent to the cost price of from 18 to 25 pounds of bagging and ties on every bale of cotton packed under the old process over and above the waste on either of the new style processes. This figures $1 to $1.50 per bale at the present time. It constitutes a loss of twelve to eighteen million dollars a year on the average crop of cotton, and this loss comes out of the cotton grower just as surely as every item of expense to make and harvest the crop is paid by him.

"Moreover, it is necessary to pay the freight on this excessive tare, which averages about 21 pounds on the ordinary compress bale—all the way from the compress point to the spinner at home or abroad. The freight thereon is computed at $4,500,000 for the 6,000,000 bales of export cotton and $1,200,000 on the 6,000,000 consumed in this country, which gives a clear saving in freight charges on extra weight of tare on the present commercial bale of $5,700,000.

"The total annual saving possible under high density gin compression may be summarized as follows:

Transportation	$33,000,000
Country damage	50,000,000
Tare	14,000,000
City crop	12,000,000
Recompression	12,000,000
Domestic and marine insurance	11,000,000
Cost of covering	9,000,000
Ocean-freight rates	7,000,000
Interest on delayed shipments through compression	7,000,000
Freight on extra tare	5,000,000
Total annual saving	160,000,000

"I consider this estimate of $160,000,000 as very conservative and believe it would actually reach nearly two hundred millions.

"At the big world cotton conference in New Orleans last October, to which reference has been made, high-density gin compression, light tare, and selling by net weight were indorsed in the strongest manner by delegates representing 9 out of the 11 groups attending the convention. These groups were as follows: (1) Growers; (2) ginners; (3) seed crushers and manufacturers of seed products; (4) compress and warehouse men; (5) cotton merchants; (6) transportation and insurance; (7) banking; (8) governments and economies; (9) spinners and manufacturers (American); (10) spinners and manufacturers (foreign); (11) textile merchants, converters, and finishers. Of these 11 groups, representing every branch of the cotton industry, many of them from foreign lands, all except two—the compress and warehouse men and the cotton merchants—indorsed high-density gin compression, light tare, and selling by net weight; and it goes without saying that if the great consuming public which uses cotton had also been represented, it would have stood unanimously for these reforms.

"Unquestionably the proposed movement is revolutionary. It demands a complete reform in methods that have been in vogue for 60 years. It means the practical destruction of a number of ordinary gins and compresses. It means the introduction of progressive, up-to-date, scientific methods as compared with the back-number processes of 60 years ago. It means that the people of the South must follow the lead of great mechanical and financial geniuses, like Andrew Carnegie, E. H. Gary, Charles M. Schwab, and Henry C. Frick, who did not hesitate to throw into the junk pile millions of dollars' worth of machinery when they ascertained that better machinery which would produce larger profits could be installed.

"I have a letter from Judge Gary, in which he says that at McKeesport, Pa., the United States Steel Corporation rebuilt tube and pipe mills and charged off $7,000,000 against the old investment; that the same corporation installed a new system of by-product coke ovens and benzol plants at an outlay of about $60,000,000, which installation will lead to the abandonment of old plants representing an investment of fifteen millions.

"Mr. Schwab mentions an expensive converting mill constructed by the Carnegie Co., which, after being in operation only two months, was torn down and rebuilt in order to take advantage of a new mechanical discovery which had just developed.

"In the manufacture of sugar from sugar cane, one of the great industries of my State, great changes have been wrought, and the successful producer of sugar is ever alive to the necessity and value of keeping abreast of the times in employing the most modern methods and improved types of machinery.

"The old methods have been discarded. To succeed it was necessary to keep abreast of the times. Labor-saving, fuel-saving, cost-reducing devices, many of which came from the fertile brains of Louisianians, have taken the place of old methods. The growers of sugar cane now send their product to modern, well-equipped central factories, and the old-fashioned plants, with their crude, antiquated machinery, have been abandoned entirely for the new methods, which competition and the high price of labor and material have made necessary. The initial cost of installing modern and efficient machinery and methods in these sugar plants is often very large, but the saving in labor and time, the elimination of waste, both in the production and better handling of the finished product, the delivery to the purchaser of the more desirable article, fully warrant the cost and efforts expended.

"Why can not the cotton producers follow the wise example of the steel and sugar men, to say nothing of similar progressive methods in practically every branch of manufacturing?

"I do not advocate the immediate adoption of this reform, but think it should be put into effect gradually. There are already a number of round-bale presses which annually place on the market about 178,000 bales of 250 pounds, or 89,000 bales of 500 pounds each. There are also fifteen or twenty high-density square-bale presses which are doing satisfactory work in Mississippi and Louisiana. A start has been made. Why is it not practicable, as the machinery in our old-style gins wears out from time to time and new plants are needed, to replace them with one or the other of these two high-density systems or some other that will secure like results?

"If the reforms I advocate were put into effect immediately, there would be considerable loss to the owners of compresses and old style gins. It is difficult to ascertain exactly how many active ginneries there are in the United States, but from the best evidence obtainable I estimate the number at about 20,000, and the value of the presses therein at $1,000 each, aggregating $20,000,000. It would probably be wise to set aside entirely one-half of these gins, as 10,000 up-to-date gin outfits would doubtless suffice. The old style presses in all of them would be practically lost, but much of the other machinery could be transferred to the remaining 10,000 gin plants, in which there would be high-density presses. This would involve a loss of twenty millions for the old presses and possibly another twenty million for losses on the 10,000 gin outfits which are discarded, a total of $40,000,000 loss by the owners of gins, most all of whom are cotton growers directly interested in obtaining a better price for their cotton.

"As an illustration of how this reform would affect the average owner of a cotton gin permit me to refer to myself. My Olivedell plantation in Louisiana has on it an old style gin outfit, which I estimate to be worth from four to five thousand dollars. If high-density gin compresses were established in the public gins at my home town, Lake Providence, I would dismantle my gin and suffer a direct loss of about $3,000. Now, I have shown above by conservative figures that the annual losses resulting from the use of present methods of baling and handling cotton amount to at least $160,000,000 on a 12,000,000 bale crop, or $13.33⅓ per bale. Let us say these losses are an average of only $10 per bale, and that I, as a cotton producer, would receive the benefit in increased price of only one-half of the resultant saving from the new methods, or $5 per bale. This saving would give me an advance of $1,000 to $1,500 a year on my average crop of two to three hundred bales, and if I can sell my cotton for anything like $1,000 a year additional because of improved methods, it would pay me well to lose $3,000 on the dismantling of my gin.

"But, while there are several hundred thousand cotton planters in the United States, there are only about 20,000 of them who own gins, and only about 10,000 who, like myself, would find their gins in the discard. The big majority of cotton growers, who gin at public or neighborhood gins, would not suffer any loss through having to dismantle a gin, as they do not possess one, and they, as well as the owners of the discarded gins, would reap the benefit of this advance of $5 per bale. Moreover, it would be impracticable to put in high-density presses at a rate faster than about 1,000 per year, if all the gin owners so desired, because there are a very few on the market, and it would take several years to manufacture and install them. This would permit, or rather necessitate, a gradual change during 10 or more years that would not involve heavy loss on anyone.

"There are about 250 compress plants in the cotton States, which are estimated at $60,000 each, exclusive of warehousing facilities and grounds, a total of $15,000,000. On these plants there would be considerable loss unless the reform is adopted gradually, as it must be necessarily, in which event much of the machinery would pay for itself several times and wear out in service.

"However, if we assume a total loss on the gins of forty millions and on the compresses of twenty millions, a grand total of $60,000,000, this would be much less than one-half of the average annual loss of one hundred and sixty millions on the cotton itself, due to our present bad systems of baling and handling.

"I have tried to point out the most glaring and costly leaks in the methods which obtain generally to-day in dealing with our product, have reduced these leaks as accurately as possible in terms of dollars and cents, and have pleaded the cause of high-density gin compression as the only practical solution of our difficulties. If the direct monetary advantages set forth for this system are founded on fact, then it must certainly be admitted that its adoption would result in other economic advantages which I have not identified with a corresponding saving in actual cash. The following summary, therefore, includes certain factors not previously dealt with:

"High-density gin compression prepares the bale for the spinner at the gin and in accordance with the requirements of cotton spinners and maufacturers in general.

"It reduces the average weight of tare per bale at least 20 pounds.

"It covers the bale completely, and protects it effectually from dirt, trash, country damage, and loss of lint in transit.

"It provides a uniform tare per bale and removes the present arbitrary Liverpool deduction of 6 per cent.

"It prevents excessive sampling and resampling. Gin-compressed cotton should be sampled but once—while the bale is being pressed—but it can be resampled, if desired, with perfect satisfaction to buyers.

"This bale can be easily handled with trucks and without the use of hooks.

"It can be more conveniently stored on account of its great reduction in size from the plantation bale.

"The improved covering will retain identification marks from gin to spinner, domestic or foreign.

"This system reduces artificial absorption of water when the bale is exposed to dampness or rain.

"It prevents gradual loss in weight from which a more loosely packed bale suffers.

"It will secure minimum freight rates on land, and has already received a voluntary reduction of 25 cents per hundred pounds in ocean freight rates.

"It has already received material reduction in marine insurance, and will receive reduced domestic rates on account of its compactness and a minimum danger from damage by fire.

"It will make possible the adoption of the much desired net-weight contract in the purchase and sale of American cotton.

"It means prompt shipment from points of origin and quick delivery to final points of destination.

"It will prevent congestion of the cotton crop at large compress plants during the fall and winter months each year.

"It will enable railroads to move and handle the crop with less than one-third of the present rolling stock and equipment employed.

"It will prevent arbitrations and reclamations for differences in grades, tare, and weights between local shippers and exporters.

"And, finally, it will produce an absolutely honest bale of cotton for the grower, the middle man, and the spinner.

"On the 8th day of last March I introduced in the United States Senate a bill requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission to 'establish and enforce preferential rates on shipments of cotton based upon the cubic contents of the bale,' and in reaching its decision to 'take into consideration the density of the bale, the amount of space it occupies, its uniformity in size, the character of its covering as a safeguard against damage or fire, and any other points that seem fairly to entitle it to favorable discrimination.'

"This is a measure of the greatest importance, and I sincerely hope it will receive your cordial support. This bill, or a similar one, would insure fair treatment for gin-compressed cotton, which has been denied it in the past, and if we can get a square deal for it from the railroads and steamboats, such as ocean steamers now give, no earthly power can hold it back.

"Gentlemen of the convention, I hope and believe this large gathering of cotton growers from every State in the South will evolve practical plans to apply the only remedy that promises sure and speedy cure of our ailment, and that remedy, I repeat, is high-density gin compression. We should all determine to adopt it as speedily as possible in our own gins and should put the whole force of our American Cotton Association behind it.

"At the present crucial period in national transportation, when there is the greatest scarcity of cars for all kinds of commerce, especially bulky commodities like cotton and lumber and heavy low-class articles, such as coal and road material, it would be unpatriotic if cotton producers fail to adopt new methods of baling and marketing which would save more than a hundred millions in money and dispense with the use of more than 300,000 cars every year. Indeed, it would be an economic crime during this trying era, when everyone who loves his country should produce and conserve to the utmost, not to adopt such a reform."

GOVERNMENT OF GREECE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution, S. Res. 364, was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the sovereignty of the Government of Greece has been extended over the ancestral and national Greek territories in Thrace, Smyrna, and the islands of the Ægean Sea; and

Whereas the redemption of the Greeks from alien rule, the liberation of Greek culture from foreign submergence, the reintegration of the national territory and establishment of the political unity of the Greeks, have been the consistent aim and policy of the Government of Greece from the time of its liberation and independence; and

Whereas the United States was one of the first Governments to recognize the independence of Greece, and has observed with gratification and good will the progressive realization of the national aims and policies of Greece: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States congratulates the peoples and the Government of Greece upon the reintegration of their ancient territories, the liberation of their people from alien rule, and expresses its best wishes for the unity, progress, and welfare of the Greek people.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Washington Post of yesterday informed the public that—

The executive committee of the American Legion has been called to Washington next week in an effort to force through Congress a soldier bonus bill before the convention recess, it was learned yesterday at Legion headquarters here.

Plans are for the committee to continue in session until the measure is passed or until the recess is taken, which probably will be early in June.

If the bill fails, a delegation will be sent to each convention to obtain approval of the bonus in the party platform, it was learned.

A very short time ago Congress, by a practically unanimous vote, passed a measure to incorporate the American Legion. I am sure that nearly every Member of the two Houses was impelled in his action upon that measure by the very lofty and patriotic announcement made by the representatives of that legion as to their purposes and objects in associating themselves together, and in desiring a national charter. I read that announcement more than once, and each time with a feeling of pride, for the objects to be attained, as outlined in its pronunciamento, were thoroughly desirable and very necessary, for at this time, and in the coming time, an organization such as the American Legion purported to be will prove more than serviceable in aiding the Government of the United States, as well as the State governments and municipalities, to continue in their orderly and constitutional way, and by that means give continued security to life and property.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may have misunderstood the Senator, but as I understand him he approved of the plan to obtain a Federal charter for that organization. I inquire of the Senator, because that matter is now before the Judiciary Committee, whether he thinks it is within the power of the Federal Government to grant charters to organizations of this character for work which really seems to be private in character? Does the Senator think it is so much of a governmental organization as that the Federal Government would be justified under the Constitution in granting a Federal charter?

Mr. THOMAS. As an abstract proposition, Mr. President, I doubt very seriously the existence of such power. Unfortunately, however, we have exercised it, not once but many times, and consequently precedents have been established which may be said generally at least to excuse or condone the practice if not to justify it. I construed the doubt in favor of the applicants for that reason, as well as for the reason to which I previously referred. But I felt an apprehension that however lofty the declarations of the legion, it would be prone to fall into the control and under the influence of those desiring to use its potential possibilities for other than the purposes ostensibly declared to lie at its foundation. However, I was not prepared to see my apprehensions verified so very shortly after the incorporation was granted.

I hope, Mr. President, that the statement which I read at the commencement of my remarks will prove unfounded. I sincerely trust that it is not the purpose of the executive committee of this organization to convert itself into a lobby within the year of its birth, and by its officials assume to visit Washington and set up headquarters and attempt to force legislation in its favor through the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. STERLING. I want to make a little statement.

Mr. THOMAS. I think I know what the Senator wants to do, and I will detain the Senate but two or three moments longer.

Mr. STERLING. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. If, however, it should be developed in the immediate future that this statement is true, and that such a situation will confront us, then, in my judgment, we should seriously consider the question of revoking that charter, because this is but the beginning of a political activity and regarding legislation in the interest not of all but of some of the membership, which will crystallize into a custom, and concentrate in the city of Washington among the other combinations now here, and for the purpose of influencing legislation, either positive or negative, a combination of service men demanding first one and then another species of legislation, until the original objects for which the organization was created and upon the strength of which its charter was granted shall have been lost sight of entirely.

I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I understand that the conference report will be the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be if we adjourned right now.

Mr. STERLING. In view of the fact that this is Saturday evening, and the Senate has been in session since 12 o'clock, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 17, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 15, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, with open hearts and receptive minds we wait upon Thee at the beginning of this new congressional day, that we may take up the duties as they present themselves to us wisely, sincerely, conscientiously, patriotically, and at its close feel Thine approbation and the approbation of those here represented, sleep soundly, and awake refreshed for the duties of a new day; and Thine be the praise through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—SALTS AGAINST MAJOR.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I shall call up the contested-election case of Salts against Major, from the seventh congressional district of Missouri.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TO PRESIDE TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will designate as the Speaker pro tempore to preside to-morrow Mr. HUTCHINSON, of New Jersey.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13555, the fortification bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13555, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. It is the conference report on the fortification bill.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the statement so comprehensive as to enlighten the House?

Mr. SLEMP. I suggest that both be read. They are brief.

Mr. GARD. If it is not long, I suggest that that be done.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report and accompanying statement.

The conference report and accompanying statement were read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and agree to the same.

C. B. SLEMP,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
WM. S. KENYON,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the committee of conference and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Appropriates $1,600,000, as proposed by the House, for ammunition for Field Artillery, instead of $2,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 2: Appropriates $350,000, as proposed by the House, for current expenses of the ordnance proving grounds, instead of $500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 3: Appropriates $130,000, as proposed by the House, for land defenses in the Hawaiian Islands, instead of $560,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 4: Provides for the preparation of plans for fortifications and other works of defense in the Hawaiian Islands, as proposed by the Senate, instead of the Philippine Island, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 5: Strikes out the provisions, proposed by the Senate, continuing available until June 30, 1921, the unexpended balances of appropriations for aviation purposes in connection with the seacoast defenses in the insular possessions, and establishing limits of costs for buildings to be erected in the same connection.

On amendment No. 6: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, continuing available until June 30, 1921, the unexpended balance of the appropriation made in the act of July 8, 1918, for the purchase or reclamation of land for the defense of the Panama Canal.

On amendment No. 7: Inserts the words "or contracts," as proposed by the Senate, in the paragraph relating to orders for work placed with arsenals or other ordnance establishments.

On amendments Nos. 8, 9, and 10: provides for covering additional sums into the Treasury, aggregating $80,146.20, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 11: Changes total of appropriations to be covered into the Treasury.

On amendment No. 12: Strikes out the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, relative to the abolition or removal from any one of the arsenals of the United States any permanent department or shop established by legislative act prior to April 6, 1917, unless authorized by law.

C. B. SLEMP,
BURTON L. FRENCH,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] desires to extend his remarks on the conference report.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SLEMP, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order to-day, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, before beginning my message for this hour I feel constrained to pay special tribute, if by no more than an upward look, to the distinguished visitors present, largely members of the Southern Baptist Convention now in session here. The records show that 8,300 had registered as delegates, to say nothing of the thousands of visitors.

I call attention to almost a national tragedy—that there is no auditorium in this Nation's Capital large enough to take care of half of the visitors to our city, and as all patriotic citizens naturally love to visit the capital of their Nation and as such visits do so much to increase the patriotism of the people I believe that this Congress ought to move speedily to the erection of a great auditorium, seating 10,000 or 15,000, that will invite great gatherings of people of patriotic and religious purpose to visit the beautiful Capital of our country.

The nature of my speech to-day is a surprise to me, and it will be a surprise to my colleagues on the floor and many of the visitors in the galleries who have been invited to hear another subject discussed. I had announced that I expected to speak to-day on my bill for a Federal pension to Confederate soldiers. I had expected to bring this message, as God is my witness, not so much for the brave old soldiers of the Southland as for my country's sake, basing my contention, not on one single bitter memory of the sixties, but purely on the ground of our blood-bought national fellowship and the proven loyalty of the Confederate soldiers through 50 years of peace, and their sons through two victorious wars. But yesterday I received an avalanche of requests, inside the House and outside among my friends, urging that I address myself in this hour to another important matter, postponing the intended message to some later date; and that other matter deals, I think, with just about the most vital thing before the American people.

Another reason I yielded to this request was that there is to be a great celebration out at Arlington, with parades covering the streets at this very hour, preparing for the dedication of the amphitheater, and I am anxious for all the Members of this House, especially all those on the northern side, to hear the full message I have prepared for the supreme purpose of increasing our national fellowship.

But before I come to the subject in hand, allow me to say in the spirit of good-fellowship that during my brief career as a legislator—my first year in Congress—I have loved most our seasons of common interest and not the times of partisan division. I have loved most the hour of the common purpose that has caused us to shake hands, and not to shake fists at each other across the political aisle. I have a rather proud memory that in my first utterance on the floor of this House I said I would love to see a political armistice, especially during the days of our reconstruction legislation, when we might impress the anxious people whom we represent that we are here, not striving primarily for partisan advantage, but working side by side for our country's safety and for our national glory.

A TRAVESTY AT ARLINGTON.

But I would be recreant to an impulse of loyalty, not only to my own section but I believe to the flag as well, if I did not protest against one thing that is taking place to-day at Arlington. William McKinley, the martyred President, when visiting my home city of Atlanta to help us celebrate the victorious termination of the Spanish-American War, said that it "Is now time for the National Government to care for the graves of Confederate soldiers."

I have a conviction that if he were here, if that indescribable American, Theodore Roosevelt, were here, with the rich blood of the southern cavalier in his veins, shrining the memory of his queenly Georgia mother—yea, if Abraham Lincoln were here, a son of the South and the great apostle of human freedom; if the soldierly and magnanimous Grant were here, who took to his bosom southern leaders like Longstreet, Mosby, and others after the war, and who died with the prayer on his lips, "Let us have peace"—I have a feeling that if this great quartet of statesmen and patriots were here to-day they would feel hurt in their hearts to attend the dedication of that amphitheater out yonder, built out of the money of all the people, built at the home of Robert E. Lee, who was a hero in the war with Mexico, and who was himself not only a graduate of West Point, but at one time the honored superintendent of that great military post; Lee whose matchless military genius and stainless Christian character are the priceless heritage of all Americans—I believe that if those great leaders of the North and the Nation could be present and see the name of Robert E. Lee denied a place on the roster of America's great ones in that amphitheater they would be deeply grieved.

And John B. Gordon is not there, gallant son of southern knighthood, who was a Senator of the United States after being governor of Georgia, and who spent the evening of his brilliant life, as John Temple Graves said of Henry Grady, "literally loving the Nation into peace." And Stonewall Jackson is not there—another brave soldier of the Mexican War, the noble educator, and the Christian hero, who spent his Sunday evenings teaching a negro Sunday school the word of God, that they might be better members of society. And "Fighting Joe" Wheeler, once a Member of this Congress, and before and after the Civil War an officer in the United States Army, whose name is forever linked with the name of Theodore Roosevelt at San Juan Hill. Instead of being able to ride on a dashing charger, as Roosevelt did in that memorable battle, Gen. Wheeler was carried on a stretcher to the battle lines in order that he might give his voice and his presence for the defense of the Stars and Stripes we all love. Great God of love and freedom and fairness, forgive the unthinkable spirit that would keep Joe Wheeler's name off the honor roll at Arlington! Of one thing I am sure: If Theodore Roosevelt, who issued an Executive order placing Gen. Wheeler's rank as a Confederate officer on his tomb at Arlington, were here, freshened by the memory of Wheeler's fight for our common flag at San Juan Hill, he would never allow his fighting comrade's name left off of that Arlington honor roll to-day.

And time would fail me to call every name of every southern leader whose valor in war and whose loyalty in peace have added a new halo to the brow of American heroism.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Pardon me, but I can not begin to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I should just like to have the gentleman answer one question.

Mr. UPSHAW. All right, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman complain and protest because the loyal people of the United States refused to pay tribute to the men who were traitors to the country in its time of greatest distress?

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman hear this? I did not intend——

Mr. RAYBURN. I move to strike those words from the RECORD.

Mr. UPSHAW. Never mind; I am willing——

Mr. RAYBURN. They are an insult to every man——

Mr. UPSHAW. I have come here in the spirit of love and fellowship——

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield at this time, of course.

Mr. UPSHAW. I believe it would be a beautiful thing for this Congress on this very day of that dedication——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I ask that the words of the gentleman from Illinois be taken down.

Mr. UPSHAW. No; do not do that.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think the colleagues of the gentleman from Illinois will back him up in that statement.

Mr. UPSHAW. Never mind—don't do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is not recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. You have got bigger men on that side of the aisle than that.

Mr. UPSHAW. Please do not strike them out—let his words stand.

Mr. BLANTON. There is not a man on that side who will O. K. what the gentleman said.

Mr. UPSHAW. I must decline to yield further. I believe it would be a beautiful thing if this House, in the spirit of our present-day fellowship, would this day pass the resolution of Gen. SHERWOOD, the hero of more than 30 battles in the Union Army, simply asking this Congress to correct that giant wrong; and I expect to insert in my extension of remarks a letter from Dr. Clarence J. Owens, a former commander of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, to President Wilson concerning this matter.

DO THE STARS HAVE ANY MEANING?

Let me say this to the gentleman from Illinois and to all of my colleagues, that if the star on that flag back of the Speaker's chair which answers to the name of Georgia means anything, and if the star of every other State from the Potomac to the Rio Grande that nurtures upon its bosom these brave old heroes who for more than half a hundred years have been loyal to the Stars and Stripes—if it means anything at all, it means that every citizen beneath those stars is a brother to his brothers everywhere. [Applause.]

And if this Government has been willing to see these brave old heroes march in unmurmuring loyalty to the Treasury of the Nation for more than 50 years, and ungrudgingly pay the pensions of their victorious brothers; if this Government has been willing to find the name of a Confederate soldier when it has wanted to sell Liberty bonds and raise the revenues of war; if this Government has been willing to visit the hearthstone of every soldier of the South and find there the brave boys, some now sleeping in graves of the Spanish-American War and others beneath the poppies of France, and take them to fight side by side with the boys of the North for that flag for which "Fighting Joe" Wheeler went to the front on a stretcher, to fight and maybe to die, at San Juan Hill, then in God's name it is time for any narrow, little partisan spirit to be forever driven from this House and from the American people, and let us love each other like brothers. [Great applause.]

My father, who wore the gray of the Confederate soldier, and who taught his sons to love the Stars and Stripes, always said that the war could have been averted if only the people could have understood each other, and that the honesty and bravery of the southern soldier in tenaciously clinging to his lifetime concept of the meaning of the Constitution made him just as much a hero as the honest soldier of the North who clung likewise tenaciously to his concept of duty to the Union.

Alas, it was "the strife of brothers," and no brave soldier of the North who faced the heroic soldier of the South ever felt like applying the brand of "traitor" to his heroic adversary. And when the misunderstanding was over and the great family quarrel settled in God's own appointed time the happy children, once estranged, gathered under the same roof tree, happy in the hand clasp of reconciliation and peace. And the man who calls the loyal soldier of the South "a traitor" after more than 50 years of proven devotion to the flag of our reunited country is as near to blindness, it seems to me, as he is far removed from that bravery and that magnanimous manhood which are essential to the happiness and security of the land we love. The war of the Revolution could never have been won without the South; the War of 1812 could never have been won without the South; the War with Mexico, that stretched our dominion from sea to sea, could never have been won without the South; the war of the sixties, for the permanence of the Union, would never have been fought and won but for the South's honest devotion to a sacred constitutional concept; the War with Spain was not won without the South; and the war with Germany, God knows, could never have been won without the sons and daughters of the South.

Where, O where, can you find justification for the narrow spirit—the callous philosophy that would shut out from this governmental recognition the leaders of those who come from the sun-kissed home of warm-hearted chivalry—the brave and noble people, the glory of whose valor, the beauty of whose sufferings, and the enterprise and fidelity of whose sons and daughters have made such a priceless contribution to the building of our common country? And I would have to apologize to my manhood if I were to submit without protest to this Arlington discrimination against the fathers and builders of that glorious section whose salutary influence in lofty patriotism, in orthodox religion, and in progressive commerce have made a veritable gulf stream of blessing flowing through the Nation's larger life and fructifying every shore that it has touched.

THE LAW RECOGNIZED THE SOUTHERN SOLDIER.

And to show that we are right in this contention, and that the framers of the law making this appropriation for the amphitheater did not intend that the southern soldier should be left out, I quote the following section of the bill:

For completing the construction, under the direction of a commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds; John McElroy, representing the Grand Army of the Republic; the commander of Camp No. 171, United Confederate Veterans of the District of Columbia; and Charles W. Newton, representing the United Spanish War Veterans, of a memorial amphitheater, including a chapel, at the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., and in accordance with the plans of Carrere & Hastings, architects, of New York City, adopted by the commission heretofore appointed, and for each and every purpose in connection therewith, $75,000, to remain available until expended; and the limit of cost of the said memorial is increased from $750,000 to $825,000.

In consonance with the spirit of this legislative act and the splendid devotion to the fellowship of the Nation which he has served so well through the Southern Commercial Congress in building "A Greater Nation Through a Greater South," Dr. Clarence J. Owens, of Washington, D. C., has written the following ringing letter to President Wilson:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 10, 1920.

President WOODROW WILSON,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT WILSON: The Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, according to announcement, will be dedicated May 15. The Congress of the United States in providing for this memorial provided for a Confederate veteran to be a member of the commission. This action was construed to make the program for the erection of the memorial cover every part of the United States.

Secretaries Baker and Daniels are sons of Confederate veterans. They have permitted John McElroy, representing the Grand Army of the Republic, to dominate the plans for the memorial to the extent that not a single southern military hero is honored in the memorial.

Herewith I am sending to you, in chronological order, the effort that I have put forth to correct this grave injustice to our fathers of the South. You will note that Secretary Baker stated that the inclusion of Confederate veterans was a peace offering to the South, whereas I replied that we understood that the peace offering was made at Appomattox and that the reunion was made complete when the stars representing the South were put back into the flag. Secretary Baker stated that President Alderman acted as a member of the committee that selected the names to be engraved on the memorial. The correspondence will disclose the fact that President Alderman acted under a misapprehension as to his prerogative, and he makes explanation. While his explanation to a great degree is satisfactory, yet from my own point of view I can not condone his acquiescence in the plan to omit all southern names and his ignorance of the inclusion of a Confederate veteran on the commission.

The articles appearing in the Sunday Star of May 9, written by John McElroy, and in the Washington Post of May 10, by Mrs. D. W. Ball, clearly indicate the spirit that is animating those who are in control of the plans for the dedication of the memorial. McElroy is a member of the commission, and he and Mrs. Ball point out the fact that the United States Government paid $150,000 for an estate valued at $34,000 by the assessors in 1860; that the United States bought Arlington for $26,000 in 1864 in a tax sale; and that Arlington, "never the property of Robert E. Lee," cost the United States $176,000. There is clear-cut animus back behind these statements. You are aware of the fact that Arlington was confiscated and sold for taxes when the amount due was approximately $100, and that it was not the negotiation of the heirs to the Lee estate with the United States resulting in the final purchase price, but that it was a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the Lee heirs that inspired the Congress of the United States to make the appropriation in reparation for the confiscation.

Gen. SHERWOOD has introduced the joint resolution, copy of which is inclosed, but Congressman GOULD, chairman of the Library Committee, states that there is no opportunity to report this measure out before the adjournment, and therefore before the dedication, and hence for all present purposes the proposed legislation will be of no avail.

You will see that Congressman GOULD regards the act of Secretary Baker and the commission as presumptious, in that there is no authority of law for the placing of memorials in the amphitheater, and points out that a bill now pending, that has received the approval of Secretary Baker, provides expressly that this prerogative of the selection of names for the amphitheater shall be left with the Congress of the United States.

The appeal is now made to you direct to take such steps as may be necessary to not only correct the injustice above referred to, but to exhibit to our people in all parts of the United States the solidarity of America and the fidelity of the men of the South on a parity with the men of other parts of our common country in defense of the flag and humanity on the battle fields of the Spanish-American War and the Great World War.

With the hope that this memorandum may have your immediate and sympathetic consideration, and with best wishes for your own health and happiness, I have the honor, sir, to remain,

Cordially and sincerely,

CLARENCE J. OWENS,
Director General.

NO BACKWARD STEP MUST BE TAKEN.

But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the special matter that has attracted my attention and to which I have been asked to address myself comes in a resolution passed yesterday by the great Southern Baptist Convention, and also a remark made before that convention by the honored Vice President of the United States. In making that address of welcome the Vice President playfully said in his brilliant way, "I think you good people ought to give your attention to preaching the gospel and not bother with politics and with law." I want to remind my colleagues and all who hear me in the galleries that if that is true it would emasculate the citizenship of every loyal man in America who belongs to any church. I stand in reverent memory to-day by the sacred dust of my noble father, who taught his boys around the family altar two proverbs: First, it is the duty of every man to take an intelligent interest in the things of government.

Second, if good men do not control this Government then bad men will; and his son, who occupies a place in this House largely as a fulfillment of the impact of that influence, has put his father's words into another aphorism, if you please—that it is the duty of every man to project his citizenship beyond the church-house door. If my Baptist pioneer ancestors had not wrought their influence upon the unformed instrument of the Constitution, we might to-day have a state church in America, and we would not have had the world's fullest meaning of religious freedom and the separation of church and state. [Applause.] Thomas Jefferson said that he got his concept of the American Union "from witnessing the deliberations of a little backwoods Baptist church in the mountains of Virginia"—that he learned from them the fundamental principles of liberty of conscience, freedom of soul and absolute divorcement of the church from the state in all matters of conscience and support.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read the resolution offered by that great preacher-statesman, Dr. A. J. Barton, of Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana, and passed yesterday by the convention, representing 3,000,000 white Baptists in the South:

Whereas prohibition is now a part of the Constitution of the United States and is no longer a political question but a question of respect for and the enforcement of law, a question of the authority of the whole people expressed in law; and

Whereas the brewers and their paid attorneys are making every possible effort to circumvent and nullify the law by making beer and wine an entering wedge for the return of the saloon; and

Whereas the said brewers and their paid attorneys claim that there is a reaction in the public mind against prohibition: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Southern Baptist Convention in annual session assembled in Washington, D. C., May 12–17, 1920, with 8,000 messengers enrolled, representing a constituency of 3,000,000 white Baptists, That we hereby respectfully and earnestly petition each of the two great political parties of the United States to put a plank in their respective platforms to be adopted at their approaching national conventions declaring strongly for the maintenance and enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, and of the law enacted for its enforcement.

Second. That we also petition said parties not to nominate any man for the Presidency who is not known to be committed to this policy of law and order.

Third. That the committee on temperance and social service be, and the same is hereby, authorized and instructed to communicate a copy of these resolutions to the chairman of the executive committee of each of the two great parties.

These resolutions furnish an inspiring illustration of the militant purpose of 3,000,000 men and women who believe in

"bothering about Congress and the laws" by being vigilant citizens in the kingdom of men as well as the kingdom of God.

I put over by the side of this brave and ominous utterance of the Southern Baptist Convention the statement of the committee of six, representing 22 national antiliquor organizations in this country, in which they bring out in eight powerful points the reasons why there should be no laxity at this early day, or any other day as for that, on the question of prohibition and law enforcement.

The following represents the attitude of the combined temperance forces in their appeal to the national political conventions to adopt a plank to sustain and enforce the eighteenth amendment and the Federal prohibition code. The reasons set forth in this document are conclusive, and they ought to have weight not only with the convention but with every law-abiding citizen in the Nation:

To the members of the platform committees of the national political party conventions:

In your consideration of the planks that should be inserted in the national platform, we respectfully submit that the eighteenth amendment and its enforcement should be favorably considered.

This amendment was adopted in the face of greater opposition than any other part of the Constitution. The investigation of the brewers, their corrupt practices and unpatriotic activities, reveals the vicious methods used by that traffic to continue its existence. We attach hereto a copy of the findings of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, after taking over 6,000 pages of sworn testimony, as to the correctness of the charges made in Senate resolution No. 307. That testimony, with the findings of that committee, represents the most astounding disclosure ever made relating to the corrupt methods of the liquor traffic.

In spite of this organized opposition and the difficulties that stood in the way of securing an amendment to the Constitution, more than two-thirds of the Members of Congress voted to submit the national prohibition amendment to the States for ratification or rejection. The number of Republicans who voted for it in the House was 137, the number against it 62. We inclose herewith data which shows a more detailed analysis of the vote for the use of the committee.

In less than 14 months, 45 State legislatures ratified the eighteenth amendment, after it was submitted, representing by majority rule of these legislatures over 95 per cent of the population and 98 per cent of the territory of the Nation.

There is no legal method to repeal that amendment but by its resubmission by Congress and the repeal of ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

Just as one branch of the legislature in 13 States could prevent ratification (which means fewer than 200 State senators out of every 6,500 members of the legislatures of the 48 States) so an equal number can prevent the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. It is manifest, therefore, that this issue has resolved itself into a question of law and order and the effective enforcement of a constitutional provision.

The Congress by a vote of more than two-thirds majority enacted a law enforcement code as authorized by the Constitution. Its provisions are precedented by those in more than 30 States, which have for years dealt with the law enforcement problem of prohibition. The standard fixed in that law for defining what is intoxicating liquor has been sustained in principle by the supreme courts in practically all of the States and the Supreme Court of the United States. In fact, even stronger definitions have been adopted in some of the State prohibition laws.

The United States Supreme Court in sustaining the constitutionality of the war prohibition act, defining the term, "intoxicating liquor," which definition is identical with that of the permanent prohibition code, and in the case of Ruppert v. Caffey, decided January 15, 1920.

"For the legislation and decisions of the highest courts of nearly all of the States established that it is deemed impossible to effectively enforce either prohibitory or other laws merely regulating the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, if liability or inclusion within the law is made to depend upon the issuable fact whether or not a particular liquor made or sold as a beverage is intoxicating.

"In other words, it clearly appears that a liquor law, to be capable of effective enforcement, must, in the opinion of the legislatures and courts of the several States, be made to apply either to all liquors of the species enumerated, like beer, ale, or wine, regardless of the presence or degree of alcoholic content; or if a more general description is used, such as distilled, rectified, spirituous, fermented, malt, or brewed liquors, to all liquors within the general description regardless of alcoholic content; or to such of these liquors as contain a named percentage of alcohol; and often several such standards are combined so that certain specific and generic liquors are altogether forbidden and such other liquors as contain a given percentage of alcohol. * * *

"A test often used to determine whether a beverage is to be deemed intoxicating within the meaning of the liquor law is whether it contains one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. * * *

"The decisions of the courts as well as the action of the legislatures make it clear, or, at least, furnish grounds upon which Congress reasonably might conclude—that a rigid classification of beverages is an essential or either effective prohibition of intoxicating liquors."

The court then quoted with approval the case of Purity Extract Co. v. Lynch (226 U. S., 192), which reads as follows:

"The State, within the limits we have stated, must decide upon the measures that are needful for the protection of its people, and, having regard to the artifices which are used to promote the sale of intoxicants under the guise of innocent beverages, it would constitute an unwarranted departure from accepted principle to hold that the prohibition of the sale of all malt liquors including the beverage in question, was beyond its reserved power. * * *

"That the Federal Government would, in attempting to enforce a prohibitory law, be confronted with difficulties similar to those encountered by the States is obvious; and both this experience of the States, and the need of the Federal Government of legislation defining intoxicating liquors, as was done in the Volstead Act, clearly set forth in the reports of the House Committee on the Judiciary in reporting the bill to the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, Report 1143, February 26, 1919, and to the Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, Report 91, June 30, 1919. * * *

"It is, therefore, both clear that Congress might reasonably have considered some legislative definition of intoxicating liquor to be essential to effective enforcement of prohibition, and also that the definition provided by the Volstead Act was not an arbitrary one."

In the light of this decision and the experience of the States, it is manifest that any liberalization of this standard is an attack upon the Nation's enforcement of the law, and would in fact be winking at lawlessness.

These reasons set forth by the courts and followed by the State legislatures relating to beer and wine exemptions have also been accepted by the people. Soon after prohibition was adopted in Michigan, a State referendum was taken on a so-called light wine and beer amendment. Prohibition carried in the first election in Michigan by 68,000. The beer and wine amendment was defeated in 1919 by 207,000. Ohio voted for prohibition in 1918 by approximately 24,000. After the soldiers returned in 1919, the brewers brought on a referendum for the repeal of prohibition and a 2.75 per cent beer and wine amendment. The prohibition repeal was defeated by 41,853, almost double the first dry majority, and the beer and wine amendment by 29,781. Similar referenda have been taken in Washington, Arizona, Oregon, and Colorado with the same results. The advocates of beer and wine have always been defeated in State legislatures and in Congress in their attempt to provide an exemption of these alcoholic beverages. It means the continuance of the beer saloon, which was the most corrupting influence in the community. The people, the legislatures, and Congress know that it is a subterfuge to defeat the enforcement of the prohibition laws. The Attorney General, A. Mitchell Palmer, was right when he said in a communication to Senator SHEPPARD when the prohibition code was pending:

"Referring to the proposed definition, I do not think the wisdom of such action on the part of Congress admits to doubt. It goes without saying, I think, that if a law merely prohibits intoxicating liquors and leaves to the jury in each case, from the evidence produced, to determine whether the liquor in question is in fact intoxicating or not, its efficient and uniform administration will be impossible."

This so-called demand from the rank and file of the people for a beer-and-wine amendment is not real, as the votes on this issue show. It is brewery propaganda to cripple law enforcement. Until the amendment itself is repealed or modified, every loyal citizen and every faithful official is duty bound to stand for its enforcement. This admittedly sane policy of standing for the enforcement of the law can not be encouraged or carried out by raising the standard of alcoholic content in beverage liquors. Every prohibition State that has tried it has repudiated the experiment as a failure. Georgia, with a 2 per cent beer exemption, soon discovered that it was impossible to enforce the law in that form. In addition, the weakening of this standard would mean adopting a Federal policy in direct conflict with the standards set in at least 34 States of the Union.

WET PROPAGANDA AGAINST PROHIBITION.

The liquor interests in their effort to save beer and wine and discredit national prohibition have carried on a propaganda for many months to deceive the public concerning the facts in connection with the eighteenth amendment. They have done this on a large scale while the friends of prohibition were assuming that the amendment having been submitted and ratified by overwhelming majorities, the question had resolved itself into a matter of law enforcement. As a matter of fact, it has, because by the constitutional methods of amending the Federal organic law the liquor interests would need affirmative action by 36 States in both branches, whereas 33 States have already adopted prohibition, and 4 others State prohibition-enforcement codes, and a single branch of the State legislature in 13 States can prevent repeal.

The same public sentiment that carried prohibition in the States and in the Nation by such overwhelming popular and legislative majorities is less active now because of the confidence that all patriotic citizens and organizations will as a matter of course support the enforcement of the laws of the United States. But if conditions compel, that sentiment will undoubtedly be aroused and will assert itself with even greater power than heretofore manifested.

HOW PROHIBITION WORKS.

In spite of this campaign of misrepresentation, the facts show that prohibition is being accepted by the people generally as an accomplished fact. It is proving daily that its enforcement is a great economic, social, moral, and political blessing. We submit in Exhibit D attached hereto some of the rapidly accumulating testimony on this point.

It is manifest in the face of these facts and conditions that every political party which has stood for law and order and the integrity and unity of the Federal Government, should favor a strong plank for the eighteenth amendment and its honest enforcement, and that any backward step will not be countenanced in the weakening of the law, or in the making of its enforcement more difficult or impracticable. The American creed binds us all to support the Constitution of the United States, and to obey and help enforce the laws of our country. If the brewers of this Nation are permitted by subterfuge to nullify the eighteenth amendment by a so-called light wine and beer amendment, or to prevent the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment in the prohibition enforcement code, then any other class of lawbreakers may use the same or similar methods to defy the laws of the land, and the Government will then be in jeopardy.

Law enforcement is essential to the perpetuity of orderly government, and we believe now is the time for a clear, clarion declaration by the political parties for a greater respect for law, and the party which makes this declaration clearest and most emphatic for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, and effective laws enacted pursuant thereto, will secure the support of the largest majority of the voters.

We make this appeal to you on behalf of the National Temperance Council, made up of 22 national temperance and prohibition organizations. We trust that you will give it your careful and favorable consideration.

Let the "blind leaders of the blind" who foolishly hope to bring liquor back to the legalized protection of our flag ponder well these two sweeping declarations. I have been led to speak on this subject partly by the speech of my genial friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], in which he sought to prove at this early day, when prohibition has had no opportunity to fully express itself, the failure of prohibition, and in which he referred to the presence of many stills in the mountains of Georgia and the Carolinas, and what not. I only remind him that the presence of these stills—and we are smashing them right and left—is but the evidence of a devilish appetite created by the legalized saloon—fighting our effort to get straightened out after the country has been on a big drunk all of these years—after whisky has wrought its havoc upon the people. I also remind him that the figures show that in New York and Baltimore, and even in his own Boston itself, there are countless illicit makers and sellers of rum.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] said, by some strange deduction, that it would cost $88,000,000 a year to enforce the prohibition law, when the facts here, as brought out by careful investigation, show that the actual cost is only about $5,000,000 a year, and computing from the experience of a district in Michigan and another district incorporating Virginia, the facts bear out the assertion that the fines and forfeitures thus far have more than taken care of the amount allotted by the National Government for the enforcement of this law. But even if it did cost that much outright, what is that compared with the annual drink bill of $2,500,000,000 in America, plus the unspeakable depletion of the earning capacity of millions of men and women, plus also the cost of police courts and prisons everywhere?

A SOLEMN WARNING.

I come to bring you in good fellowship this solemn warning, and in saying this thing I want to declare that I stand with uncovered head before the marble integrity and splendid manhood of many of my colleagues who do not agree with me on this question. In my long fight before coming to Congress, for the enactment of this law, I proceeded upon this fundamental motto: "Love for the saloonkeeper but death to the saloon." And so what I say is wholly impersonal.

Down in my city we have a genial merchant, "Bob" Broyles, who is a volcanic orator. He is also gloriously "dry" and gloriously red-headed. He told me the story of a boy who came down the street crying. A policeman said to him, "Sonny, what are you crying about?" The boy replied, "That boy said that my sister was red-headed and I climbed him and got bunged up." The policeman said, "Well, ain't your sister red-headed?" and the boy replied, "No; I ain't even got no sister; it is just the principle of the thing." [Laughter.] So, when a man says, "I do not drink myself, but I am against prohibition on principle," I am compelled to reach the conclusion that if his principle makes him in favor of the sale of liquor and his neighbor's principle makes him opposed to it, then the thing that influences him is a liquor principle. And I would be afraid to sleep with such a thing.

But I am not here to discuss the fundamental issues in detail. I come to this hour seeking to send this message as broadcast as I may, because I find so many good men forgetting the danger of influential utterances on this question. This is one of the things I warn against. We want to be law-abiding citizens; we want to do everything to build up a sober, happy Nation; but if Members of this Congress, influential in the leadership of their own sections, and if other prominent leaders of America right now, when this law is only beginning, suffer themselves to make rash public utterances that discourage law enforcement, they are hurting the meaning and the spirit of our Government. Some thoughtless people say that the fight is over.

IS THE FIGHT OVER?

Is the fight over? May we fold our hands and fight no more and give no more to the cause of righteousness? I offer you for your answer the meeting in Chicago last year of a great gathering of the amalgamated, concentrated, "unfumigated" liquor interests, who pooled what they claimed was $2,000,000,000 of their holdings and put as much as they might need into the hands of resourceful lawyers to fight this eighteenth amendment. And newspaper stories have been sent broadcast magnifying every failure and minimizing every success of prohibition.

Do you think the battle is over? I offer you for your answer the fact that last November more than half a million men in Ohio marched to the polls and voted to unratify the constitutional amendment already ratified. Do you think the battle is over? I offer you for your answer the election in New Jersey of a man who declares that he was elected on a plank that "would make New Jersey and the Nation as wet as the Atlantic Ocean." The governor of that State led his legislature to the enactment of a 3½ per cent law, which defiantly tramples the one-half per cent Volstead law that we passed here, a law in consonance with the spirit of the eighteenth amendment. That law declares Congress shall make laws for the enforcement of this act. The governor of Maryland led in a similar tragedy. In doing that they set the example and gave the personal encouragement to every form of lawbreaking that the liquor forces know how to carry out. These liquor men who are declaring prohibition laws "unconstitutional" and crying "Back to the Constitution!" really mean "Back to the barrooms of our fathers!"

I speak not of any one man or party. I speak of the liquor business as a business. It has no conscience or politics. Up yonder in Pennsylvania it stands for "the Grand Old Republican Party." Down in Georgia, where most everybody is a Democrat, I heard one of their attorneys stand before the committee of the whole in the legislature and say, "Oh, sons of Democratic fathers, the principles of democracy call on you to rise in the majesty of your might and drive out this iniquitous fanaticism." Ha! ha! In Kentucky and Ohio, where it is nip and tuck between Republicans and Democrats, the liquor interests stand for "any old thing" that will perpetuate their iniquitous rule.

What is to be done? Listen. I give you over against that dangerous leadership of these "wet" governors the answer of the governor of Massachusetts when he vetoed the 2.75 per cent law. Hear it:

BRAVERY OF GOV. COOLIDGE.

There is little satisfaction in attempting to deceive ourselves. There is grave danger in attempting to deceive the people. If this act were placed on the statute books of this Commonwealth to-day, it would provide no beer for the people. No one would dare act upon it, or if anyone did he would certainly be charged with crime. Similar laws in other States are to date ineffective. I am opposed to the practice of a legislative deception. It is better to proceed with candor.

* * * * * * *

When I took office I took oath to support the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution and the laws of Congress are declared to be the supreme law of the land. It may be that the eighteenth amendment and the act under it are one or both void. So far as any court has decided, I understand the amendment has been sustained. They have been before the Supreme Court for some time, where up to now they both stand as law. That which the court hesitated to decide I shall not hasten to declare. It would be extremely improper to undertake to influence that decision by the action of the law-making power of Massachusetts. Do not anticipate it; await it. My oath was not to take a chance on the Constitution; it was to support it. When the proponents of this measure do not intend to jeopardize their safety by acting upon it, why should I jeopardize my oath by approving it?

This comes as a brave answer from a brave and honored Republican governor of the historic Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Democrat as I am, I crown this loyalty to the Constitution of the United States and to the home interests of the American people, and I rejoice to give the hand of fellowship to Gov. Coolidge as a governor worthy of a great Commonwealth. [Applause.]

Gentleman, the eighteenth amendment found its way into the Constitution by due and orderly process after half a century of a public educational campaign, and when it found its way there by the vote of both Houses of Congress and was indorsed, not by the necessary 36 States but by 45 States of the American Union, I believe that when any governor will lead his people to trample on the national law and the Constitution of the United States itself, and thereby shake his fist at the American flag and say, "My State is bigger than the National Government," I believe that that governor ought to be removed from office, if not put behind the bars. [Applause,]

Gentlemen, here is the danger I bring to you. If we create the spirit of defiance concerning this law we open the door through which a horde of lawbreakers will come and trample with impunity every law that is put on the statute books. I have fought side by side with leaders of all denominations in fighting saloons, including several Catholic priests, therefore I say it with sorrow and warning, but a high dignitary like Cardinal Gibbons, after the law had been passed, when its enactment was about to come into force, gave out a declaration that he was still opposed to prohibition. He said that 20,000 priests would not be able to celebrate mass because they could not get wine. I answer him earnestly and definitely, that there are more than 20,000 ministers of God in this land that celebrate the Lord's Supper with "the fruit of the vine," but not the fermented kind that has the evils of intemperance in it. It is a dangerous thing for a man, high or low, in church or state, to use his influence to discourage the enforcement of a law that was enacted for the guardianship of the sobriety of the manhood and the womanhood of America.

Without reference to the merits of unfermented or fermented wines, permit me to say, however, that there is nothing in the eighteenth amendment that prevents or authorizes the prohibition of the manufacture or sale of wines for sacramental purposes. The following communication was sent by the general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America to the Catholic paper entitled America, which gives the attitude of the Anti-Saloon League and most other prohibition organizations concerning the manufacture and use of wines for sacramental purposes:

WAYNE B. WHEELER'S ANSWER.

In the America on February 21, 1920, is found the following:

"MAY CONGRESS NOW BAN THE MASS?

"The answer to this question must be that under the eighteenth amendment the legal power of Congress to ban the mass can not be questioned.

"The conviction that under the eighteenth amendment Congress might legally suppress the mass has been strengthened by the frank admission made by Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, chief legal counsel for the Anti-Saloon League."

Permit me through your columns to emphatically deny that I ever made any such admission or any statement justifying any person to quote me against the use, making, selling, or using of sacramental wine. In the eighteenth amendment the use of wine for sacramental purposes is not prohibited, and in my judgment could not be prohibited, because it does not represent any beverage use, nor does it have any reasonable relation to the purpose of the prohibition act to prohibit the beverage use of liquor.

Here is the reply I made at the hearing in the New Jersey Legislature to Mr. Brown, a member of the committee, who is aggressively against prohibition. Reference is made to this by Father McNamara in America on March 20:

"Mr. BROWN. Yes; and you will go a step further if you should succeed in passing another act—that is by way of supposition—you would do away entirely with the use of wines for sacramental or medicinal purposes if you thought it was necessary, would you not?

"Mr. WHEELER. No; that is specifically provided for in the Volstead Act.

"Mr. BROWN. I know, but the Constitution itself provides for a limitation for beverage purposes; isn't that right, a prohibition?

"Mr. WHEELER. Yes; for beverage purposes.

"Mr. BROWN. But if you want to make effective your line of argument, and it became necessary, you would legislate that no liquor could be used for any purpose at all, would you not?

"Mr. WHEELER. Well, I would say no. I have always advised against in any way interfering with the manufacture, sale, or use of wine for sacramental purposes; it has always been considered a part of the religious rite. They did it in one State contrary to our advice and the supreme court of that State held that they had no constitutional right to do it. It was interfering with a religious rite."

The above is from the official stenographic notes.

This is in harmony with the consistent attitude the Anti-Saloon League of America has taken on this subject. We were asked at the time of the adopting of the amendment why the league did not urge a specific exemption for sacramental wine from the eighteenth amendment. The reason was clear.

"The eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor for beverage uses. The Judiciary Committee and Congress considered the sacramental use of wine as having no reasonable relation to the beverage use. For this reason they decided it was unnecessary to specifically exempt it."

After the present draft of the eighteenth amendment was agreed upon by the prohibition forces, I submitted it to a large number of influential Catholic lawyers to see if they had any doubt about the amendment and the construction for which we contended. Among them were Judge William H. De Lacy, first judge of the Juvenile Court in Washington; Charles F. Reddoch, a leading Catholic lawyer of Idaho; John Boyce, of Indiana, and many other leading Catholic lawyers and laymen who gave strong opinions that sacramental wine could not be prohibited under authority to prohibit beverage liquors.

In order that there might not be any doubt in the minds of Catholics concerning the attitude of the officers of the Anti-Saloon League of America, this statement was adopted by the officers of the league, and given to the press, while this controversy was pending:

"It is the purpose of the Anti-Saloon League of America to secure legislation to prohibit the beverage-liquor traffic and not to interfere with wine for sacramental use.

"This purpose was made clear by the national prohibition amendment, which prohibits only the beverage use of intoxicating liquors. This wording has been repeatedly construed by leading Catholics and Protestants as not including wines for sacramental use by any reasonable or fair construction.

"The Anti-Saloon League forces in Arizona championed the amendment to the original prohibition law so as to specifically exempt from its prohibition wines for sacramental use.

"We wish to assert, without qualification, that it is our unremitting purpose as Anti-Saloon League officers, to avoid even the appearance of supporting any measure which would interfere with the religious rites or ceremonies of any denomination or communion."

We trust that you will give the same publicity to the facts concerning this matter as was given to the other article.

WAYNE B. WHEELER.

"STATE RIGHTS" FOR LIQUOR.

There is another amusing thing, and that is the way that our friends on the saloon side talk about State rights. I have been told that a large part of the great liquor fund that was raised was put into a certified check and laid before Charles E. Hughes, who would have been a far greater President than he made a candidate, a great Christian man, and they said: "Take this and lead our fight for the overthrow of the eighteenth amendment." With lightning flashing from his honest eyes, that intrepid, stainless son of a Baptist preacher, said, "Let thy gold perish with thee. This law has had no opportunity to show what it will do, and I refuse to join in such an unholy cause." Then they went with a check that was signed, to a former President, William Howard Taft—bless his heart—he has been behaving mighty well since he was President of the United States—and they said to him: "Fill out the amount and lead our cause to break down this law." And that great man answered: "Gentlemen, I was opposed to prohibition, but this law has found its way onto the statute books by due process, and I would not sell myself to the liquor interests of this country for any amount that they can put into that check." [Applause.]

I have heard about "Hires' Root Beer." But there came a case where "beer hires Root." And one of the most brilliant men in America was brought into the case, declaring to the United States Supreme Court that the States ought to have their own rights in making and enforcing the laws that affect their people. It is the funniest thing in the world to a man from the South to hear these northern friends of liquor talking about State rights. [Laughter.] I hear old Hickory Jackson saying now, when that brave little Hotspur of the South, South Carolina, had some ideas of her own about State rights. "By the eternal, I will send an army down there and whip her back into the Union." I think of the Hartford Convention, in the heart of New England, which had some ideas about State rights. And I do not remember—I was not living then, but I am told that the men up North who did not believe the State ought to be allowed to have its own way about everything, came down South with an overwhelming majority to help to spank our daddies into the surrender of the doctrine of State rights.

And now we come back, the solid South, if you please, gone gloriously dry, overwhelmingly sustained by the sentiment of the people of the Nation, and we say to these Northern States that want to remain wet—to New Jersey and Rhode Island and Delaware, especially, that did not ratify—we say to them, in the words of Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, of the International Reform Bureau, "You would not ratify and you shall not nullify." And we propose, as the friends of righteousness down South, standing with the friends of righteousness up North, to spank those friends of State rights who want to shake their fists at the American flag, and tell them that that thing was settled in the mingled blood of Gettysburg and Appomatox, and we propose to stand for the enforcement of the law against those in every State who want to secede from the American Union on account of liquor. [Applause.]

A NATIONAL EVIL REQUIRES A NATIONAL REMEDY.

The liquor business is so universally debauching and so defiant of State lines and State laws, that we are compelled to have a national remedy to cure a national evil.

And I remind you that the friends who would see this law nullified, who would seek to make it ineffective by refusing to help to enforce it, are standing for the bringing back into this country of a business so bad that it will not allow its own clerks to patronize it. I read this from a Fort Worth Record years ago: "Wanted a young man to be shipping clerk to a mail-order liquor house. Any young man addicted to intoxicating liquors need not apply." I fancy an ad in the Washington Herald, if you please, from Parker, Bridget & Co., "Wanted a young man to sell clothing in our store. Any young man caught wearing breeches can not have the job." [Laughter.] Or an ad from a grocery firm, "Wanted a young man to sell flour in our store. Any young man in the habit of eating biscuits need not apply." [Laughter.] That is the very identical spirit. And here we are called on to-day by men who ought to be friends of sobriety to bring back a law that will protect a business that will not allow its own clerks to patronize it. We are called upon to weaken this law that means so much for the sobriety of the people. I want to say this before I close. The party that tries to build its platform and its future on a beer keg or a liquor barrel will be doomed to defeat before the American people. With national constitutional prohibition greatly hobbled during its first few months of enforcement, we have seen great decrease of drunkenness and crime, and a great increase of home joys and human happiness. And such an end, my colleagues, is the highest meaning of legislation.

Gentlemen, I come to you with this earnest word: The eyes of the world are on America. For the influence of our laws and the safety of our young manhood, who are the "to-morrow of this Republic," I call upon every friend of law and order and constitutional Government to do his best to create a spirit that will enforce the law that the people have righteously enacted. The eyes of the staggering world are upon that flag as they have never been before. It has not only stood unselfishly for the rights of humanity, and therefore has never known defeat, but it must stand now a stainless flag for the good of all humanity. If America fails in this, the first great nation to put such a law by orderly process on the statute books, then struggling humanity will say "We want no more of America's example," but if America wins, if the men who say that they love God and the right, the welfare of the boys and the girls of the present and the future, if they stand for the law that has found its way on the statute books by due governmental process, if they will take their stand by the side of the home and fight back the enemies of the home and the church of the living God, they will not only help to insure American purity and American security, but they will give to all humanity a glorious example of what America can do as the triumph, thank God, of our Christian civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on the postal commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. STEENERSON. On the postal commission.

Mr. BLACK. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield back such time as he did not use?

Mr. UPSHAW. I will yield back the remaining time.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEARNS. To whom did the gentleman yield back this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yielded back the time, although it was not necessary, yet it did no harm. The gentleman yielded back to the House itself.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the membership of the House, like myself, have received a great many letters and clippings in criticism of the work of the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries, and I think, therefore, that it would be appropriate for me, as a member of that commission, to make a few remarks upon its work.

One charge is that Republicans are holding up postal salary increases. In the first place, the commission was created by the last Congress. It was organized on the 3d day of March, 1919, and consisted of five Senators and five Representatives. Of these five Senators there were three Democrats and two Republicans, and of the Representatives there were three Democrats and two Republicans; so that there were six Democrats and four Republicans on the commission. The Senator from Alabama, Mr. Bankhead, was elected chairman and the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] was elected vice chairman.

That was the organization of the commission until March 8, 1920, when a Republican Senator, Senator PHIPPS, was elected to succeed the late Senator Bankhead. The Democrats therefore controlled the commission up to that date, and they must bear the blame if there was any unnecessary delay. Since March 8, 1920, the Republicans and Democrats have been a tie, so if any blame there is for delay since then it should be equally divided. The critics of the commission seem to labor under a misapprehension as to what it was created for. They seem to go on the theory that it was created for the sole purpose of raising postal salaries and to do it quickly.

The statute creating it says it is "authorized to investigate the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, with a view to reclassification and readjustment of such salaries upon an equitable basis." There are more than 200,000 positions on record in the Postal Service, and there are nearly 100,000 more employed under contracts or lump-sum appropriations. To reclassify and readjust all these positions of various classes and grades is a work of considerable magnitude. It is work that involves a reorganization of the whole postal system. It is a work that requires much attention to details and a broad comprehension of the work of that department. It is a task comparable to the work of reorganizing the Army of the United States.

The Postal Commission, as soon as it entered upon its work, found that in order to obey the law which created it, it would require at least a year, and when the employees in the Postal Service complained that their salaries were not then sufficiently high we took that matter up in Congress. The annual appropriation bill of last year carried the so-called temporary increases or bonuses, amounting to $200 or over. Congress then passed House joint resolution 151, which gave additional salary increases ranging from $100 to $200, so that clerks whose basic salary is $1,200 now get $1,650, rural carriers whose basic salary is $1,200 now get $1,700, and so on. These last increases were not recommended by the department, and House joint resolution 151 became law without the signature of the President. That was done because it was evident the commission would require time. It was, however, believed that a new salary scale could be recommended to Congress and enacted into law to take effect next fiscal year, beginning July 1. But the hearings were not completed until about two weeks ago. Since then we have held executive sessions almost daily in which salary and classifications have been gone over and discussed pro and con.

Many of them have already been tentatively passed upon, and the work is, I should say, two-thirds finished. If we encounter no unforeseen difficulties, we ought to be able to make a report by the 1st of June. And if Congress is in session, there will be time to enact the recommendations of the commission into law by the beginning of the next fiscal year.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. The idea never occurred to the commission that they were to start in and make a report before the evidence was closed. Now, if for any reason, either by the adjournment of Congress or any other, the recommendation of the commission can not be enacted into law by the first of the fiscal year, the commission, I believe, would favor that whatever salary increases are recommended should be retroactive to the beginning of the year, so that no employee would suffer any loss by reason of such delay.

For these reasons it seems to me that this propaganda, if I may so call it, that is going on is entirely unjustifiable. It is alleged in these reports that the commission has "fallen down"; that it has been brooding for 14 months over a report and is not able yet to make it. You might as well charge that a court had been wasting its time because it had been gathering evidence and considering it before rendering an opinion.

So far as the personnel of the commission is concerned, I want to say this, that they are, nearly all of them, old Members of their respective Houses, and have had a great deal to do with the postal work and postal legislation. They have approached their task with only one spirit, and that is one of kindly sympathy for all of the postal employees.

I believe that every member is animated by a desire to do what is fair and just by the employees.

There has not been the least sign of any division on party lines amongst us, and we are all in favor of making a report as quickly as it is physically possible to do so and do it intelligently.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope that nobody will get the impression that we are going to report by the 1st of June, because we may not be able to do it, and I do not think we will be able to do it myself.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I did not intend to fix any time. I was simply expressing a hope. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is one of the most hard-working members of this commission, and he devotes more time to it, perhaps, than anyone else, and if he says that its work can not probably be finished by the 1st of June, I will yield my judgment to his, because there has been no one more ardent and efficient than he in the work of the commission.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROUSE. I will say to the gentleman that I am a member of the commission, and I thought last year that the commission should have reported the 1st of December, and I think to-day that the commission should report before the 1st of June, and that a bill embodying its recommendations should be passed by the House before the 1st of June.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I should be very glad to be able to agree with the gentleman, and I shall strive in every way to make a report in time for that work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

SIXTH ANNUAL INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress and for its determination whether it will authorize that the United States be officially represented in the Sixth International Sanitary Conference and appropriate the sum necessary to meet the expenses incident to such representation, a report from the Secretary of State setting forth the importance of the conference and the reasons which make it desirable that this Government be represented therein.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
15 May, 1920.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On May 12, 1920:

H. R. 13227. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims.

On May 13, 1920:

H. J. Res. 302. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass.;

H. R. 13590. An act granting the consent of Congress to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., for the construction of a bridge across the Red River between the counties of Fannin, Tex., and Bryan, Okla.;

H. R. 13724. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at or near Orange, Tex.; and

H. R. 10917. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States," by adding thereto an additional section.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11927. An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' bonus bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the soldiers' bonus bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the Conference report on the bill H. R. 11960, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the statement accompanying the report be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. SIEGEL. I object. I raise a point of order on the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can raise a point of order just as well and reserve it now.

Mr. SIEGEL. Very well. I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see to it that the gentleman's rights are protected. Without objection, the Clerk will read the statement.

There was no objection.

The statement accompanying the conference report was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$480,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$900,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"PURCHASE OF EMBASSY BUILDING AND GROUNDS AT SANTIAGO, CHILE.

"For the purchase of an embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, and for making necessary minor repairs and alterations in the building to put it into proper condition, $130,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

"SECTION 1. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application for a passport and $9 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Secretary of State by regulation to authorize the retention by State officials of the fee of $1 for executing an application for a passport: And provided further, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers or employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties, or to members of their immediate families accompanying them, or to seamen, or to widows, children, parents, brothers, and sisters of American soldiers, sailors, or marines, buried abroad whose journey is undertaken for the purpose and with the intent of visiting the graves of such soldiers, sailors, or marines, which facts shall be made a part of the application for the passport.

"SEC. 2. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application of an alien for a visé and $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officer of any foreign Government, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States, or of any soldiers coming within the terms of public resolution approved October 19, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1014).

"SEC. 3. The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission: Provided, That such applicant, if rejected by the officer of the United States to whom application was originally made, may appeal to the Secretary of State: And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States.

"SEC. 4. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, it shall be unlawful for any alien, other than a seaman, to enter or attempt to enter the United States without a passport duly viséed by a person duly authorized by the Secretary of State to issue such visé: Provided, That this section shall not apply to nationals of Great Britain domiciled in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, or the Bahamas, or to nationals of France domiciled in St. Pierre and Miquelon, or to citizens of Cuba, Panama, or Mexico.

"SEC. 5. From and after the passage of this act every citizen or person, other than a seaman, owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States and departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof for any foreign country, except the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, St. Pierre, and Miquelon, Panama, the Bermudas, the Bahamas, Mexico, and Cuba, or departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof by way of any of said countries for any other country shall be required to bear a valid passport.

"SEC. 6. The validity of a passport or visé shall be limited to two years, unless the Secretary of State shall by regulation limit the validity of such passport or visé to a shorter period.

"SEC. 7. Whenever the appropriate officer within the United States of any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued by the United States, the Department of State is hereby authorized upon request in writing and the return of the unused passport within six months from the date of issue to refund to the person to whom the passport was issued the fees which have been paid to Federal officials, and the money for that purpose is hereby appropriated and directed to be paid upon the order of the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 8. Section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled 'An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad' (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1228), authorizing the Secretary of State to issue passports to certain persons not citizens of the United States is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STEPHEN G. PORTER,
JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
H. D. FLOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. C. LODGE,
WM. E. BORAH,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreement of the House to the amendments of the Senate on H. R. 11969, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments:

The Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 4, 10, and 13.

Amendment No. 4, appropriating funds for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, increases the appropriation from $400,000 to $500,000.

Amendment No. 10, providing for the expenses of the International High Commission, struck out the word "State" and inserted the words "the Treasury."

Amendment No. 13, under post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers, added a proviso limiting the expenditure of the appropriation.

Senate amendments Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14 were agreed to by the managers on the part of the House.

Amendment No. 5 inserts a new paragraph appropriating $4,500 for the relief of Mrs. Winifred T. Magelssen.

Amendment No. 6 adds a new paragraph making the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1920, available for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1921, for the objects and purposes designated by said act of appropriation.

Amendment No. 7 inserts a new paragraph appropriating $9,000 for expenses in connection with the Pan-Pacific Union.

Amendments Nos. 8 and 9 changes the word "International" to "Inter-American."

Amendment No. 11 changes the appropriation for the International Joint Commission on Waterways Treaty, United States and Great Britain, from $25,000 to $40,000.

Amendment No. 12 struck out the last proviso limiting the expenditure of the appropriation.

Amendment No. 14 changes the appropriation for contingent expenses for the United States consulates from $900,000 to $1,000,000.

Amendment No. 1 fixes the amount for clerks at embassies and legations at $480,000 instead of $688,000, as proposed by the Senate amendment.

Amendment No. 2 increases the appropriation for contingent expenses, foreign missions, to $900,000 instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate amendment.

Amendment No. 3, providing for the purchase of embassy buildings and grounds at Santiago, Chile, changes the language but leaves the appropriation of $130,000 the same.

Amendment No. 6 changes the language and makes this the final appropriation under existing treaties for the maintenance of the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, and dissolves the commission from and after six months from July 1, 1920.

Amendment No. 15, relating to fees for passports and visés, struck out the amendment submitted by the Senate and inserts new matter.

STEPHEN G. PORTER,
JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
H. D. FLOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike from the statement the paragraph at the head of page 5, relating to the Mexican Boundary Commission, which was inserted inadvertently.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the paragraph referred to be stricken out, having been inserted by mistake. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] make a point of order?

Mr. SIEGEL. I make a point of order against the bill, and particularly against Senate amendment No. 15, on the ground that when the bill passed the House and Senate there was no provision similar to the language now contained in it. It is an elementary rule of the House that all that the conferees can do is to pass upon such legislation which is germane, and that they can not exceed their powers.

Now, the Senate inserted in Senate amendment 15 a proviso, reading as follows:

FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

From and after the 1st day of May, 1920, a fee of $1 shall be collected for each application and $10 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States or a person who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and said fees shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States at least quarterly: Provided, however, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers and employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties.

From and after the 1st day of May, 1920, a fee of $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien and $1 for each application of an alien for a visé shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officers of any foreign Government, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States or soldiers coming within the terms of public resolution No. 44, Sixty-fifth Congress (H. J. Res. 331).

From and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States or any person who has resided in the United States three years and has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States to depart from the United States for any foreign country except Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Bermuda, and the Bahama Islands, or by way of these excepted countries to a foreign country, through the possessions of the United States or otherwise, or to depart from said possessions for any foreign country except Panama and those hereinbefore excepted, unless he bears a valid passport.

Which provision, in effect, would require a payment of $9 and $1 in the case of a passport or visé. There was no such provision in the House bill. In conference they went further than that. They provide, in section 8, as follows:

Section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad" (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1228), authorizing the Secretary of State to issue passports to certain persons not citizens of the United States is hereby repealed.

They also endeavor to give the United States consul abroad the power to determine who shall have the right to come into this country, and who shall be kept out of it. For example, in section 3 they say:

The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission: Provided, That such applicant, if rejected by the officer of the United States to whom the application was originally made, may appeal to the Secretary of State: And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States.

They also provide that no person shall be allowed to leave the United States without obtaining a passport.

Now, it is my contention that there was no such provision in the bill as it passed the Senate, and that therefore the conferees had no power to exceed that which had been inserted in the Senate, namely, simply increasing the fees. They have done two things here: One is that they set up a consular officer as the authority to determine who should come into this country, and secondly, they attempted to repeal that part of the law which provides that passports may be issued to those who are declarants.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state what the section provided that is repealed?

Mr. SIEGEL. That section provides that passports shall be issued to those who are declarants. In other words, during the war, and for a long time before that, we issued passports to those who were not full citizens, but who had the right to go abroad.

They attempt to repeal it by this act, and that is accomplished if this should become a law. In addition to that, in section 3 they practically make the consul on the other side the immigration officer to determine the question as to who shall be admitted to the United States. Furthermore, in contravention of treaty agreements, no alien will be able to leave here. It seems to me that the conferees certainly exceeded their powers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Was not section 8 an original Senate amendment?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no; it was not. Section 8 was added in conference, and sections 3 and 4 were added in conference. It seems to me clearly subject to a point of order on two grounds: One that these items are not germane to what was the original Senate amendment; and second, that the conferees have exceeded their powers because there was no such amendment passed in the Senate at the time it was added on.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman inform the House as to just what the provision was that the Senate put in with reference to passports?

Mr. SIEGEL. The Senate simply provided that there should be a charge of $10. There was no provision by which the consular officer was to become the immigration officer. I will say that on a point of order in the House, when the gentleman from Texas, I believe, attempted to offer some amendment providing for an increased amount to be paid for passports, it was properly ruled out of order because that was new legislation.

The bill went over to the Senate, and there they put in a proviso about the $10. That part was a subject for the conferees when the bill went to conference, but they could not go a step further and repeal the law or add to it a whole lot of new ideas, changes, and thoughts which entered their minds, practically nullifying the immigration law. That was and is exclusively within the domain of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. HICKS. Then the gentleman is not basing his objection on the point of order that as the Senate had put in $10 as a fee, the conferees exceeded their authority on that ground? He is basing it upon some other provision?

Mr. SIEGEL. On the one proposition that the only question that the conferees could determine was whether they would agree to the $10 for the passport or the visé. Personally I think it was a great mistake to put in the provision which they did put in that passports should be required for any person leaving the United States. Up to the time of the war anybody was at liberty to leave the United States with or without a passport, but under this provision which they put in here——

The SPEAKER. That was put in in the Senate.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Is it not a fact that that is new legislation, because they are trying to make permanent law out of the war legislation providing for passports?

Mr. SIEGEL. Not only that. They have gone a step further. They have put in more drastic provisions than we had during the entire period of the war or in all of the country's history. They strike at the very freedom of movement of the American citizen, although we are at peace.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I understand the gentleman, he makes his point of order against sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and not against sections 1 and 2. Am I right in that?

Mr. SIEGEL. My contention is that the point of order must lie against the whole conference report.

The SPEAKER. If any point of order is made, it is made against the whole conference report.

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; it must lie against the whole report. I have made my point of order to that effect.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, by way of analogy I should like to recall to the mind of the Chair the situation that is presented when one House strikes out all of the bill as passed by the other House and substitutes a bill of its own. Of course, the rule is very well established and very familiar that when the bill goes to conference the conferees can throw away both bills if they like and write a new bill of their own, the only qualification upon that rule being that the new bill must be germane to the subject matter of one or the other of the old bills.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Let me proceed a little further, please.

Mr. SIEGEL. I should like to correct the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. We all know that in many cases the second body to act in a case of that kind prefers to throw aside all that the first body has done, because it will find it more convenient to have its own bill throughout. The suggestion is often made that a further reason is that the future conferees desire to have their hands entirely unfettered when the bill goes to conference. Although the two bills as passed by the Senate and House respectively may be very similar in many respects, nevertheless the rule prevails and applies, the whole matter is in conference, and the conferees may write an entirely new bill.

Take, for example, the case of the recent Army reorganization bill. The House bill and the Senate bill were similar in many respects and identical in some respects and in some sections. Yet, because the Senate struck from the House bill everything after the enacting clause, the conferees are at work on the whole problem, and will ultimately report a new bill for the consideration of the House and Senate.

Now, I ask the Speaker to compare the situation in that kind of a case with the situation that is presented here. The House in its Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill did not deal in any way whatever with the subject of passports, passport fees, the control of aliens coming to the United States, or of American citizens departing from the United States. The Senate took up the question de novo; although this was an appropriation bill, it inserted in the bill a rather elaborate amendment legislating anew upon the whole subject of passport control, both of outgoing and incoming travelers. When that bill went to conference, the Speaker will notice, there was a complete lack of agreement between the Senate and the House. The House had not spoken at all. The Senate had spoken in terms of this elaborate amendment. In other words, there was no point of accord between the two bodies.

If, as I have suggested, the authority of the conferees is practically unlimited except with respect to the element of germaneness, where one House has passed a bill and the other House has passed a substitute—often very similar—for that bill, surely in this case, where there is no point of contact whatever between the Senate and the House, the conferees, as they go into conference, must have at least an equally broad power as compared to that which they have in the other case.

With that in mind I want to call the attention of the Chair to the form in which this matter passed the Senate.

The first paragraph of the Senate amendment provided a system of establishing and collecting passport fees for citizens; and if the Chair will particularly notice it included a provision for persons who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] lays great stress on the fact that section 8 of the conference report, as reported by the conferees, repeals the former law. Of course, almost all legislation is a change of the previous law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman need argue that last statement. The Chair is very clear about that.

Mr. ROGERS. I was simply going to suggest that nearly all legislation involves a change in law, and no more so when it specifically mentions the statutes which it changes.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The last section repeals the law authorizing the Secretary of State to give passports; but the original Senate amendment—the Chair thinks probably he had better let the gentleman proceed in his own way.

Mr. ROGERS. As I was observing, the first paragraph of the Senate amendment is a general provision establishing, in the case of American citizens, the scale of fees for passports and applications for passports. It also establishes what the practice shall be in the case of persons who are merely declarants for citizenship.

Then it goes on, in the proviso, to establish certain limitations which, if the applicant qualifies within them, result in the elimination of the necessity for a passport. The second section deals with the situation in the case of persons coming to the United States from abroad who are not American citizens.

The Chair will bear in mind that this passport question presents two distinct phases. First, what shall be the practice of the American Government with reference to American citizens who are going abroad and to whom passports must be issued.

Second, what shall be the practice of the American Government with respect to aliens who seek to come to the United States. Obviously, in the second case, the American Government does not and can not issue a passport, but it may require the intended immigrant to procure a passport from his own Government, and also require that that passport shall be viséed by the Amercan consul before the alien leaves his own country for the United States.

Senate amendment No. 15 dealt with both of these questions. It did not confine itself as it might have to passports; it did not confine itself as it might have to visées. But it dealt with both questions, and thereby opened up, as I submit, the entire field of passport and visé legislation.

I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that again in the second paragraph of the Senate amendment we find a proviso, a limitation, in other words, as to instances in which the visé of the United States and the passport of the foreign Government shall not be required of aliens who intend to come to the United States.

Then, in the third paragraph, we find a still more definite change in existing law. We find that as far as an American citizen is concerned, it shall be obligatory that he shall take a passport before leaving the United States. While this may not be material on the point of order, it is perhaps worth while to suggest what was apparently the Senate viewpoint, that it would scarcely be effective to raise the fees for the passport unless in some way it should be made obligatory for the intended traveler to take out the passport. So the Senate amendment goes into that question and makes obligatory the requirement that every American, with certain exceptions, shall take a passport before he leaves the United States for a foreign country.

The fourth paragraph of the Senate amendment is administrative, and perhaps does not very much modify the general situation on the point of order.

When the conferees came to deal with the problem, as I said at the outset, they found the Senate and House at opposite extremes. They found that the Senate amendment had opened up the whole question of passports; they found that the Senate amendment had opened up the whole question of visés. It seemed to the conferees that it was both their duty and their right to consider the whole question of passport and visé legislation in view of the breadth to which the Senate amendment went.

This precise question has not, I think, been very helpfully handled in the precedents, but there is one authority to which I should like to direct the attention of the Chair in case he is not familiar with it. It is found in the fifth volume of Hinds' Precedents, page 731, section 6424.

On February 18, 1907, Mr. William S. Bennet, of New York, submitted the report of the managers of the conference on the bill S. 4403, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' approved March 3, 1903."

Before the report was read Mr. John L. B. Burnett, of Alabama, proposed to reserve a point of order.

The point of order, as the decision shows, was based principally upon the insertion by the managers of the following proviso:

> Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States, or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country, or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

It is interesting to note that nowhere in the immigration bill which was in conference at that time was there any reference whatever to passports. It happens by a coincidence that this authority deals with passports; but that is not why I cite it. That bill was an immigration bill purely. The point is that the managers on the part of the Senate and of the House who, I think, were in precisely the same fundamental position as the managers in this case, found that in order to regulate and control immigration it might be wise to utilize the passport method, either directly or indirectly, in order to control the influx and outgo of immigrants. Although the passport method was not even contemplated in the bill as it passed either House, the conferees incorporated it. Speaker CANNON, in quite an elaborate ruling, sustained the authority of the conferees and overruled the point of order. Here we have exactly a converse case—a passport bill incidentally including, by the action of the conferees, a provision relating to immigration.

The rule is rather well stated, I think, by Speaker Colfax back in 1865, found in Hinds' Precedents, section 6421:

> The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language, or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead. Two separate bills have been referred to the committee, and they can take either one of them, or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either. They have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them.

See also Speaker CANNON's ruling, found in Hinds' Precedents, section 6417:

> It is true that if the whole paragraph in the bill as it passed the House had been stricken out and a substitute therefor proposed by the Senate, or if the Senate had stricken out the paragraph without proposing a substitute, and the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate, then the conferees might have had jurisdiction touching the whole matter and might have agreed upon any provision that would have been germane.

My contention is that the only question before the Chair at this time is whether the conference report on amendment No. 15 of the Senate is germane to the Senate amendment. My contention further is that in view of the fact that there is no point of contact between the Senate and the House on this question, the power of the conferees is much more extended than it is even in the case of the substitution of an entirely new bill. My contention further is that the Senate, having opened up in a very complete way, in a very general way, the whole subject of passports and visés, it was both the right and the duty of the House managers to prepare and perfect, with the Senate conferees, a general scheme of passport control upon the theory that that would have been germane if the Senate amendment had been originally before the House and open for amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. In just a moment. I should like to call the attention of the Speaker also to the fact that to-day on the statute books there is a law, which expires March 4, 1921, which is not a war-time act but a peace-time act—because it has no relation to the termination of the war—which legislates quite fully concerning the entry of aliens into the United States and provides in part as follows:

> That if the President shall find that the public safety requires that restrictions and prohibitions in addition to those provided otherwise than by this act be imposed upon the entry of aliens into the United States, and shall make public proclamation thereof, it shall, until otherwise ordered by the President or Congress, be unlawful—
> (a) For any alien to enter or attempt to enter the United States except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such passport, visé, or other limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe—

And so forth.

That is public law No. 79, Sixty-sixth Congress. I cite it because it seems to me that it shows the intent of Congress, at least, that this question shall be handled as the conferees have handled it in this case. I am not quite sure as to the exact bearing of this suggestion upon the point of order, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] has laid a great deal of stress upon the fact that the conferees, as he alleges, exceeded their authority in section 3—section 3 being the section which throws under the control of the consular officer the question of whether or not the visé shall be granted in cases where the alien would be obviously subject to exclusion under our laws. My point in mentioning the statute just cited is that section 3 is already almost exactly, if not precisely, in the law to-day, and that the conferees, in recommending it, seem to be legislating in harmony with the very recently declared intention of Congress upon that subject.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, is it the gentleman's contention that in the same conference the conferees' authority and jurisdiction are broader upon an amendment which the House has disagreed to but which involves something entirely new in the bill than in the case of an amendment which the Senate has made to something that the House included in its bill?

Mr. ROGERS. So far as the subject matter of that particular Senate amendment is concerned, that is my contention.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the view of the gentleman, how are you going to protect a bill which has been amended in that way?

Mr. ROGERS. You are always protected by the requirement of germaneness. I do not contend, so far as I am concerned, that the conferees would have had the right to go outside in order to include matter which was not germane.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, in this instance the Senate did not strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new bill.

Mr. ROGERS. No.

Mr. WALSH. They inserted several individual amendments, which have been numbered and which have been considered separately by the managers on the part of the House in the conference.

Mr. ROGERS. They inserted one amendment relating to passports generally, which was necessarily treated as a unit.

Mr. WALSH. But there were other amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. There were other amendments to other parts of the appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH. And the gentleman contends that with reference to that one amendment the conferees can treat it as if it were all there was to the bill originally, and the bill comes back with all after the enacting clause stricken out and this new matter inserted.

Mr. ROGERS. As far as that one subject matter goes, that is precisely my contention. In other words, although in the ordinary case of one House writing a new bill and striking out what the other House has written you usually find a certain degree of unanimity between the two Houses, in this case you find a variation of 100 per cent between the views of the two Houses. One has not legislated at all and the other has legislated quite widely. Putting my contention at its lowest terms, it would seem to me that the conferees, so far as that subject matter is concerned, are at least as unhampered as are conferees in the case to which I refer.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman will admit that when the House disagreed to all the Senate amendments it disagreed in exactly the same manner and to the same extent to the other amendments as it did to this one, which involves new propositions.

Mr. ROGERS. Precisely.

Mr. WALSH. What I was endeavoring to get from the gentleman is his contention as to whether simply because this involves new matter the disagreement brought with it broader powers on the part of the managers.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know that I can do more than repeat what I have said. When one House does not deal with a subject at all and when the other House puts upon an appropriation or other bill an amendment dealing de novo with that subject, and dealing with it very broadly, I contend that when that bill goes to conference without instructions the conferees have the right to legislate very freely on the matter, to report in a new proposal, and to be bound only by the consideration that whatever they report must be germane to the amendment in question.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] would practically reverse all of the precedents which have been followed in the House up to date. The precedents which he has cited up to now have all been cases where the entire bill after the enacting clause has been stricken out. He can not cite a single case where it was ever contended before to-day that an amendment is in order, as in this case, which embodies new legislation, which employs a new method for immigrants coming to this country, which gives power to the consul which is now vested in the United States immigration authorities at our ports, and which in the House would go to an entirely different committee, namely, the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration, but which also involves legislation which has not been considered in this House and which has never been brought up or discussed here and giving the most extraordinary power to consuls abroad.

If the entire bill had been stricken out after the enacting clause, then the argument from the gentleman from Massachusetts might hold water. What is attempted here is this: The Senate passed an amendment, No. 15, in which it provided that $9 and $1 shall be charged for viséing a passport or for the issuance of one. The gentleman from Massachusetts must have forgotten that when an immigrant arrives in America he pays $8, and that each and every alien entering the United States does so. If you add the $10, that will make $18 for each and every immigrant coming into the United States. That is the practical effect. They are also endeavoring to make the consul the supreme authority over there to determine the question whether the immigrant is absolutely fit to come to the United States, and under our law the authority to determine that question is lodged with the immigration authorities with the right to appeal to the Secretary of Labor. But they do not stop there. They try to repeal the provision which allows the Secretary of State at the present time to issue passports to a declarant, something that has been followed during the entire war period.

Many men who are in this country, although not fully naturalized, were in the service of the Government and who could not obtain their final papers were granted these passports. By section 8 they try to wipe that out. These conferees have done everything which conferees have never been permitted to do before by this House, and unless the precedents are going to be smashed it seems to me the point of order should be sustained, because it establishes a dangerous precedent by which it is possible to say that conferees in an amendment have a wider authority than they would have had in the event the entire legislation was thrown out and a new bill gotten together, as will perhaps be the case in the Army reorganization bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman see any difference in principle or reason——

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. ROGERS. One moment—between a case where all after the enacting clause of a House bill is stricken out by the Senate and a case where a single Senate amendment opens up an entirely new subject——

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman see any reason why the conferees' authority should be different in the two cases?

Mr. SIEGEL. I see a big reason. One is that the precedents are to the contrary of the gentleman's contention.

Mr. ROGERS. There is no precedent against it.

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman state the precedent?

Mr. SIEGEL. Every precedent——

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman state the precedent opposed to my contention? I wish the gentleman would cite some of them. I have looked diligently——

Mr. SIEGEL. I, too, have looked diligently, and I have not been able to find the case where any such contention as the gentleman is making here to-day has ever been contended for before. Why, according to the gentleman's contention the conferees can go to work and bring in here anything they practically want as long as it is supported by an amendment of the Senate. When this kind of legislation was attempted to be put on in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it was stricken out on a point of order on the ground it was new legislation, and that certainly was the proper procedure. It goes over to the Senate, and the mere fact that the Senate inserts a provision for the $9 and $1 certainly does not give full authority to add to it and give the conferees the right to repeal all laws and give the consuls such drastic authority as is given. I admit the question is very important. I admit the ruling of the Speaker is probably the most important which he has been called upon to rule upon and determine, because if he decides to-day that a conference committee can do this, I do not know what kind of legislation may be put upon the statute books by conferees without the House having a single chance to pass upon it. The danger of conference rider legislation has been frequently discussed by all who know its serious effects, and this report certainly confirms its reprehensiveness.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I was not on the floor when this question came up originally, and I do not know whether the gentleman from New York has called the Speaker's attention to the so-called section 4 in the amendment, which is positively new legislation. It was not considered by the House at any time, and it came to my attention only a few moments ago. Section 4 provides that—> from and after the 1st day of June, 1920, it shall be unlawful for any alien, other than a seaman, to enter or attempt to enter the United States without a passport duly viséd by a person duly authorized by the Secretary of State to issue such visés—

And so forth. There was nothing in the original bill nor in the Senate bill that required a passport on the part of any person before he could enter the United States. If this report should be adopted, it will be new legislation that was never considered by the House nor by the Senate. It is new legislation; it changes conditions and the immigration law; it makes it impossible for anyone at any time to enter the United States before he can secure a passport from his own country. Now, just see how far-reaching this legislation is: We will say that to-day in Ireland some man is dissatisfied with conditions that now exist and demands that Ireland be recognized as an independent state. Will the framers of this provision believe that such a man could secure a passport from the British Government and have it viséd, notwithstanding that he is only advocating and demanding for Ireland what that country is entitled to? Indeed not. Instead of receiving a passport, he would be arrested and thrown in jail, as is being done every day, so much so that the British prisons are filled with Irish political offenders.

Ever since the establishment of our Republic this country has been the refuge of those who have been obliged to flee their own country for political offenses. This provision will make it impossible for anyone to reach the United States who at any time will be found in displeasure with his own country. I have given only an example of how far-reaching this provision is. It surely is new legislation, never contemplated on the part of the committee nor on the part of the House, and was not considered in the Senate, and was inserted by the conferees without any right or jurisdiction. As pointed out by the gentleman from New York, it is clearly new legislation, and therefore I feel that on that ground the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, during the war there was a bill passed that provided for a visé on passports, and the law was extended a short time ago, extended, I think, for one year. I voted against it, and was the only Member that did. Now, this seeks to make permanent law the provisions of that particular bill which was passed as a war measure. As my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] says, it simply makes it permanent law and deprives people from coming who ought to be allowed the privilege of coming here if they want to. It is new law and a distinct departure from conditions and privileges that made this country great and prosperous, and therefore is new legislation and subject to a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is such an important matter, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. We ought to have a quorum here.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order until the Chair rules.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I withdraw it until the Chair has made a ruling.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that there is unquestionably legislation in the conference report, and in the view of the Chair it is a close question whether the conferees have or have not exceeded their authority. But the amendment of the Senate is on a subject which was not covered by the House and would not have been in order in the House. While nominally concerned simply with passports, it really seems to the Chair it is immigration legislation and was doubtless so intended. Is it all germane to the Senate amendment? It seems to the Chair pretty clear that it is germane, because the Senate amendment touches on different phases of passports, on immigration, and in one paragraph forbids the departure of certain citizens from the United States. It legislates and is quite sweeping. The House disagreed to it entirely. The main question is whether the conferees have added anything which exceeded their powers. A decision by Speaker CLARK on a somewhat similar question, on an amendment, it seems to the Chair, is very conclusive. He says, on page 481 of the manual:

> The House struck out the whole of the McCumber amendment; that is, agreed to a substitute for the entire McCumber amendment. It did not leave a single line or word of the McCumber amendment. That put it in exactly the same situation as if everything after the enacting clause of a bill was struck out. And it has been held so often and so far back and by so many Speakers that where everything after the enacting clause is struck out the conferees have carte blanche to prepare a bill on that subject that it seems to the Chair that question is no longer open to controversy.

Now, while the Chair will not say that the conferees have carte blanche, yet it seems to the Chair that what the conferees have agreed to is strictly germane and very closely connected and a natural sequence to the amendment put in by the Senate. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the proper procedure for a Member to pursue who desires to strike out a part of the conference report? Would it be a motion to recommit with instructions to strike out part of it?

The SPEAKER. There are two ways. The conference report could be voted down, and then everything would be open; or it has been held in recent years that a motion to recommit is in order if the Senate has not acted on the conference report.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has acted upon the conference report already.

The SPEAKER. If the Senate has acted, there can not be a motion to recommit. The only course would be to vote down the conference report. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. JOHNSON] wish to make the point of no quorum?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. No, sir.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. CROWTHER. I withdraw it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, it is an important matter, and there ought to be a quorum to consider the new legislation. I make the point.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, May 16, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the records of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 987), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CHINDBLOM, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13264) to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 988), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5899) for the relief of Kenneth S. Cook, storekeeper, second class, United States Navy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 989), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5580) granting six months' pay to Anton Kunz, father of Joseph Anthony Kunz, deceased, machinist's mate, first class, United States Navy, in active service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 990), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13541) for the relief of Lee M. Allen, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. IRELAND: A bill (H. R. 14088) providing for the extension of the United States courthouse, post office, and public building at Peoria, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 14089) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, to provide revenue therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14090) authorizing the War Department to repair or furnish spare parts for property loaned by authority of law to other agencies, the expense thereof to be borne by such agencies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 14091) to increase the revenue by imposing a tax on certain sales of sugar, to prevent profiteering therein, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LAYTON: A bill (H. R. 14092) to create a negro industrial commission; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 14093) to provide for celebrating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and products of the soil, mine, and sea in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. MASON: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 56) regarding the republic of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HULINGS: A bill (H. R. 14094) granting an increase of pension to Gordon W. Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 14095) granting a pension to Angie Caldwell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YATES: A bill (H. R. 14096) granting a pension to Mary J. Finney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3656. By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Papers to accompany House bill 14077, granting an increase of pension to Robert R. Towland; to the Committee on Pensions.

3657. By Mr. DUNN: Petition of 50 citizens of Rochester, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 1112, providing parole of Federal prisoners; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3658. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of E. A. Lycett, Joseph L. Votta, Waldo Newcomer, Philander B. Briscoe, George Clarke Peck, Frederick Esslinger, W. H. Purcell, H. Gamse & Bro., Booz Bros., F. Friedmann, H. B. Davis Co., Bachrach, H. J. Cahn, Carroll Adams & Co., Mann Piano Co., M. E. Hecht, H. J. McGrath Co., Egerton Bros., and A. de R. Sappington, all of Baltimore, Md., relating to postal increase of salary; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

3659. Also, petition of John J. Farrell, Baltimore, Md., in relation to the Mason bill; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3660. Also, petition of Walda Newcomer, Baltimore, Md., in relation to the bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3661. Also, petition of Oppenheim, Oberndorf & Co., Baltimore, Md., relative to sales tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3662. By Mr. McKEOWN: Petition of Bernard Gill Post, No. 16, American Legion, Shawnee, Okla., regarding bonus for soldiers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3663. Also, petition of Bernard Gill Post, No. 16, American Legion, Shawnee, Okla., favoring House bill 8290; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

3664. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of George Fridman, Henrietta M. Forrest, Joseph Zadisky, James S. Taylor, and George J. Clap, jr., of New York City, protesting against legislation to increase the stock transfer tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3665. Also, petition of Charles F. Smillie & Co., of New York, favoring higher salaries for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

3666. Also, petition of Hoboken Electro Chemical Co., of New York, opposing the passage of S. 3223; to the Committee on Patents.

3667. Also, petition of United Typothetæ of America, Rochester, N. Y., protesting against the passage of H. R. 12976; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3668. By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of sundry citizens of Irish descent of Lowell, Mass., regarding the freedom of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3669. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Local No. 100, Boston Post Office Clerks, favoring higher pay for post-office clerks; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, May 16, 1920.

The House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, that God, which ever lives and loves, one God, one law, one element, one far off divine event to which the whole creation moves.

"If I ask Him to receive me, will He say me nay?
Not till earth and not till heaven pass away."

So with renewed faith, and hope, and confidence, we approach Thee in the sacred attitude of prayer, confidently trusting in the overruling of Thy providence to the good of all Thy children. We thank Thee for the indissoluble ties which bind us to Thee, which time nor space can sever.

We meet to fulfill the desires of our heart. Two men of affairs, who wrought well, died well in the faithful discharge of their duty; in their work challenged the admiration of their fellows who called them to serve the people on the floor of this House; who shirked no duty, have passed on in the harness to that life in one of God's many mansions, where under more favorable circumstances they will develop the larger and more perfect life. But we would write on the pages of history their life, character and public service for those who shall come after us. May Thy loving arms be about those who knew and loved them and inspire them with hope and confidence, that though they may not return they will surely go to them in a realm where love reigns supreme.

We know not what the future hath of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death His mercy underlies.

Thus we hope, aspire and pray. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be deferred until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be postponed until to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the special order.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM J. BROWNING AND THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CARL C. VAN DYKE.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. Hutchinson, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, May 16, 1920, be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, late a Member of this House from the State of New Jersey.

On motion of Mr. KELLER, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, May 16, 1920, be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. CARL C. VAN DYKE, late a Member from the State of Minnesota.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask for its adoption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that an opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New Jersey, and to the memory of Hon. CARL C. VAN DYKE, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Minnesota.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of their eminent abilities as distinguished public servants, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the families of the deceased.

The question was taken and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members who are unable to be present to-day have an opportunity to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of our deceased colleague, WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that Members may extend their remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, within the short period of five years in which I have been a Member of the House of Representatives, we have on three occasions been summoned in solemn assembly to pay public tribute to the life, character, and public service of Representatives in the National Congress from the great State of New Jersey.

To-day we gather to publicly attest our love and friendship for the dean of the Republican delegation from our State, the late WILLIAM J. BROWNING, of the city of Camden, whom a merciful God suddenly called to His heavenly home free from the agonies usually attendant at the hour of death.

At the time of his death Mr. BROWNING was serving his fifth consecutive term as a member of the House of Representatives from the first district of New Jersey, and was exceeded in point of service in the House by only one Member of the present State delegation.

Mr. BROWNING was for many years a faithful servant of the public, particularly to the people of his home city; first as a member of the board of education, later as a member of the city council, and then as their postmaster.

His more public career began in 1895, when he was elected Chief Clerk of the National House of Representatives, in which position he faithfully and efficiently served for a period of 16 years, relinquishing his duties in that office upon his election by the voters of the first district of New Jersey to fill the vacancy in the House of Representatives caused by the death of the late Hon. Harry Loudenslager.

He was continuously reelected each term since then, and his popularity in his district was most forcefully demonstrated in the elections of 1912, when he was the only Republican elected to the National Congress from the State of New Jersey.

Upon coming to Congress he was assigned to the Committee on Naval Affairs, upon which committee he continued to serve until, at the time of his death, he was the ranking majority member.

By reason of his long service on that committee he became one of the best informed Members of the House on naval matters, and to him is due much credit in the shaping of our naval policy during the past few years. I am sure that his death has been a distinct loss to this important committee of the House and to the country in general.

In politics Mr. BROWNING was a staunch Republican. He was one of the "wheel horses" of the party in New Jersey, and he represented one of the strongest, if not the strongest, Republican districts in the State.

No matter to what office he was chosen during his public career it can be said of Mr. BROWNING that he at all times endeavored to give to that office the very best service that he knew how to render. He was an incessantly hard worker, and to his own detriment he gave little time to recreation and the care of his health.

Refusing to follow the advice of his physicians to let up in his work and give himself much-needed rest to build up his strength, which had been brought to a low ebb by ill health during the past winter, he insisted upon attending to his official duties, and it may truly be said of him that he died a martyr to his country.

Planning to return home and recuperate his health following the passage of the naval bill, which was passed by the House on the evening preceding his death, he waited too long, and finally the last thread of life which bound him to earth snapped, and he was summoned to his Master.

His life was full of years of good deeds accomplished. He was of a gentle and kindly nature and possessed of a host of friends, commanding at all times the attention and respect of his associates. The universal love and respect which the people of his home city had for him was most eloquently demonstrated in the vast numbers who attended his funeral and by the many magnificent floral tributes that surrounded him in death.

His funeral was generally observed throughout the city by the cessation of activities, as a mark of respect to the man who so faithfully and so earnestly served it.

Mr. Speaker, in the death of Mr. BROWNING we have all suffered a real loss. I shall personally never forget his many kindnesses to me when I first came to Congress and was new to the ways of this great body, and I deem it a high honor and a great privilege to here publicly express my gratitude and in my humble way endeavor to pay some lasting tribute to the memory of one of New Jersey's distinguished citizens, who leaves behind him a record of achievement and devotion to public duty which we, his colleagues, may well emulate, and of which the great State of New Jersey, which I, in part, have the honor to represent in this House, may well and justly be proud.

All who knew of the private life of Mr. BROWNING may well feel sure that he kept his "house in order" and that he was prepared to answer the sudden summons of his Master and to give an account of his stewardship, and I am sure that the answer made to him by his Lord was, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into everlasting glory."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, Mr. BROWNING was the Chief Clerk of the House when I first came to the House in 1897. That is a very important office in the conduct of the House. I had occasion at various times to come in contact with him as chairman of committees of the House. When the House Office Building was opened I was the chairman of the committee in charge of the distribution of rooms, and the question of the furnishing of the rooms and various things of that sort came under the jurisdiction of Mr. BROWNING as Chief Clerk of the House. I found him then, as always, very knowing in matters that came under his jurisdiction. He was never extravagant, never inclined to extravagance in public affairs, yet he was very anxious at that time, as always, to accommodate the Members of the House as far as it could properly be done.

When he first came to Congress to receive a committee assignment I was the minority leader in the Sixty-second Congress and had the assignment of committees on the Republican side of the House. Strictly speaking, New Jersey at that time was not entitled to a place on the Committee on Naval Affairs owing to the proximity of members of that committee from neighboring States, but I had such confidence in Mr. BROWNING's fairness and intelligence that I readily placed him on the committee which he desired to serve upon. Certainly no one who knew what he did upon that committee ever had reason to regret that assignment. Always able, always intelligent, always fair, never desirous of extravagance, but always desiring to have the Navy maintained in a high position, he did as good work on that committee as any Member of the House ever did. It happened that I was in the chair in the consideration of the last naval appropriation bill.

Before that I had urged Mr. BROWNING to go away and take a rest, not to give such active attention to the work of the House, but he persisted and insisted upon remaining at his post of duty, and I watched him very closely from the chair during the consideration of the naval bill and was very much afraid that he might break down before we had reached the completion of that bill. He stayed here helping, working, fulfilling his desires as to the naval bill and its consideration, and then the next morning, as though he had completed the work for which he had been assigned in this world, quickly and quietly passed away, carrying with him and his memory the affectionate regard and whole-soul respect of every Member of this House and of everyone in the country who knew him and knew his work. He is gone. I only pray that the people he left behind him in close association may always remember he never failed in his duty, he never failed in his love and friendship for his fellow kind. He was a noble man.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I approach this occasion in full appreciation of the loss sustained by Congress and by the State of New Jersey through the death of Representative WILLIAM J. BROWNING. But I also make confession of my feeling of personal grief and sorrow at the departure of one to whom I was drawn close by bonds of affection.

In the hearts and minds of the younger Members of the House, WILLIAM J. BROWNING occupied the place of a wise, kindly, and sympathetic father. His long experience in the House of Representatives, as an official and as a Member, gave him such a wealth of information regarding the practical workings of the machinery of the House as to make him an undoubted authority in this field. This knowledge it was his delight to place at the disposal of his younger and less experienced colleagues. I never knew a man so willing and generous in devoting time, trouble, and effort in helping his fellows, even in matters of trivial detail. I shall always cherish the memory of my first visit to the Capitol after my election as a Member of Congress. I had never met Mr. BROWNING before that occasion. He met me, gave me the friendliest of welcomes, and then devoted hours of his time to instructing me in the various necessary steps to get properly launched as a Member. He introduced me to every official, initiated me into the mysteries of the Document Room, Folding Room, Stationery Department, Government Printing Office, and in my rights and privileges as a Member generally.

From the messages and telephone calls he received I appreciated that he had much more important business demanding his attention, but he insisted that nothing must interfere with what he termed his duty to one of his boys. Throughout our service together it was his delight to impart information, to counsel and advise, and to render assistance. I have come to him with difficult problems, and he would lay aside his own work and accompany me to the departments to help solve them. From observation I know that this spirit of helpfulness was extended to all who chose to avail themselves of it.

WILLIAM J. BROWNING was in his every essence a Jerseyman. He was born, lived his allotted span of three score years and ten, and was laid to rest in the city of Camden. He was from early manhood identified with the public affairs of his city and State and was a loyal and uncompromising worker in the organization of the party of his choice. His character and temperament especially fitted him for effective work in this sphere in which unquestioned loyalty was deemed the paramount virtue. He was straightforward, simple, pious, and mentally honest. He accepted basic creeds in religion, morals, and politics and throughout his life undeviatingly adhered to them, indifferent to fitful breezes and transitory vagaries. Thus, from the depth of his convictions and in the best sense of the terms, he was "regular" and "organization."

He was happy in his committee assignment in the House. He thoroughly knew the American Navy and loved it. The great yards in his home town and across the Delaware River, where so many of the craft of the Navy were constructed, had from boyhood rendered him familiar with men-of-war. He had a widespread acquaintance with the personnel of the service and enjoyed not only their confidence and respect, but held their affection.

A substantial portion of his work in Congress was the preparation and passage of the annual naval bill. To this work he gave of his storehouse of information and of his capacity for painstaking attention to detail. He was in precarious health throughout this session of Congress and was urged by his intimates, both in and out of Congress, to withdraw for the time from active work and submit to the curative influences of a complete rest. He refused to listen to such advice. His sense of duty and his love for his work impelled him to remain at his task, although he was fully cognizant that by so doing he was imperiling his life. He was in his seat every moment of the time the naval bill was under consideration in the House. When it passed he was happy in the consciousness of having well done that which was intrusted to him to do and peacefully and painlessly entered upon his reward.

Life is a mystery. The purpose of the Creator in setting us here for a brief space is not given to us to fathom. Happiness is illusory and those who seek it most persistently seem least to possess it. I believe the best use to which we can put our lives is to seek those tasks within the scope of our powers and opportunities, the performance of which will yield the greatest amount of service to our fellows. I believe the greatest source of happiness is the accomplishment of the tasks we have set for ourselves. In the light of these concepts the enjoyment of life and happiness was in fullest measure accorded to our beloved colleague, WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker—

Friend after friend departs,
Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That has not here an end.

Such, in brief, is the history of life in all of its vocations, in all locations. Wherever our life may be, whatever our environments, that is the sum and the substance. We meet here as strangers, we part as friends. Our parting is often in different ways. Some remain but a little while, others quite a long time. Some retire, others die. We form our attachments here, and that is one of the sweet, refreshing compensations of our service—the friendships which we form and our associations and our work in this body. While we have our political differences, while we have our different lines of work, some engaged along this line and others along a different one, yet there is no middle aisle of partition in our friendships and no dividing line in our affections. We form our friendships here, we seem to knit our hearts together, and we sometimes feel that they are so closely knit together that our lives become almost twin lives in their affection and their devotion.

But, after all, there is no permanent union here. There comes a separation and that separation always brings a tinge of sadness and reflections of sorrow. The thought comes to us also of our unfinished purposes. We are unable fully and completely to carry out our plans and our purposes. So it is all through life. We have a purpose or a plan, but it is not completed. We come here with our purposes and our plans and often they go not as we desire them, because we may not have the time or the opportunity. In all of life it is full of unfinished purposes and incomplete plans, and that leads us to ask, Is death the end? If it is, life is a travesty; yea, more, it is a tragedy. But if, as we believe, and as we feel that we know, death is not the end, living is a privilege, and life may be a benediction.

Living is full of opportunity and life opens a great vista of opportunities and great visions of what may be the grandeur and the glory of living, boundless opportunities, and limitless time and limitless space for development and for growth and for association. Ah, we have our friendships here, but in the hereafter the friendships begotten here will ripen into the full fruition of love over there; the richness, the fullness, and the glory of living in the conception that life here is simply a dip into the cycle of eternity. The little babe here, the young man in the full vigor of manhood, pass away, the one with threescore years and ten passes away, and, after all, it is only a short time. As the psalmist has said, we spend our years as a tale that is told.

But, Mr. Speaker, with all of our years here there is to us a sense of a lack of satisfaction. The very incompleteness of our purposes, the very lack of opportunity to fully mature and develop our plans, carries with it the lack of satisfaction. And upon an occasion like this we ask ourselves, Where is the remedy, and will there be a full satisfaction? It is to the loved ones, it is to the bereaved ones, upon an occasion like this, that we can say, as we believe, we shall be satisfied when we awake in His likeness. In the fullness and in the sweetness, in the glory and the grandeur, of that living into which the grave is only the open portal, we shall be satisfied, and there is the comfort, and that is the consolation, and that is the inspiration of our living and our toiling here, our friendships, our nobility of purpose and character here, that we may carry with us that nobility and that character and that uplift of purpose into that satisfaction hereafter.

And here bound down by the limitations of flesh, here limited by the habiliment of the senses, with very narrow opportunities and very limited horizon of action, we can but contemplate the pleasure—I speak it advisedly—of the thought that the spirit that leaves us here becomes a liberated spirit, passing into the Great Beyond, where the habiliments of the flesh, where the boundaries of the five senses, shall not limit the opportunities and the horizon of our action and our conception and our living.

Mr. Speaker, when the committee attended the funeral services of Mr. BROWNING, in the city of Camden, it was my privilege then, at the request of the family, to speak some words, wherein I then spoke of our intimate association and referred to his magnificent years of service, his high ideals, his lofty purposes, and the great work that he had accomplished in more than 20 years of service in this great capital of this great country. I do not feel it incumbent here to attempt to repeat or to rehearse those things. Others to-day have spoken of them with affection. I know that during the 20 years in which we served together here, 10 of them when he was a Member of the House and 10 of them when he was Chief Clerk of the House, our hearts were knit together. I speak it—I loved him because he was a man worthy and deserving of the love and the affection of his associates and his friends.

Early in the morning, quietly, peacefully, he heard the Master's call, and his liberated spirit was in the presence of the Almighty.

Peacefully, restfully, we laid him away in his home city, full of honor, full of years, full of respect and confidence of those with whom all those years he had associated.

As I passed along the way I read, "When the trail of a tear is softened with smiles." And I thought it was a beautiful sentiment. "When the trail of a tear is softened with smiles." Beautiful it was, full of sentiment and full of inspiration, and yet I thought it might still be a little higher plane if we said, "When the trail of a tear is wiped away with love." As I knew Mr. BROWNING, I believe I can say truly that oftentimes he softened the trail of a tear with a smile; yea, more, he wiped away the trail of a tear with love.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, we have gathered here to-day in accordance with the time-honored custom of this House to pay tribute to the memory of one of its distinguished Members, Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

Spring, the most beautiful season of all the year, is a revelation of the matchless power and infinite wisdom of Almighty God. Winter has removed the plants and flowers with which we have become acquainted, and there is sent forward a new and fresh covering of the earth for man's comfort and enjoyment. The old order changeth for the new.

It is only natural then to expect changes in nature and the things material, but in our weakness we are unable to comprehend the divine plan of God as it relates to human life, and when called upon to lay away a loved one or a dear friend it is then we are brought face to face with the inevitable, and with tear-dimmed eye and broken heart we flee to the Rock of Ages for strength to bear our new burden.

Such was the experience of the membership of this House on the morning of March 24, 1920, when news of the sudden death of our colleague, WILLIAM J. BROWNING, was flashed through the halls of this magnificent building. Mr. BROWNING had passed through the winter of life and went forth into the spring of immortality to render an account of his stewardship and receive the reward of a faithful servant.

Within a very few days he would have completed the allotted span of life, for he was born in Camden, N. J., on April 11, 1850, and the years intervening were filled with useful service to his city, State, and Nation.

At the age of 17 years he entered the mercantile field, and although more or less actively engaged in that calling to the day of his death, he found time and counted it a privilege to take a keen interest in religious and civic affairs.

Busy men are always sought when important duties are to be performed, and Mr. BROWNING never shirked from a responsibility where the welfare of the community was concerned. He loved his home city with a devotion found only in strong men, and willingly sacrificed time from his private business and gave of his rich experience as frequently as the call was made.

He served the city of Camden for four years as a member of the board of education, and four years as a member of the city council, and was postmaster for five years.

Larger fields were opening to him, and in December of 1895 he was called to Washington as Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, in which capacity he served until April, 1911, when he was further honored by being elected as a Member of Congress.

As Chief Clerk he was thrown in contact with the leading men of our Nation, and the experience gained by such association, together with the exceptional ability displayed in handling the many details of his important office, eminently qualified him for the higher and more responsible duties of a Representative.

Mr. BROWNING immediately on assuming his new position became one of the valuable Members of this House, his judgment was sound, his reasoning comprehensive, and his advice frequently sought and always freely given. In matters of legislation he was conscientious, painstaking, and exceedingly fair. Sham was unknown to him, for he would not deceive nor could he tolerate deceit in others. He was a man of high ideals whose very presence convinced one of his sincerity of purpose.

He was one of those public servants who regarded a public trust with an eye single to the general welfare, and when it came to a decision on a public question he knew neither friend nor foe, but fearlessly, without regard to comment or criticism, did his duty as he saw it.

Of his many activities in Congress, the one that most appealed to him was the work of the Committee on Naval Affairs. He had long been a member of that committee and was a consistent advocate of the policy of the best Navy for the best Nation, and no responsibility in connection with the work of that committee was too great for him to assume. He had made a study and comparison of the ships and personnel of the navies of the world, and devoted every ounce of energy to making our Navy superior to all in personnel, ships, and gunnery. The work of that great committee was clearly demonstrated and justified by the brilliant record of our Navy during the World War.

In private life the same characteristics that made him a valued public servant were brought into play, and during his busy career Mr. BROWNING found time and cherished the privilege to take an active interest in church and Sunday-school work. For approximately 50 years he was a devout member of the First Baptist Church of Camden, N. J., and his sincere devotion to his church and God has been an inspiration to those who came in contact with him.

The people of a community can receive and deserve no higher encomium for their intelligence, their integrity, steadfastness, and patriotism than by their continued and hearty support of such a man as Mr. BROWNING, who for many years was afforded an opportunity for such public service. He earned and received and appreciated it, and the people reaped their full reward by the dedication of a rare life solely to their welfare.

The close of such a long, useful, and honored life could not arouse a poignant sorrow, except as one would sincerely mourn that such a departure is the divine dispensation, and that such a friend has finally left us.

My personal acquaintance with Mr. BROWNING covers a period of 20 years, and I miss him, and feel his loss keenly.

In a conversation with him on the night of March 23, immediately following the passage of the Naval appropriation bill, he bid me good-bye and said: "My work is finished; in the morning I am going home and take a long rest." Little did I think at that time the journey would be made to his heavenly home and the rest eternal, but the call came, and he was found ready and willing to respond.

Mr. Speaker, some two or three years ago Mr. BROWNING delivered a brief address in Camden, N. J., entitled, "How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood." It was so typical of the character of the man in that it showed the profound interest he took in the growth and development of his home city, that I feel it should be made a part of these services, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

"HOW DEAR TO MY HEART ARE THE SCENES OF MY CHILDHOOD.

"Camden was my birthplace; Camden was the scene of my childhood; and in Camden I hope to breathe my last.

"None but those who have shared the joys and the sorrows incident to the growth of their place of nativity can appreciate fully its advancement nor enjoy with the same degree of pride its progress and material development.

"To me there is hardly a street, or an old building, or an old resident that is not a reminder of the old Camden as I know it when a boy. And now there are the newer things, the modern evidence of Camden's present life, the two—the old and the new—interwoven, linking the past with the present.

"Doubtless to some here present personal reminiscences by a native and one of Camden's 'oldest inhabitants' will be lacking in interest, but I am to be pardoned for this recital, for the topic assigned to me renders my good reminiscent. No 'dim recollection' but vivid memory presents to my view the scenes and incidents which endear Camden to me.

"Camden—the name suggests at once the rights of freemen, for it was Charles Pratt, first Earl of Camden, that great English statesman and wise jurist, who recognized and advocated constitutional liberty for our colonists.

"No wonder that the name is held in honor and esteem, as is evidenced by its bestowal upon twenty-two cities and towns throughout the United States. Of this number, our own Camden is the best known—to us belongs the chief distinction of prior right and well-earned prominence.

"One of my most valued possessions is a small volume, issued in 1909, entitled 'Historical Sketch of Camden, New Jersey,' by our townsman, Howard M. Cooper. This comprehensive little history of early Camden is instructive and entertaining, and I would suggest to those of my hearers who have not already read it to do so.

"I was born in Camden in the middle of the nineteenth century, at 214 Market Street (now the C. C. Chew Dry Goods Store), then embraced in the old North Ward, afterwards and now the First Ward. I still reside and vote in the same ward. Our town then had less than 10,000 people; now we have 104,000, an average growth in population of over 15,000 per decade.

"In the census period from 1870 to 1880, the number of our people doubled. At that time our commercial and industrial foundation was laid, and our future success as a manufacturing city assured. Then it was that the old Camden of my boyhood began to develop into the Camden of to-day. The former things began to pass away.

"As I was only in my second year, I do not remember, of course, when the first street paving was laid in Camden, in 1852, though I do remember those cobblestones for many, many years after. In the same year of the street-paving improvement, the city began to be lighted by gas. So, we were moving along.

"One of my earliest recollections is that of the New Jersey State Agricultural Society Fair, which was held in the year 1855, in Diamond Cottage Grove and on the ground now bounded by Cooper, Market, Sixth, and Seventh Streets. On the same site, for many years afterward, the old game of 'town ball' was played, before the days of the modern game of baseball.

"In my childhood days Diamond Cottage Grove was a favorite place for holding picnics, and many parties came from Philadelphia to make merry in those picturesque old grounds. There was also a public pleasure garden in those days at the foot of Cooper Street; another on Market Street, above the West Jersey Hotel; and still another on the south side of Federal Street, near Front Street.

"I remember distinctly the burning of the ferryboat New Jersey in 1858. For long years afterwards many disputes regarding dates of happenings were settled to the satisfaction of all disputants by some one recalling 'it happened before,' or 'it happened after,' the burning of the New Jersey.

"In 1860 our population had grown to 14,358, and of this number 2,500 marched away to the war to fight for a united country. Well do I remember with what boyish pride I saw young, handsome Shreve Ackley (whose family and my own were intimate friends) march down Cooper Street at the head of Col. Einstein's regiment as its adjutant. The picture comes back to me to-day—and it has during all of the intervening years—as one of the most inspiring lessons of my life. Mr. Ackley is at the present time a resident of Philadelphia.

"In those early days there were very few houses north of Penn Street to the Delaware River. North from the vicinity of Main Street was farm land, and I have wandered through the corn fields 'many a time.' Between Penn and Main Streets, I remember, had been farm land; I had great fun there cutting asparagus on Saturdays when we had holiday from school. A portion of this tract was afterwards fenced in and used by the first Camden baseball players.

"Some of our best citizens resided on Market Street, between Front and Second; notably, Jame B. Dayton, Peter L. Voorhees, and Abraham Browning. These old houses are still standing, but are now owned by the Victor Talking Machine Co. and must soon disappear to make room for proposed extensive improvements.

"It is not likely that anyone present remembers the old ferryboats, Merchant and Mechanic, that ran from the foot of our Market Street, and the Mary and Dido that ran from the foot of Federal Street. It meant great effort and persistent hard work for those small boats to cross the river in wintertime, for there were no gigantic ice boats to break the way. In going to and from school during the years I attended the Friends Central High School in Philadelphia, I considered it great sport to jump off the boat onto the ice and walk ashore.

"The wonderful improvements that have been made in transportation facilities can well be appreciated when we compare the ferryboats just spoken of with the splendid steel boats Bridgeton and Salem, just placed on the line.

"The first school that I attended was a private one, taught by Miss Caddie Glover, in the second and top story of the Perseverance Hose House, on Third Street, below Market. Later, I went to another private school, in rooms over the grocery store of Burr Moore, on the southwest corner of Third and Market Streets, taught by Mrs. Catharine Cadwell and Miss Kate Cadwell, her daughter. Next, I went to the old academy, at Sixth and Market Streets on the site where the George Genge School now stands; the academy with a branch at Second and Plum Streets was the only public school in the city at that time. After my father's death, which occurred in 1861, my mother sent me to the Friends Central High School in Philadelphia, where I continued for four years.

"The development of our schools from the old academy days to our present magnificent system, with its kindergarten, primary, grammar, high, and manual-training departments, seems almost like a wonderful dream that has come true. I am glad indeed to have shared, even in a very small way, as a member of the board of education, in putting a few cogs in the wheels that have revolved to such purpose. In my early days Camden had not engaged much in manufactures. Jesse W. and John F. Starr were the proprietors of one of the leading establishments, now the Camden Iron Foundry. There were three sawmills on the Delaware River: McKeen & Bingham, the Garrison, and the Stockham. There were also the Esterbrook Steel Pen Co., the Collings Carriage Co., the Charles S. Caffrey Carriage Co., Potts & Kletts Chemical Works, Browning Bros. Log Works, Merrys Paper Mills, and one or two establishments on Cooper River.

"At the present time we find employed in our 365 manufacturing concerns between twenty and twenty-five thousand people, in iron mills, pottery plants, woolen mills, making soups, candy, chemicals, oilcloth, embroidery, laces, shoes, corks, talking-machines, and a thousand and one other articles, from the little steel pen to the proudest battleships and merchandise-bearing vessels in the world.

"Our wealth, such as it is, does not consist merely in tangible property, or stocks and bonds. It consists in homes—real homes, modest homes, owned and lived in by our own artisans, mechanics and business men, where the rights and immunities of conscious, dignified, and responsible proprietorship is in strong contrast to those great 'Alps of civilization' congesting the metropolitan cities, wherein home life and its sweetness is absent and the sense of individuality lost. Thank God for the 'two-story' homes of Camden!

"The future of Camden is unguessed. We shall be to Philadelphia what Jersey City is to New York. Our natural advantages as to water front are magnificent, and the possibilities for Camden's future business developments are almost without limitation.

"The War Department has just granted an extension of our pierhead lines in the Delaware River, and two concerns are ready to build wharves as far into the river as permissible. A governmental survey of the Delaware in front of Camden is just about completed; we shall soon have deeper water, so that vessels of deep draft may land at our wharves.

"I can not express with what interest, pleasure, and anticipation I am doing my share of the work toward securing for Camden all of the advantages that are sure to come when our water fronts on the Delaware River and on Cooper River are available for 'big business.' Sites unsurpassed for manufacturing purposes are located on both the Delaware and the Cooper, and I believe that we shall see all of the available space thus utilized in the near future. This all spells an increase of population and greater prosperity.

"Camden to-day is a city of which we must feel proud. We have churches of every denomination; we have well paved and beautifully lighted streets; we have the best drinking water in the world; we have a splendid school system; we have fine public library accommodations; we have excellent fire and police departments; and, best of all, we have a God-fearing, public-spirited population. On such foundation stones we are bound to build high, and if I am anything of a prophet you will see our city one of the leading cities of the State of New Jersey before any of us are many years older."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING passed away on the 24th day of March last, at the age of 69, after an illustrious, successful, and notable career. In his death not only the State and district that honored and trusted him, not only this Congress that loved and respected him, but the Nation, as well, sustained a great loss.

My association with him was close and intimate and I personally felt his loss. It has been well said by another—commenting on the friendships in Congress—that some of the sweetest fruits found in the experience of political life are those which hang over the party wall.

To the listeners in the gallery who witness the daily proceedings on the floor, with its sharp clashes and collisions in the heat of debate, to the public at large, reached by the echoes of the strife only, it may be difficult to realize that there are found here not alone cordial relations, but the very closest ties of warmest personal friendship between those sitting on the different sides of this dividing aisle.

But this fact is well known to those familiar with conditions here, and no one ever gathered to himself here more devoted friends than did Mr. BROWNING.

He had a golden heart, a generous mind, a knightly soul that inspired friendship, trust, and confidence in all whose good fortune it was to know him. Correct in his habits, devoted to his family, true to his friends, loyal to his convictions, he was an upright, conscientious, industrious, high-minded public servant.

He was a Christian gentleman in the best sense of that word. Devoted to his church, yet neither bigoted nor narrow. Generous and charitable wherever he was, the sunlight of good cheer and the wholesomeness of a real friendship could be found—it was his noble nature to love his friends, but above all to love his country.

The world was better for his having lived in it, and the influence of his private life, his goodly deeds, his public service will never die. Though he has left us to join the great majority, we can yet claim him, for—

There is
One great society alone on earth,
The noble living and the noble dead.

How little is here, Mr. Speaker, after all, of this true friend and good man that is consigned to the tomb. The shroud and the vault conceal the body from our vision, but the memory of his good deeds and great actions lives on, and will remain fresh and green forever, and will bear fruit elsewhere.

The day has come, not gone;
The sun has risen, not set;
His life is now beyond
The reach of death or change—
Not ended, but begun.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. BROWNING fell asleep in the barber's shop of the Capitol; and shortly thereafter the colored barbers, who were devoted to him, met and adopted a resolution dictated by Prince Robinson, one of the barbers, who always waited on him. I ask unanimous consent to read and insert the resolution in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Like a shadow thrown softly and sweetly from a passing cloud, death fell upon Mr. BROWNING, just as he was rising from the chair after his morning shave, and he gently and quietly passed away in the arms of old Prince, his friend and colored barber, who comes from my State, and who has a great heart and noble impulses, and the fondest appreciation of Mr. BROWNING. It was this unlettered colored man, loving him with a devotion unsurpassed, who dictated this plain, simple, yet sincere tribute to our friend who has gone, given just as Prince wrote it:

RESOLUTION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1920.

It behooves me to say that the Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING passed away so suddenly while under my care, I could hardly realize it for several days. I was devoted to Mr. BROWNING and he was to me, and I always tried to be at my post on time to wait on him, so as not to excite him, for I knew his condition.

Mr. BROWNING was a great man and good to all, and all of us mourn his loss: Therefore, be it

Resolved, As it pleased Almighty God to take from our midst a statesman and friend, I, Prince Robinson and brother barbers, offer this resolution in respect to Mr. BROWNING; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the heart-stricken family.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of the funeral services held at the First Baptist Church in Camden, N. J., on Saturday, March 21, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEHLBACH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I regard it as a privilege to pay tribute to the life, character, and memory of our late colleague, Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, whose untimely death has taken from the House of Representatives one of its most valuable and painstaking Members.

As a Member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, where I served with Mr. BROWNING during the greater portion of the past eight years, it was my good fortune to be guided very largely in my opinion on matters of naval affairs, by his wisdom, honesty of purpose, excellent vision, and fair leadership for a military service which he dearly loved.

His attention to duty, his close application to public affairs, even after he was informed of his shattered health, was a matter of comment by his colleagues on the committee and of anxiety to his friends. He was not willing to take his needed rest and was on the floor of the House watching every angle of the disputes and parliamentary tangles of the annual naval appropriation bill, barely 12 hours before his untimely taking away. His quiet persistence in giving personal attention to every detailed requirement of the Navy, almost up to the very moment of his death, but characterizes the sterling qualities of this man who has given so much to his State and to the Nation.

He was not willing to take his needed rest, for he felt that his duty was here in the House, and faithfully he remained at his post until death's hand was actually upon his shoulder beckoning him to come to that home of uncertainty of the future, where all of our troubles are left behind.

Mr. BROWNING was always considerate of his colleagues, broad-minded and generous-hearted. He was respected by all who knew him.

When the war came, Mr. Speaker, no man in this Chamber gave more undivided support to the great conflict in which we were engaged than did Congressman BROWNING.

The Committee on Naval Affairs has already felt the absence of Mr. BROWNING, who gave to the meetings of that committee his undivided attention. He endeavored to familiarize himself with the naval code and with regulations and recommendations of the Navy Department, that the service he rendered in the consideration both of recommendations and of bills referred to the committee, might reflect the ripe fruits of a long tenure of activity in the Nation's Capitol, where that experience gave full knowledge of the subject involved.

Some of us are prone at times to be lax in the discharge of our committee duties, feeling that others will bear the burden, and that personal attention is not therefore a matter of mandatory importance. Congressman BROWNING never so felt nor acted. Others might be absent from the meetings of the committee; others might, for many reasons, be unacquainted or unfamiliar with its work and with the character and purpose of the bills referred to it for consideration, but Congressman BROWNING never. He was always in his seat and always vigilant and active, both in attention and in inquiry.

His talents were not of the brilliant variety; they were solid, practical, substantial, and if it be true, as Macaulay says, that genius is but another name for a capacity for hard work and unremitting labor, then Congressman BROWNING was a genius.

Bringing to bear upon the duties of the House the best faculties with which a Member is endowed is the highest possible service to himself and to the country. Measured by that standard, Congressman BROWNING was one of the most useful Members of this body. He was industrious, vigilant, painstaking, and conscientious. He loved his country and his State, appreciated the dignity and the duties of the high position which his people had conferred upon him, and reflected credit upon them and himself so long as he spoke for them and for the Nation.

We lose much in his death, but those nearer and dearer lose more. I can simply say that the tenderness and solicitude which he evidenced for his friends and loved ones were worthy of a son of God. May the peace and consolation of the Divine Master ever bless and comfort those who are left to mourn.

FUNERAL SERVICES OVER THE BODY OF HON. WILLIAM J. BROWNING AT THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF CAMDEN, N. J., AT 2 O'CLOCK IN THE AFTERNOON, SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1920.

"Prayer by The Rev. John W. Lyell.

"The Rev. Mr. LYELL. I ask your attention to some selections from the Word of God:

"'God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore, will we not fear, though the earth do change, and though the mountains be moved in the heart of the seas. Be still, and know that I am God: The Lord of hosts is with us; The God of Jacob is our refuge.'

"'The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.'

"'For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.'

"'For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from Heaven. If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now, he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord, for we walk by faith—not by sight. We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of Him.'

"'But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial; but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkle of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.'

"'Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God; believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. Peace I leave with you; My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.'

"May God add His blessing to the reading of His Word.

"At other times and in other places men will gather to make due recognition of the distinguished service that our brother has rendered in the affairs of city, State, and Nation. We meet to-day in the House of God, and have come, as all men must come to the House of God, leaving outside all external distinctions of rank and privilege. We are here because we realize our need of God and our dependence upon Him, and because there is no other source of hope or comfort or real consolation.

"The things that count in an hour like this are not so much what a man has gained or what he did, but what he was. Earthly glories are fleeting and transitory; character is the only thing that abides. When death comes it compels a new evaluation of the things of time and eternity in an hour like this. The teachings of God's Book have new significance.

"'Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all needed things shall be added unto you.' 'Lay up your treasures in Heaven, where moth and rust do not corrupt or thieves break through and steal.'

"The deepest needs of the soul can only be met by the truth that Divine Love has revealed. The comfort men are vainly seeking in the work of Spiritism is openly offered by Him that brought life and immortality to light, and our hopes of a blessed immortality and a home in Heaven are assured by Him whose victory over sin and death the church will soon celebrate with glad Easter exercises.

"It is fitting that we bring here this afternoon all that is mortal of our brother, to the place where he publicly confessed his faith in Christ, and because here, as nowhere else, we can face death without the sense of defeat. It is here that we can say with faith triumphant, 'O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ, our Lord.'

"This remarkable attendance of representative men from all walks in life is a wonderful tribute to the ability of our brother to make friends and the appreciation his many sterling qualities has compelled; but we are drawn here to-day not so much by reason of our associations in the great activities of life, but because a friend and brother who has fought a good fight and kept the faith has fallen in the discharge of his duty, and we come impelled by friendship and affection to assure his sorrowing loved ones and friends of his youth and maturer years that we, too, loved him and share their sense of loss and that our hearts go out to them with a sympathy that words can not adequately express.

"Practically the whole of the life so recently ended was spent in this city, and much of it in the pitiless publicity of official life. Our brother passes to his reward with an unsullied name. The heritage of a spotless name is greater to be desired than much riches. Many traits of his Quaker ancestry persisted unto the end of his life; his avoidance of ostentation and display. He often appeared austere and reserved to those who did not know him well, but a seeming brusqueness of manner could not hide the bigness and warmth of our brother's heart.

"An aged farmer and friend of Daniel Webster stood by the open grave at Marshfield. He said, 'The world is lonesome and Webster dead. There is only one heart in Marshfield to-day and that is sad.' It is no exaggeration to say, 'There is only one heart in Camden to-day and that is sad.'

"Of the husband and father I will not presume to speak. That holy of holies is not lightly to be entered by one outside the inner circle. But as his pastor and his friend for more than 30 years, I count it a privilege to speak a word of appreciation on behalf of his brothers and sisters of this church.

"Our Brother BROWNING was baptized as a young man into the fellowship of this church, April 5, 1867, and has been a member of this church for nearly 53 years. I need not speak of the strength of those ties which have bound our hearts together, as we have labored and toiled and as we have made sacrifices for the sake of the Kingdom of God in this place. I can say it earnestly, most sincerely—our brother loved this church, he was faithful in attendance upon its services when he was in the city, and he was interested in all that pertained to its welfare.

"I have received a beautiful letter from a brother pastor in the city of Washington, Dr. J. J. Minor, who doubtless is known to some here to-day, saying how for many years he had appreciated the loyalty of our brother to the church, the denomination of which he was a member, and how often he had been present at the services there.

"Our brother was a member of the Bible school. He was a member of one of the classes of our school and he was treasurer of his class. He was not too big nor too busy to do this humble service for his Master and for the church, and I can say that the service that he rendered was with that same conspicuous fidelity that characterized the discharge of his public duties.

"He was one of the oldest members of this church, though we have a number who exceed him in the calendar years of their lives.

"We shall miss him. The sense of loss in our minds and hearts is very great. As a citizen of Camden for more than 30 years, perhaps I might venture to add just a word or two of my appreciation of him as a man and a citizen. As I think of WILLIAM J. BROWNING and his life, as I have known it for more than 30 years, I would say that one of the outstanding characteristics of the man was his loyalty to his friends and the truth as he saw it. He was a man of very positive convictions. All men of much strength are men of conviction, and all men who have deep convictions are likely to awaken some opposition somewhere, but everyone respects a man who has conviction, and a man like WILLIAM J. BROWNING, who not only had conviction, but had the courage of his conviction. As I have known his service in the years that are gone, I think of him as a friend of the weak and helpless. I think I never knew a man to go to WILLIAM J. BROWNING in trouble, in need, that he did not endeavor to serve, and I have reason to know that the men who served their country in 1861 to 1865, who had any trouble about their pension matters and felt they needed a friend and a friend's advice in that matter—I have reason to know that none of them ever went to him in vain, and there was no trouble too great for him to undertake if he could secure what was their right and just due.

"He was very conscientious and faithful in the discharge of all his obligations, and no personal considerations could swerve him from what he felt to be the path of duty.

"WILLIAM J. BROWNING gave his life in the service of his country just as surely as the men who to-day lie on Flanders field. He knew the risk that he ran in remaining in Washington in spite of the warnings of his doctor, but he did not hesitate to risk his life in the discharge of what he felt was his duty. And we, his fellow members of the Church of Christ, we, his fellow citizens in the goodly town of Camden, are here to say, 'Well done,' and lay our chaplets of love and appreciation on his casket. To have lived thus is to have lived well a life of service and helpfulness of others, the highest form of life, and our brother was vouchsafed a satisfaction rarely given to men, to reach the end of life and feel life's work was finished and it was well done.

"Our sister, Mrs. Browning, has furnished me a cherished clipping, which, she says, might have been written with her husband in mind, and contains an exhortation to which all should give heed.

"FINISH THY WORK.

"Finish thy work; the time is short;
The sun is in the West;
The night is coming down—'till then
Think not of rest.

"Yes, finish thy work, then rest;
Till then rest never;
The rest prepared for thee by God
Is rest forever.

"Finish thy work, then wipe thy brow;
Ungird thee from thy toil;
Take breath, and from each weary limb
Shake off the soil.

"Finish thy work; then go in peace;
Life's battle fought and won;
Hear from the throne the Master's voice:
'Well done! Well done!'

"Give thanks to Him who held thee up,
In all thy path below;
Who made thee faithful unto death
And crowns thee now.

"So be my passing!
My task accomplished and the long day done,
My wages taken, and in my heart
Some late lark singing.
Let me be gathered to the quiet West,
The sundown splendid and serene.

"I count this a very great privilege. We have with us to-day two distinguished gentlemen who have been associated with Mr. BROWNING in his public life in Washington. I have very great pleasure in presenting the Hon. Mr. PADGETT, who served with Mr. BROWNING in the arduous work on the Naval Committee.

"Mr. PADGETT. Christian friends, nearly twenty years of association with Mr. BROWNING continued to grow and to ripen stronger and stronger into a closer and better and more intimate friendship. When I first came to Congress I knew him not as a Member of the House then, but as the Chief Clerk of the House, in which capacity he served faithfully and well for many years. Upon the death of Mr. Loudenslager, whom I knew well, Mr. BROWNING succeeded him, not only as a Member of the House representing this district, but also succeeded him upon the Naval Affairs Committee, and for nearly 10 years we have been associated closely and intimately in the work of the Navy.

"Permit me to say that he was indeed and in truth a friend of the Navy. There was never any time that his faith in the Navy faltered or that his efforts failed. He was true to a deep-seated conviction that the Navy was one of the great and honored instrumentalities and agencies of our Government, challenging the admiration and deserving of the esteem and love and affection of the American people, and he never lost sight of an opportunity to render every service and every assistance he could, not only for its maintenance, but for its uplift and its stability.

"And to-day, gathered as we are here, I know of no greater tribute that I could speak of him than to say that at all times, under all circumstances, he was true and faithful and shirked not his duty nor evaded his obligations. It is not my purpose this afternoon, friends, to attempt to rehearse the many things, the many activities of his public life, nor to analyze the many virtues of his life, and yet I must say that he was an honorable man. Associating and seeing each other from many angles and from different sides and under conditions when we were cooperating together and when we were pulling for separate ideas and policies and purposes according to our convictions of what may have been our duty under particular circumstances, we have an opportunity to judge of the real merit and composition of a man, and I do not think that any man who was associated with Mr. BROWNING came away without being convinced with a deep conviction that he was an honorable man.

"Again, my friends, he was an honest man. It has been said that an honest man is the noblest work of God. To all that it means, all that it carries with it, he is entitled. He was an honest man, not alone in the material sense of paying debts or dealing in the physical and material things, but he was honest in the conception and ideals of true manhood, the principles of character that constitute real manhood, honest in his purpose, honest in his convictions, honest in his affections, honest in his judgment and his conception of his duty and toward his fellows and his country.

"My friends, the pastor has referred to it—he was a man of convictions and courageous in those convictions. He was not wishy-washy. He had his convictions; he believed in them and he had the courage and hardihood to maintain them and insist upon them. He was a man that, when you got close to him, had a warm, generous heart.

"I do not know where there was a closer association than between Mr. BROWNING and myself, and some years ago it was my pleasure and privilege, which I have often thought of and reflected upon, to come with him over here. I attended service with him in this church, and I occupied the pew there indicated, with him and his beloved wife. I enjoyed the hospitality of his home. My friends, the tie that is broken between us touches my heart.

"Not only in the personal relationships of life, but he was honest and honorable in the discharge of his public duties and in meeting his patriotic obligations. What more can I say? For more than 20 years he met honorably, faithfully, intelligently, earnestly the duties and responsibilities that devolved upon him as representative duties, as official duties, in the Capitol of the Nation.

"Last Wednesday morning, early in the morning, as was his custom, he went into the Capitol building, where he had so long served faithfully and well, and while in that building he heard the low, soft call. He answered it. It was the Angel call. His body became quiet and his spirit went to his God. Lovingly and tenderly they brought him here to his honored State of New Jersey, and to his beloved Camden, where he was born, where he was reared and lived all these years, always retaining the respect and honor and confidence of his people.

"My friends, on an occasion like this I do not wish to speak of the darkness, but of the light; not of the night, but of the day; not of the sunset, but of the sunrise. We see before us these flowers. Beautiful they are, and fragrant; but they soon will wilt and wither and their fragrance will be lost in the air. We want something at this time more lasting and more substantial, and the thought comes to us of the occasion when, in other days, in the early morning of the first day of the week the women went to the open grave looking for a loved one, and the Angel said to them, 'He is not here. He is risen.' O they are comforting words on an occasion like this, and as we stand by this casket, we, too, say, 'He is not here. He is risen,'—risen not into the beauty of these flowers, for they soon will wilt and fade; not into the beauty of the golden-tinted sunset of the west, for the shadow of night will blot it out; but risen in the life, into the fullness and the sweetness of that life where opportunity for greater and better things will be as immeasurable and as illimitable as the universe of God, and whose duration will be commensurate with the eternity of God.

"O my friends, the comfort is on an occasion like this, the life—the fullness, the sweetness, the beauty of the life of which the grave is only the portal, or the open door of the transition.

"My friends, they say that when we pass away we take nothing with us. It is not so. Mr. BROWNING had a wealth of character, a richness of soul, that moth and rust could not corrupt and thieves could not break through and steal—a wealth and a richness that he could take with him when he met his God."

"Rev. Mr. LYELL. I present the Hon. Mr. HUTCHINSON, a member of the House of Representatives from New Jersey, and associated with Mr. BROWNING.

"Mr. HUTCHINSON. Christian friends: I have been requested to speak for the New Jersey delegation. Words are very hard to find to express what the New Jersey delegation thought of Mr. BROWNING. He has always been a safe adviser to follow and we have taken advantage of his judgment, and we have found him an earnest, true worker. He always considered a subject very carefully. After he made up his mind he always did what he thought was right, irrespective of what the consequences might be.

"I suppose, personally, I have been closer to Mr. BROWNING than most, for the last two or three years, because both of us have had loved ones at home afflicted with the same disease, and we have talked for hours. I know what a great care he had and what thoughts he gave to his loved ones at home, and how he wished them to get better. I know, of my own experience, that the New Jersey delegation, the district which he represented, the State of New Jersey, and the loved ones at home, will miss him. He was a faithful worker and his one desire was to do what was right for the most people. He was a great credit to your district and to the country.

"For a great while his health was so bad it seemed a real injury to ask him to do anything. Still, he was always ready to do what he could for his fellow men; and I certainly felt very sorry myself as I came back here. I was very much attached to Mr. BROWNING, and I know I shall miss him, as will the entire New Jersey delegation."

"Prayer by the Rev. Mr. LYELL:

"Again, O greatest Lord and Master, we lift our hearts and our voices to Thee. We need Thee. We realize that all our help must come from Thee, and we thank Thee for Thy love and the love that was manifest in Jesus, Thy son, to be our Savior. We thank Thee for His life of serving and sacrifice, for His death and for His resurrection. We thank Thee for the hope we have in Him, for the life that now is and for the life that is to come. We thank Thee for that hope, that faith, that takes away the fear of death, and that blessed assurance which Thou hast given us of the home eternal that Love has prepared.

"We pray Thy blessing as we meet and meditate this hour upon the blessings of life and death. We thank Thee for the promise, for the assurance of deliverance from the power of sin and death. We thank Thee for the blessed hope of resurrection and immortal life offered through Jesus Christ, our Lord and our Savior.

"We pray Thee to bless and comfort the hearts that are heavy and sad to-day, because of the separation that has taken place. We thank Thee for the comfort Thou hast brought, of the hope of a soul sure and steadfast.

"We thank Thee for the great promise of Thy word that all things shall work together for good for those that love Thee, and out of experiences that are grievous for the present Thou wilt bring far more exceeding and eternal faith.

"Help us that we may be submissive to Thy Divine Will, realizing that not in anger, but in love Thou dost so visit Thy children, and underneath is Thy everlasting love.

"We pray Thy blessing upon the family and the relatives and friends who have gathered from far and near. O, Our Father, we pray our hearts may be comforted, our faith strengthened. May we give ourselves in consecration to Thee and Thy cause, and look forward with glorious hope, with faith and confidence to the things of life, and feel that that same power that raised up Christ from the dead will raise up all those who put their trust in Him.

"Bless those who have assembled here; bless those in distant places who, in thought, are turning toward here; sanctify to us all the lessons of life and death; go with us now as we shall go on the journey to the cemetery, and stand by us as we stand by the open grave. Help us to realize, as never before, that death is not the end of all, but that the power that raised up Christ will raise up this loved one also.

"Hear us in our prayer; forgive all that Thou hast seen amiss in us here, and guide us as we go on to the end of our days. May we hear Thee say, as we trust Thou hast said to our loved one, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant.'

"For Jesus sake: Amen."

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I did not have the pleasure of knowing Mr. BROWNING for as many years as many Members of the committee or the House, but ever since I have been in Congress I have been more or less intimately thrown into contact with him, being upon the same committee, and had an opportunity to observe what I believe to be the salient points of his character. We have all known men who, though blessed with mental strength, seemed to make small use of their talents and seemed to make small impression either upon the conditions or the men with whom they were brought in contact. And more often than not I believe that we have found when such was the case that the failure of the strength of the man to manifest itself in results was due to two important weaknesses: Either they were intellectual Hamlets and the native hue of results was sicklied over with the pale cast of thought and enterprises of mighty moment were brought to naught because of lack of intellectual decision as to what course of conduct to follow, or else they failed because the decision once made, as a matter of intellect, they lacked the courage to put the resolution into action.

Such was not the case with Mr. BROWNING. Regardless of what the question was, regardless of how close it might be, Mr. BROWNING forced his intellect to the consideration of the matter until there was intellectual conviction as to what was right or best, and then he had the moral quality, the moral courage, to put that conviction into action and to defend it. I believe that his success as a member of the committee and of the House of Representatives was due to the possession in a large degree of these qualities.

But with it all he had the saving grace which made him, though a warrior, well beloved. Possibly in no assembly in the country is there manifested more the power of human kindness and of love than in this body. We are large in number, and there is represented here practically every type of man that lives as far as intellectual and emotional characteristics are concerned.

We all have seen some man who excited our admiration. All the world loves a fighter. We admire their skill, we have a profound admiration for their intellectual abilities, and yet with it all these men fail to win the affection of those with whom they come in contact. Our admiration was the judgment of intellect and not of heart. We have seen others just as stanch warriors, just as powerful in the conflict, just as ready for the battle, and while these men excited our admiration for their ability, with ourselves the recipients of their blows, there followed no sense of personal bitterness or animosity. And while engaged in constant conflict in this forum of debate and battle, regardless of party lines or difference of opinion, they herein not only won the admiration but the love of their colleagues.

There is an explanation for this, and I think it is that the men of the latter type added to their ability as warriors the endowment of having in addition a fund of human sympathy, of human love, which appeals to the like quality in others and brings a ready and generous response.

And while they take positions and while they battle with what they conceive to be errors there is always absent from their method any sort of personal feeling or personal animosity. Mr. BROWNING had this quality to a large degree, so that, though he was intellectually vigorous, firm in decision, and ready at all times to defend his position, there went always with it a ready sympathy and love for his opponent as a man which made it impossible to do other than to like and love him. Men come and go. They play their brief parts upon the stage and pass in to the wings. We say they die, and die they do in a sense, and yet I do not believe that any man dies or that any human life at all worth while is ever blotted from this world. We are a part and parcel of every man we have met and every thought we have thought. The personal contact and influence of men plays its part in molding and fashioning our lives and our characters. The influence of the life continues to live though the spirit itself has passed. I believe this will be preeminently true of the case of Mr. BROWNING. If he had done nothing else than to furnish us with a striking example of loyalty to those things, principles, and institutions in which he believed, he would have furnished us something of exceeding great value.

Mr. Speaker, I have prepared no formal address. I have simply undertaken in a simple way to bear tribute to my friend.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. Speaker, it was not my good fortune to know Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, in whose memory we are gathered here to-day, until I became a Member of this body, and therefore I can speak of him only as I knew him and of the opinion I formed of him during our close association in this brief period of time.

I was first introduced to our revered friend on December 4, 1918, in his office by my predecessor, Congressman Dow H. Drukker. My first impression was that I had met a man whose demeanor was quiet, whose nature was sympathetic, whose greatest desire was to help his fellow man, and whose character was of a firmness that commanded the highest respect. That impression deepened and broadened as other striking and admirable characteristics came to my attention and I have often regretted the fact that I had not known Mr. BROWNING for a longer time to enjoy his company and the guiding influence of such a lovable man and earnest worker. With his many other remarkable traits there were also noticeable his great love for his fellow man and his charitable disposition toward his enemies, without whom no man lives who accomplishes anything of permanent value, such as Mr. BROWNING did.

But one of Mr. BROWNING's most apparent qualities was his quiet, ever-persisting determination to "carry on" to a success whatever project he started. This continued with him to the last few days of his career.

An incident indicative of this characteristic I well remember. I was in the city of Camden upon the occasion of the triumphant return of the Blue and Gray Division from overseas and at that time had the good fortune and honor to march by the Congressman's side. The day was extremely hot and Mr. BROWNING's health at that time was not of the best. Observing the terrible strain he was laboring under I advised him to drop out of the line of march at the grand stand instead of continuing to the end. Mr. BROWNING replied: "If these boys could suffer hardship and punishment over there in that veritable hell for me, the least I can do is to march with them here to the end."

I also recall the day that he told me of his physician's advice to stay home and rest. He refused to act upon this advice because, as he stated, "I have a duty to perform, and my colleague, Congressman BUTLER, needs my help, and I won't desert him at such a time." Only too well do I recall that he stayed until the curtain was rung down on that committee's work, and the excitement that preceded the close was the means, to my mind, of hastening his death.

Mr. BROWNING sacrificed much for the public service. He gave half of his life to his public duties and did his work faithfully and well. He was a model for his people to follow and a credit to the State that gave him birth. I shall always cherish the memory of this patriot who died in the service of his country, for I have no doubt that he would have been spared for a long time to come had he left his post of duty for the rest and quiet he so much needed.

Just as I remember him at his desk on that December morning when I first met him, Mr. BROWNING remained throughout the rest of his days—always willing and ready to guide and help me over the rough places. And little, my brethren, did I think on that morning that he passed away that I was to be the last member of the New Jersey delegation to have the pleasure of listening to his pleasant and cheerful voice, as he talked with his old friend Prince, and giving advice and counsel to him, and jokingly saying he was going home for a long rest. He said this was his last shave, and little did I realize at that time that was to be so, and when within 20 minutes after word was flashed to my office that Mr. BROWNING had passed away it was a shock I have not yet recovered from, because I really thought at that time he would be spared for some time to come.

His life will be a lamp to guide me in the years to come. His character teaches me to spread the brotherly cement of kindness and good cheer along life's pathway.

Good-bye, Brother BROWNING! May God, who watches over us, rest your soul and admit you to the unseen Temple where peace and joy abound forever more.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, on four occasions prior to to-day in the little more than seven years that I have been a Member of this House I have participated in these sad yet beautiful exercises in commemoration of the life, character, and public service of a Representative from the State of New Jersey or a Senator from my State stricken down in his service in the Congress of the United States. To-day we have assembled here to pay our feeble tributes of love and respect to the character and public services of our late colleague, Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, for 16 years clerk of this House and for almost 10 years the Representative of the First Congressional District of New Jersey. Mr. BROWNING was not personally known to me until I became a Member of the House. That was in the Sixty-third Congress. He was the only Member of his party from the State of New Jersey who had been elected to the Sixty-third Congress. I knew of his long and distinguished service as clerk of the House of Representatives; but I did not then know of his kindly and sympathetic nature. I hesitated to approach him for information so essential to a new Member of this great body. I overcame that feeling, however, introduced myself and asked him a number of questions, the answers to which were given so readily, so sympathetically, that I felt as if I had known him all my life. We were fast friends from that day to the hour of his death.

It was my privilege on many occasions to sit with him late in the afternoon in the restaurant of the House, and I am afraid that I trespassed rather too freely upon his kindness. But I am glad I did so because I feel that I knew BILL BROWNING the better for those opportunities. He was a gentle, kindly, unassuming, intelligent, conscientious worker in this body, as he had been no doubt as Clerk of this House during the 16 years prior to his service as a Member, and I am sure he was as postmaster of his native city, and as a member of the city council, and before that in the humble but very useful office of a member of the board of education of Camden. I reached the Capitol on the morning of his death a few moments after Mr. BROWNING's body had been removed from the barber shop. I was shocked as was everybody who had been here the day before, and who had observed his work and listened to his words on the naval bill, to learn that our friend was no more. I could not help but feel, and I think everybody felt, that Congressman BROWNING, though the armistice had been signed for upward of a year and a half, died in the service of his country and made the supreme sacrifice just as completely as any boy who wore the uniform of our country and who made that sacrifice overseas and in time of war. His sorrowing widow and son have lost a devoted husband and father; his intimates a loyal and faithful friend; this House a courageous, competent, conscientious Member; and his State and his country a public servant who has done his work well.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the kindly spirit and gentle nature of WILLIAM J. BROWNING endeared him to all of his associates, but especially to the members of the Naval Affairs Committee, whose closer and more intimate contact gave them a better knowledge and keener appreciation of his truly admirable qualities.

My own real personal acquaintance with Mr. BROWNING began in the summer of 1918, when he and I sailed with 11 other members of the Naval Committee to inspect our naval activities in Europe. That remarkable journey, which lasted two months, brought 13 men into unusually intimate association. We were together under varying conditions in many countries. We were subjected to dangers in war on land and sea.

We visited and ate with thousands of our brave sailors and marines. We were received and entertained by kings and rulers. We traveled almost continuously and each day was filled with strenuous activity and labor under the vigorous leadership of our then Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. PADGETT. It was an arduous undertaking for a man of the age and failing health of Mr. BROWNING, but while he sometimes had to walk a bit slower than the others he never complained. He never gave up or got discouraged, but went everywhere and took an interested and intelligent part in all investigations and activities, and he was always the same courteous, kindly, friendly, American gentleman—at times seemingly severe in demeanor, but gentle and kind at heart.

Our friend was essentially a democratic American. His mind comprehended no difference between royalty and the freeborn American citizen, except that the latter was more fortunate. I well remember the occasion of a dinner given our committee by the King of Italy. It was in a villa occupied by him behind the Italian front. It was at night after a hard day's work by our committee. There was a considerable gathering of Italian officers with the King—an altogether brilliant military function. After dinner the King and all the guests arose and stood about the room talking in groups. The King spoke excellent English. Mr. BROWNING, wearied with the day's exertions, was more interested in finding a seat than in talking with the Italian officers. I noticed that he was seated in a comfortable chair when one of our officers made the horrifying discovery that one of our party was seated while the King was on his feet. The local view of the situation being brought to the attention of Mr. BROWNING, he disclaimed any thought of rudeness and promptly stood—but only to avoid any appearance of discourtesy by our party. Kings meant nothing to him except so far as they showed capacity as human beings. His interest in the welfare and progress of our own boys was constant and unceasing.

Mr. BROWNING's long term of service in this House—25 years as Chief Clerk and Member—supplied him with an invaluable equipment of information and acquaintance. He was a faithful and valuable member of our committee. Indeed his conscientious devotion to duty may have hastened his death. He died at his post.

In all his relations with his fellow members and with all others who came before his committee he was considerate, reasonable, and just. While sometimes hiding a naturally friendly spirit with a cloak of gruffness he was tender and kindly in his feelings. Always strongly patriotic in matters affecting the country he was keenly alive to the interests of his constituents. He took just pride in the great shipbuilding and other important industries in his district and was ever quick to aid and protect them. As a legislator he was conscientious, capable, and patriotic. As a man, honest, faithful, and true.

His spirit has passed into the unseen. He lived a long, useful, and happy life. We, his associates, deplore our loss, and shall long cherish his memory, and hope to profit by his fine example.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, when I first came to Congress, December, 1915, one of the first men and Members I was introduced to was our deceased friend, WILLIAM J. BROWNING, of Camden, N. J. From that day until the day of his death our friendship increased, and my admiration, love, and respect for him was boundless and sincere. I learned from others that he was a self-made man. Leaving school and engaging in the mercantile business at the age of 17 years, he pursued his chosen avocation for nearly a quarter of a century in Camden, N. J., and during that period he had served the people of his city as a member of the board of education for four years and a member of the city council for four years. Later he served the same people as postmaster of Camden for 14 years. Then he served the House of Representatives here in Washington as Chief Clerk for 16 years. A vacancy occurred in the first congressional district of New Jersey by death of the Congressman, and he was elected to fill the unexpired term, entering the Sixty-second Congress December, 1911, and reelected to each succeeding Congress, serving his constituency and the country well until his death.

This record speaks eloquently of the confidence, the love, and affection of the people who knew Mr. BROWNING from childhood through his long and active life and honored him most. A glance at his record of service to the people of his native city of Camden and the first congressional district of New Jersey honestly attracts the mind to the fact that there at his home, among his neighbors in Camden, where he was born and lived so many years, we find conclusive and overwhelming evidence of the esteem, the love, the respect and confidence that those people happily bestowed upon our late lamented colleague.

When he was elected to Congress he possessed an experience as a business man and a public official and the additional training of 16 years' service in close connection with the House of Representatives that few new Members enjoy. He was early assigned to a position on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and continuously served thereon until his death. As a member of that committee he enjoyed the work; he was a firm believer in our Navy and strong in his convictions regarding its growth and efficiency. Industriously, studiously, and conscientiously he worked along those lines, and at the time of his death he was regarded as one of the safest and ablest Members of the House in regard to naval affairs. So earnest was he in his committee's work that he remained here in Washington after his physical strength began to show weakness, after he knew that he needed rest, after he knew that he needed medical treatment, contenting himself by saying that when the great naval reconstruction bill had been reported and passed by the House of Representatives he would return home for a rest and treatment, in the hope of regaining his strength and health. He saw passed by the House the bill that he had worked so faithfully with his associates on the committee to prepare, and then he relaxed, the tension of public business having momentarily passed, and the next morning he answered the call of his Maker, quickly and without a struggle.

Nature had favored Mr. BROWNING. It gave him a strong, large body and mind, and in every undertaking that he engaged in during his threescore years and ten of life he brought to that undertaking his physical strength and mental strength and applied them with tireless energy. He was painstaking, calculating, and industrious in all of his undertakings. He was modest, firm in his convictions, and well grounded in his conclusions. In his treatment of others he was kind, considerate, thoughtful, and conscientious; in thought and action he was democratic in its highest sense. I believe his greatest happiness, outside of the happiness of being with his family and relatives, whom he enjoyed, was in doing good and being of service and help to others. His life was an open book. His every day was for the benefit of his country, that he loved and loyally supported, and the closing moments of his life were consistent with the life he had lived upon this earth. He had lived hour by hour and day by day, doing the things that should be done at a particular time, and when the summons came in the midst of congressional and perplexing duties as a Member of this House he was ready, closed his eyes in sleep, as we close a book, and passed from this earth to the reward of a just, upright, true, and noble man.

To his family he leaves a precious legacy, to his country he leaves an example in public life that will be reflected in the years to come, to his friends sweet memories of association will steal upon us to obliterate the pain and sorrow of his death.

Life! We've been long together
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear;
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning;
Choose thine own time;
Say not "Good night," but in some brighter clime
Bid me "Good morning."

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House: It is a strange coincidence that almost two years ago to a day; in fact, exactly two years ago as far as this Sunday is concerned, our late friend, whose sudden departure from this scene of activity we so deeply mourn, presided over this House when services of a character like this were being held in memory of Mr. Capstick, who then represented the district as my predecessor.

At that time Mr. BROWNING said:

"I had never met Mr. Capstick until after his election to Congress, but in the first clasp of his hand I realized that I was greeting a man whose friendship I would value as long as I lived."

That expression of his, a testimonial to his friend who had passed "over the river," covers far more eloquently than any words of mine can do how I felt when I first met Mr. BROWNING.

He coming from the southern part of the State of New Jersey, and my home being in the northern end thereof, our paths very seldom crossed prior to our meeting in the House, but when we did meet his cordial, even, affable manner was always the same, and far too short was the time I had the pleasure of knowing him. He was a patriarch in political service when I entered the arena, but during the brief time I was privileged to enjoy his society, I found him to be a ready listener, a wise counselor, a true friend, and one who would go to great lengths to oblige a colleague. Once he became interested in his associate's future, he was ever willing to assist to the limit of his ability.

The dean of our State delegation, he knew well more of the membership of the House in an intimate manner than probably any one else in the Sixty-sixth Congress. His long service as Clerk before he became an actual Member of Congress was a great asset.

His long public service bears eloquent testimony of the high regard in which he was held and in fact I have yet to hear of any one with whom he came in contact that did not regard him as a friend.

Fortunate, indeed, is one of whom it may be said "He had no enemies." And yet, Mr. BROWNING was a man of positive and fixed convictions. Because he lacked enemies does not imply that he had no fixed ideas or that he acquiesced in his interlocutor's opinion simply because of a kindly feeling for all mankind. He knew from personal experience how life's pathway might be made either rosy or thorny. Having experienced the many vicissitudes befalling the ordinary mortal in the upward climb to position and influence he generously bestowed his powerful and experienced aid ungrudgingly upon every occasion that was presented to him. He was devoted to his work and his love for the Navy was unsurpassed.

I did not have the rare pleasure of serving on any committee with Mr. BROWNING, but as ranking member of the Naval Affairs Committee much hard and long continued detail work fell to his lot. This was especially true during recent years, but he never shirked or shrank from it, because of his belief that he could do his part in helping to assist in the great work of reconstruction. Although urged by his associates to take a vacation he persistently refused, saying it was his duty to see the naval bill completed and when that was done he would take a rest. How prophetic were those words. The night before he passed away the bill was finished.

To his earthly home he never was to return, but his footsteps were even then quickly hastening to the home "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," to which he had ever been aiming during the many and full years of his active career. He had almost reached the allotted span of three score and ten, and until shortly before being called so suddenly from his earthly labors he apparently was in the full vigor of life. We who knew and worked with him were encouraged and benefited by the association. The rank he attained and the standing he enjoyed among his colleagues is one of his richest legacies. His labors for the welfare of the country may well be emulated by all who wish to serve it well. His devotion to duty was an inspiration.

When he was called to his reward he obeyed the summons, "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust" in his Creator, and "wrapping the draperies of his couch about him" he laid down his earthly cares as one might welcome pleasant dreams.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, prompted not by a sense of duty but impelled by a sorrowing heart, I desire to join in this tribute to the memory of our deceased colleague and a fellow member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

Usually men who enter Congress are unfamiliar with parliamentary practice or departmental activities and are compelled to spend years learning the ethics of procedure and familiarizing themselves with the methods of government. Our late colleague was an exception to this rule, for his long term as Chief Clerk of the House, an office he held with credit to himself and satisfaction to those he served, had fully prepared him for entrance upon his duties as a Representative when the call came from the State he honored and loved.

He entered Congress not as a pupil but as an instructor. From the first day he took his seat as a Member of this body he was an essential factor of the House, and no Member took a more active interest in the proceedings, possessed a more intelligent understanding of them, or gave to their attention more liberally of his time than did he. While not an eloquent orator, his direct and forceful presentation of any subject carried conviction and always commanded the respect and attention of the House. The training of his youth in the Quaker faith of his ancestors stamped itself upon all his actions. To a strong, upright character there was added that positiveness of conviction and determination to stand unflinchingly for what he conceived to be right, that marks those who are the followers of George Fox and Elias Hicks. Slow to reach conclusions, he was equally slow to recede when a decision had once been made. A position on any public question, taken only after mature deliberation and willing conference with his colleagues, was maintained by him with a steadfastness of purpose that elicited the admiration of his friends and commanded the respect of those who differed with him. Simple, direct, gentle in judgment, just in his dealings, independent in spirit, and free from affectation, he sought to perform the highest service to his country, his district, and himself.

Honored by his people by many positions of trust, both civic and political, in every field of his endeavors his steadfastness of purpose, his candor, and his honesty—free from duplicity, deceit, or any compromise with wrong—never wavered in the performance of duty.

Though a loyal party man and devoted to the city of Camden, he did not devote his energies alone to the demands of his district or lend himself to narrow political issues that are ever present in a national assembly. Though ever mindful of his allegiance to party principles, he was animated by higher aims and conceived loftier ideals than mere partisanship advantage. He was a hard worker and accomplished much. To his office duties, his departmental work, and his attendance on the floor of Congress he gave unceasingly of his time and of his strength. Quick to respond to every call made upon him by a friend and ever anxious to help those who needed his assistance, he was without resentment toward those whose views did not coincide with his own.

Loyalty toward those who came within the portals of his encircling friendship was an ever-dependable characteristic. It can be truly said of WILLIAM J. BROWNING that:

We just shake hands at meeting
With many that come nigh;
We nod the head in greeting
To many that go by;
But welcome through the gateway
Our few old friends and true;
Then hearts leap up and straightway
There's open house for you,
Old friends,
There's open house for you.

From my first acquaintance with our late friend the intimacy grew into a constant and abiding friendship, which on my part I felt and appreciated and which I am happy in the thought was reciprocated by him. The shock of his death sent a pang into the heart of each one who knew him, and those whose high privilege it was to be associated with him mourn his loss.

He was a firm believer in the American Navy, constant in his devotion to the service, and ever mindful of its needs. By voice and by act in behalf of the Navy he exemplified the feeling of Theodore Roosevelt, who in writing to one his children in 1907 expressed this sentiment:

I want still more to see our Navy maintained at the highest point of efficiency, for it is the real keeper of the peace.

A true American, imbued with the loftiest spirit of patriotism, he loved his country and its institutions and had an abiding faith in the destiny of the American Republic. New Jersey and the Nation have lost in the death of WILLIAM J. BROWNING a noble son and a legislator whose services will always merit the highest praise.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, words fail me in endeavoring to express my deep sorrow at the untimely death of our late colleague, Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

It was my pleasure to know Mr. BROWNING intimately during the five years I served with him in Congress, where our duties brought us in frequent and friendly contact. Especially as a fellow member of the Committee on Naval Affairs did I observe closely his faithful and efficient work. Mr. BROWNING was a regular attendant at the meetings of that committee, and his counsel and advice were eagerly sought by other members of the committee, and especially by its new members. There is no doubt that his close attention and devotion to public duties, particularly during the period of his shattered health, hastened his death. Truly it may be said Mr. BROWNING gave his life in the service of his country.

As a lifetime resident of Camden, N. J., and occupying positions of trust and honor in his city as well as at the National Capital, Mr. BROWNING was well known in Philadelphia. Our city feels keenly his loss. He took an active interest in all matters affecting our welfare and advancement, and especially in the development of our port.

Mr. Speaker, our late lamented colleague was respected, beloved, honored, and esteemed by every Member of this House. I wish to say there existed between us a very warm personal friendship and an association that will be to me always a fond memory.

None knew him but to love him;
None named him but to praise.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, he did not come from the precinct in which I live, but WILLIAM J. BROWNING and I spent a quarter of a century together in close personal and official relationship, and I therefore feel capable of speaking of his works as they deserve.

He was the better prepared for his place in public life by the instruction he received from his Quaker ancestry, which admonished him to consult his conscience before his constituency. With this rule impressed upon him from the time he began to live, and which he always kept, he was constantly remarking to me. "I don't believe that is right and therefore I won't do it," an example worthy of imitation even by his betters. Plain in manners and blunt in expression, he struggled on, watching for the light.

Only a river and not a very wide one separated our homes. His people and my own had much in common and entertained similar views upon conditions, personal and political. They made many things of commerce with their hands, while mine did likewise. The great smokestacks of his industries marked his shore line of the river, while great smokestacks of my industries marked the shore line upon my side.

In our efforts to encourage these industries our battles were made side by side as we avowed in public that our purpose was the same. Produce that came from the ground of his congressional district was sold alongside of that raised in mine, for Philadelphia furnished a common market place. We thought alike to reach similar results; hence this of itself made us friends and completed our alliance. Indeed this official companionship was so close that (without an intention of taking one bit of merit from his public work) I felt I always knew how my friend would vote when I had reached my own conclusion. Thus our association makes me a capable judge of him as a man. His constituents and this House will place the high estimate upon his public service which it should have.

That he was an industrious man let me bear the testimony, for he dropped from my side to the arms of his fathers while he continued to work. All of his fellow committeemen (because we cared greatly for him) labored in vain to persuade him to abandon his duties that his health might be improved. With his intense perseverance and candor still possessing him, he closed his book and told me his work had been accomplished. The vision was before him, because the next morning my friend was to me only a delightful memory.

In measuring the integrity of a man's conduct, we should not compare it with that of others. He makes a place for himself and less worthy men should not attempt to occupy it with him. I choose to believe that men are naturally honest and only the weak give way to the various temptations placed around them. Like the rest of us, having equal opportunities of learning, my friend knew what was right and he knew the wrong when he saw it. He had no difficulty in keeping the alliance he made with the former when he reached the age of reasoning.

A good name he had because he deserved it. No one ever kept sentinel over his conduct, because it was always thought unnecessary. He had a fine conception of the proper course of life and he kept it He steered his own boat; hence the safety of his landing was at all times assured. He had but few idle words and those of others never influenced him. He thought well of other men, and those who could satisfy him of their better wisdom he was likely to follow. And here came his natural good sense to sustain him and make him the useful man that he was. He would not have me describe his service as measuring to the height of brilliant leadership. He had no such aspirations and no one would ever say that my friend could presume. While he was a man of originality, he modestly preferred that policy making and party leadership should remain in others, provided they were in good hands. No man who deceived him once ever thought of repeating the experiment. Yet, no man was more forgiving than he and his faith did not wane when he discovered that the intention to mislead was wanting.

His ways were those of the plain though substantial man, sincere in every movement in life. He was truthful to himself and therefore was truthful to others. Some men might have thought him obstinate at times. If they so thought they misunderstood him; he only wanted to know well of and about everything he had to do, so that he might do it intelligently and with fairness. He hated extravagance and was the enemy of the careless, the ignorant, and the wrongdoer. At no period of his long and well-spent service could he have been more useful to his country than now, as it passes through its reconstruction.

As I write these few feeble lines in the effort to do my longtime, faithful friend justice, there comes to my mind with every word the recollection of his untiring and unceasing work, which sapped his vitality and finally ended the companionship I so greatly enjoyed. His State appreciated the attention he constantly gave his public duties by ungrudgingly continuing his representation for many terms. This indorsement by a highly intelligent and industrious constituency will have greater weight with the history men, when writing their chapter on his service, than any poor word of mine added here. The life he lived can be pointed to by those who live after him as one worthy of duplication. With all his friends and associates I join in pronouncing the last word, "Well done."

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, in December, 1905, I was first sworn in as a Member of Congress by our deceased friend, WILLIAM J. BROWNING, who then was the Clerk of the House of Representatives. At that time our acquaintance started and later developed into an intimate friendship covering all the years I have been in Congress. Mr. BROWNING and I had a mutual friend in Congressman Harry Loudenslager, the former Representative of the Camden district, and up to the time of his death secretary to the national Republican congressional committee. When I became connected with the committee in 1906 as treasurer Mr. BROWNING had full charge of the committee headquarters and continued as the efficient manager of this work during the campaigns until after Mr. Loudenslager's death when he took Mr. Loudenslager's place as a member of the executive committee. Mr. BROWNING, on account of his intelligence, ability, and willingness to do hard work, was a tower of strength in the congressional committee. He was a true and devoted friend and a stanch Republican. His sudden death leaves a vacancy which it will be hard to fill.

LATE REPRESENTATIVE CARL C. VAN DYKE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The services in memory of the late WILLIAM J. BROWNING are at an end, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is requested to take the chair.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolution recently passed, the time has now arrived for eulogies upon the life, character, and public services of the late CARL CHESTER VAN DYKE of Minnesota.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the notice of these exercises was very short, and that there are a good many people absent who would like to be here, I ask unanimous consent that those absent as well as those present may have opportunity to insert remarks appropriate to the occasion in the RECORD at any time hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] asks unanimous consent that those who are not present to-day and those who are present be given opportunity to extend appropriate remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER] is recognized.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, we have again been called together to pay our respects to the departed, to memorialize the work of a sincere and faithful servant of the people—a beautiful custom, a sacred custom, and yet it has occurred to me that the rugged and thorny path that one must travel while performing the lofty duties as a Member of this House can scarcely be smoothed by what is said here in eulogizing the work of our departed coworkers. The road will still be beset with its obstacles, but surely there must be that infinite satisfaction to those who have traveled to that great beyond that their endeavors, sincere and true, have not been in vain, that to their relatives and to their friends who are left to mourn their loss will be conveyed the true recognition of the faithful service which they have so conscientiously endeavored to render their people and their country.

CARL CHESTER VAN DYKE, late a Member of this House, was born at Alexandria, Minn., February 18, 1881. The early years of his life were spent at his birthplace; he was educated in the public grade and high schools there, but in his early youth removed to St. Paul, Minn., where he entered the St. Paul College of Law. His earliest ambitions in life were to serve his fellowmen, to make this world a better place to live in, to inculcate into the hearts and minds of the growing generations the real American spirit. In order to realize his ambitions he entered the educational field as a teacher in the public schools of Douglas County, Minnesota. This was just prior to the outbreak of the Spanish-American War and while he was still in his teens.

Responding to that greater impulse to serve his country he enlisted as a private with a St. Paul company of infantry and was actively engaged during the entire war. Upon his discharge from the service he again resumed his activities in the educational field, teaching in the public schools of Alexandria. But the very meager remuneration, then as now, to those who undertake the education of our children resulted in his decision to enter a field of activity which would compensate him, at least sufficiently to insure the ordinary comforts and necessities of life, for his labors, although it deprived him of his cherished hope and desire to directly contribute to the upbuilding of those principles and those bulwarks that constitute the very backbone of our existence as a free and liberty-loving people.

His lot was then cast with the Government, having entered the Railway Mail Service as a postal clerk. It was here that he laid the foundation for his future greatness and his elevation to Congress. Imbued with that spirit of helpfulness to his fellowman, and realizing the absolute necessity for improvement in the working conditions and salaries, and the elimination of the "gag rule" under which his fellow employees had long been suffering, he succeeded in perfecting an effective organization and opened the fight to clean up conditions in the Postal Service. He entered this fight with the same spirit that animated his every action, both in public and in private life, with the sincere interests of his Government, his fellow worker, and the public at heart. He realized that the efficiency of the service depended almost wholly on a contented and satisfied employee. But his devotion to duty was not overlooked while attending his greater work among his fellow men, which fact can be substantiated by his remarkable record of promotions. His was the distinction of being the youngest man in the United States Postal Service to become "clerk in charge," attaining all grades in the period of two and one-half years.

After 10 years of service as a clerk he was elected President of the 10th Division Railway Mail Association. The great interest he maintained in the welfare of his coworkers and his energetic activities in their behalf resulted, ultimately, in his removal from the Railway Mail Service and his assignment to post-office duty, which assignment he refused. He continued his fight for the mail clerks in his capacity as an official of the Railway Mail Association. In 1914 he was chosen as the Democratic Party standard-bearer in the Congressional fight in the 4th District of Minnesota, and to the surprise of his most intimate friends, and in fact to all the people of the district, he was elected. His rise from obscurity as a postal clerk to the lofty post as a representative of the people in the halls of Congress was as well deserved as it was meteoric. The avenue for greater service to his fellowmen was opened to him. His record as a Congressman is an open book to which his family, his friends and his former constituents proudly point. Always firm in his convictions, sincere and well grounded in his principles, fair and impartial to all classes, thorough and convincing in his arguments, his achievements in Congress stand as the most fitting memorial, as the most sacred monument to his untiring efforts in behalf of the people he loved, in behalf of the ideals he so fondly cherished, in behalf of the ambitions he so yearned to realize.

Ever conscious of the great responsibilities devolving upon him, thoroughly conversant with the huge problems that developed especially during the latter days of his service here, his thoughts and his actions were always inspired with that noble devotion to the principles and ideals which he always held uppermost in his mind—those principles and ideals which won for him the esteem, the confidence, and the respect of his constituents and his thousands of friends. His primary thought ever concerned the man who ekes out his existence by the sweat of his brow, those countless thousands whose interests and whose welfare have so sorely been neglected in recent years. May the noble work so faithfully fostered and developed during his service in Congress serve as an inspiration to those of us who yet have the opportunity to advance it; may we open to them the door of a broader Americanism, a more devout Americanism, based more nearly upon that freedom and that liberty which our forefathers guaranteed them when they drafted and adopted that great document—the Constitution of the United States.

That Mr. VAN DYKE should have been cut down in the springtime of life, when all the world stood before him, with his vision clear and his course plainly mapped out, just at the moment when he was about to attain the summit of success in his life's work—when the golden dreams and the cherished hopes and aspirations were within reach of his outstretched hand—is difficult of comprehension. But as the good Lord, ever guiding him in his righteous and humane endeavors among his fellow men, saw fit to call him to that reward which he so justly deserved, we who remain to mourn his loss must console ourselves with the thought that his activities among us have not been in vain, that ours is the richer heritage because of our association with him, that to us is left that inspiration, that impelling force which teaches us that all that is given us in life is the knowledge and the desire to work for the betterment of conditions for our fellow men, that contentment and happiness can only come from service such as was rendered by our departed colleague, CARL C. VAN DYKE.

May you and I, to-day, grasp the significance of this inspiration, may we be brought to a realization of the opportunities that are presented to us daily, and may we ever be guided in our efforts here by the same lofty ideals and the same well-grounded principles which so nobly aided CARL C. VAN DYKE to realize, in part, the ambitions of his youth, to the end that when our

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to dwell at length and in detail upon the life and public services of our distinguished colleague, CARL C. VAN DYKE. That has already been done better and more eloquently than I could do it. I wish, rather, only to pay to his memory the sincere and modest tribute of a friend and comrade. It is a significant and a pleasing thing that we should gather here in these historic Halls for this purpose, where so many crises in the Nation's history have been met, and where the great moments of our colleague were spent.

Mr. Speaker, I am told that in a far country, in the midst of a splendid wilderness, where towering, snow-capped peaks stand like sentinels, and the roar of a cataract translates itself into a murmur of music, there has been erected a beautiful temple of white marble. I am told that this temple is surmounted by a great crystal dome, beneath which is a shrine, and that those who pray at this shrine can hear their prayers answered in a language of ineffable sweetness. I wonder if the voices of those who speak in this Hall may not come back to us.

Mr. Speaker, if it is given in that other world to remember what took place in this, I know that in the deepest sanctuary of CARL VAN DYKE's heart is cherished the memory of the hours he spent with his wife and family, and next to them his friendships, and after these I am sure his soul responds to the tense excitement of this place in times of national stress and crisis. He had courage—moral courage, political courage—that virtue which is both rare and valuable, and because he had courage he loved politics, with its strife, its battles, its defeats, and its victories.

He thought straight, and he voted as he thought. He loved those with whom he had been associated before he came to Congress. He never lost his interest in their welfare. He was never too busy to concern himself with their troubles. He had a broad sympathy with those in distress and found a pleasure and satisfaction in aiding them. He understood the common people, perhaps because he never ceased being one of them. He was admired and loved, especially by his comrades of the War with Spain, and they delighted to honor him. He held the highest offices that they could give him and administered them with distinction. He labored earnestly and zealously for the interest of the people of his district and represented them with ability. He had the charm of personality that begets enduring friendship and stimulates personal loyalty.

I liked to talk with him, and I spent many hours in his office, for he had a sound philosophy that inspired confidence and radiated good will. I came to respect his judgment and to admire his stanch integrity of mind and heart. He had faults—who has not?—but they only served to emphasize his many good qualities. When I think of him I like to remember that it is a great thing to be a statesman but a greater to be a man.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I feel very grateful to the members of the Minnesota delegation in Congress for the kind invitation they have extended me to be present and participate in the memorial exercises of our late distinguished colleague, CARL C. VAN DYKE.

During his service in Congress I considered him my warm, personal friend. My office was on the same floor, on the same corridor, and across the hall from his. I knew how he was regarded by his friends here in Washington, but I never had any conception of how he was loved by his home people until I visited that city. I sometimes think that the value of a Member of Congress is not fully appreciated by his colleagues until they have the opportunity of knowing how he is regarded by his home people.

It was my privilege to be appointed by the House of Representatives as a member of the congressional committee which accompanied his remains to his home, St. Paul, Minn. At various places along the route delegations of friends who had known him when he was connected with the Railway Mail Service or when he was performing service for the Spanish-American War Veterans met the train and presented beautiful floral tributes to be laid on the casket as a token of their appreciation of the splendid service he had performed for them in the past. At St. Paul many of the business institutions of the city closed their doors during the funeral as a mark of respect for the service performed for that city. The funeral procession passed through the beautiful Memorial Armory, constructed at his suggestion for the purpose of honoring the returning veterans of the World War. It passed on to the capitol, which was filled by thousands of his admiring friends. His body was laid in state surrounded by banks of flowers presented by friends as tokens of their appreciation for what he had done for them in the past. It was a sad but inspiring sight to witness the sorrow that came over those who were present on that occasion as they gazed for the last time on the lifeless form of their friend. I have never witnessed a more impressive ceremony, and every Member of Congress who attended this funeral returned to Washington with the full realization that no Member was ever better loved by his people than our late distinguished colleague.

In 1898, when the honor of this Nation was at stake and it was necessary to sever diplomatic relations with Spain, he was one of the first to volunteer his services when our President called for volunteers to defend the flag. He was willing to make the supreme sacrifice in order that the principles that have made this country the greatest on earth might survive. The hand of fate was kind to him, and his life was spared in order that he might accomplish good for those who would associate with him in the future.

In his death the Nation has lost one of its bravest citizens and most loyal supporters; the United States Congress has lost one of its most faithful workers; the people of his district a man who always did his duty; and the wife and children have lost a loving husband and father whose chief aim in life was to always provide them with every comfort.

Mr. Speaker, we are to-day writing the last chapter in the life of our distinguished colleague, CARL C. VAN DYKE. The record we are making will soon be filed in the archives of the Nation as a public document to be reviewed by those who come after you and I are gone. Those who read the beautiful tributes that have been paid to his memory should be inspired by the thought that here was a man who always faithfully kept every trust imposed in him; one who always conducted himself in such a way as to merit the confidence and respect of all who knew him; one who always followed the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Here Mr. VOLSTEAD took the chair.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, to-day has been set apart by this honorable body to commemorate the life and services of the beloved late Representative of St. Paul, Minn., CARL CHESTER VAN DYKE, and it is a pleasure for me to have this opportunity to make a few remarks as to his life and character.

During the prime of the life and zenith of his faculties, Mr. VAN DYKE was taken from our midst at the age of 38 years. Although young in years, he was a man of sober thought, strong convictions, courageous in all matters, unlimited energy, and his career was filled with activities for the public welfare.

Mr. VAN DYKE was born of sturdy parentage at Alexandria, Minn., February 18, 1881, where he was reared to manhood. Attended and successfully completed courses in public schools, graded and high. Was limited in means and assisted materially by working during spare moments and vacations.

In this young man was instilled the spirit of patriotism and he was a "red blooded American" for at the age of 17, Mr. VAN DYKE entered the Spanish-American war as a volunteer in the Fifteenth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry at St. Paul and received an honorable discharge at the termination of the war. A man of fine physique, soldierly bearing, and always grasped an opportunity to relieve the oppressed and uplift the downtrodden.

Upon his discharge from the Army he returned to his home at Alexandria and received employment as a teacher in the public schools.

Married Myrtle B. Lampman, and out of said wedlock were born two daughters, Alleyene and Mildred. His home life was ideal, and his family were always uppermost in his thoughts; he was idolized by his friends and held in the highest esteem by all who were acquainted with him who valued his many sterling qualities.

Successfully passed the civil-service examination for railway mail clerk, received appointment, and faithfully served the Government for nine years in that capacity, and bore the distinction of being the youngest clerk in charge of a full railway post office at that time. While serving the Government Mr. VAN DYKE was activity engaged in the betterment of the working conditions of his fellow employees. Was elected president of the Railway Mail Clerks' organization at St. Paul, and by reason of his untiring activities the position of chairman of the Railway Mail Clerks' Welfare Association was created for him. Severed his connection with the Railway Mail Service after this appointment.

As such chairman he appeared before the congressional committees testifying as to sanitary and working conditions under which the railway postal employees labored, and through his endeavors conditions were greatly improved. To the postal railway employees his judgment was infallible and their confidence in him was supreme. Led the fight and finally was instrumental in securing the installation by our Government of the steel mail cars, which step was revolutionary in the railroad world but now generally accepted.

Elected to Congress as a Democrat for the Sixty-fourth and succeeding Congresses to date of his death, May 19, 1919, after an illness of two days at the George Washington University Hospital, Washington, D. C.

At the annual convention of the Spanish-American War Veterans, held in Baltimore, Md., Mr. VAN DYKE was honored by his comrades by being unanimously elected as their commander in chief.

As a Member of this honorable body, Mr. VAN DYKE, deeply interested himself in all the great questions facing our country and people, and particularly in the passage of legislation that would assist the laboring man in better meeting the daily problems with which he was confronted.

Mr. VAN DYKE in all his actions and efforts was guided solely by his conscience as to the right and wrong regardless of party affiliations. Was a staunch and true friend, and at all times was interested in any matter that would assist to lighten the burdens carried by man throughout life.

All who knew and were acquainted with Mr. VAN DYKE were impressed with and admired his manly stand on all great questions facing our country's welfare and its people; and although dead, as the world says, yet he liveth perpetually in the memory of those who knew him and of his deeds, and they sympathize deeply with his wife, family, and relatives in their great loss.

Here Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota took the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Lundeen, a former Member of the House, forwarded the following, with a request that it be inserted in the RECORD:

"CARL VAN DYKE was my friend. He was a friend of the people. He fought his battle for the average man. He was never unfair to anyone. He never forgot the people who sent him to Congress to represent the capital city of the North Star State.

"In Congress men need courage above all else. CARL VAN DYKE was not afraid. In the greatest crises of world history he voted to keep his country out of war, and the course of events has proven him right. I will never forget that midnight hour, April 5, 1917. I walked over from the Republican side to the Democratic, where he was standing, and I said 'CARL, how are you going to vote on the war?' The emotion of the moment was almost too much for us all, and he said, 'Ernie, I'm going to vote as the people of St. Paul want me to vote.' That settled it for CARL VAN DYKE. He was a man. They could not bluff him. He could not be bulldozed. He followed the dictates of his conscience. That course was to him the highest law of patriotism. Joel Lundeen, my brother, served in the Railway Mail Service for several years and knew St. Paul's Congressman well, and we often talked about the fight 'VAN,' as he was often affectionately called, put up for the Federal employees in and out of the Capitol. VAN DYKE himself rose from their ranks to represent them in the United States Congress. When in doubt follow 'VAN,' was the admonition given me by many a railway man. They believed in him. He was their friend. It was 'write VAN,' 'wire VAN,' 'let's get VAN for our main speaker,' and so on.

"In the Spanish-American War he served Minnesota and the United States well, and so highly was he esteemed by his comrades that he was made their commander in chief in the midst of the World War. I can see him yet when he returned from the Baltimore convention as the new commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans; he was never in a happier frame of mind. In and out of Congress he fought for his comrades and he fought well. Anyone in distress he was at hand to help. Sickness, then a friendly and cheering word. To put it all in one word, he was a comrade. We of the Spanish-American War Veterans will often speak of VAN DYKE in the years to come. He builded for us, he fought for us; we will remember him. Labor will not forget 'VAN.' The great majority of mankind labor. He did not forget that fact and he truly represented that majority. How often men are elected to Congress by the people to fight for the people only to forget the people! St. Paul was fortunate to have such a representative. He brought honor to the fourth district of Minnesota. The years will roll by. Decade upon decade new men will fill the place of honor he once held. None will better represent St. Paul and Minnesota. The silent thousands that crowded about him to do him honor, the plain people, loved him. They sorrowed at his grave.

There is no night; the stars go down
To rise upon some other shore,
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forever more.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with CARL VAN DYKE was somewhat limited. I first met him personally following my election to the 66th Congress and during the latter days of the last session of the 65th Congress. Coming from an adjoining district I have known of him and his work for some years, but for some reason or other we had not met, and so upon coming down here one of the first Congressmen whom I had the pleasure of meeting was Mr. VAN DYKE. My impression of him, of course, had been most favorable theretofore and upon meeting him I immediately realized something of the secret of the hold that he had upon his friends and neighbors in the adjoining city of St. Paul. His was truly a genial spirit. I saw him but little during those remaining days and upon going overseas and returning back just in time for the opening session of the 19th of May was shocked almost beyond belief upon hearing of his sudden death.

But from my acquaintance with him in that way and from the broad acquaintance from living in the same adjoining locality I think that CARL VAN DYKE will go down in history in the State of Minnesota as one of its great men, one of Minnesota's Representatives who had not only that genial spirit but accompanying it he had a spirit which was abundant—that of love for his fellow men. It was that spirit which shone forth on each and every occasion, was with him in his work in the Railway Mail Service, was with him later when he represented his fellow workers before committees of the Congress, and it was with him in this Chamber as he spoke for the rights of the men who toil in the world; and so while there have been many beautiful eulogies here this afternoon they will be forgotten, but the State of Minnesota, his comrades of the Spanish War, his fellow workers in the Postal Service will long, long remember the life, service, and sterling character of CARL C. VAN DYKE.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I did not know CARL C. VAN DYKE until I came to Congress. A very few weeks after I was here I had the pleasure of meeting him at the first meeting of the Committee on Mines and Mining, of which he and I were both members. He was a man of such fine appearance and striking personality that no one who ever met him could forget him. We served on that committee together for a period of two years. He took a very active interest in all deliberations of the committee. He was one of the practical sort of men whose advice was important in legislative matters. He had a happy faculty of brushing aside technicalities and inconsequential details and going right to the heart of proposed legislation. He was courageous and conscientious, and in all my experience with him in legislative matters I saw not a single instance of petty partisanship in his conduct. Coming from the ranks of labor himself, he always took an active and sympathetic interest in legislation purposing the remedy of existing evils in working conditions.

There were two other matters in which CARL VAN DYKE took a particular interest. One was legislation respecting employees of the Post Office Department. A former employee himself, he knew the needs of the men. He was in close touch with the organization of postal employees and was always able to present their case in a clear and convincing manner.

The other was the interest of the Spanish-American War veterans. When the Spanish-American War broke out over 20 years ago CARL VAN DYKE was one of the first volunteers to fight his country's battles. He served with courage and distinction during that war and so gained the respect and confidence of his comrades that he was at the time of his death commander in chief of the national organization of the United Spanish War Veterans. With this intimate knowledge and with the needs of his comrades and with his large, close personal acquaintance, he became their champion on the floor of the House. He was a champion worthy of that great organization.

Mr. Speaker, a feeling of sorrow comes to us who were close in our friendship to Hon. CARL C. VAN DYKE. Everyone knew him as CARL. We all must bow to the will of our Maker, but we can not repress a feeling of sadness as we recall that he was stricken in the prime of his manhood. When he was carried back to his native State of Minnesota by his comrades of the Spanish-American War and his colleagues in Congress a more impressing tribute to his memory could not have been given. I shall always remember that day as he lay in state in the beautiful capitol at St. Paul, guarded by his Spanish-American War comrades. Thousands upon thousands of his friends came to pay their silent tribute of love and respect. The whole Nation suffered a loss in his death, but the United Spanish-American War Veterans suffered a big loss. He was their chief, their counselor, and their friend.

When I think of the life of CARL VAN DYKE there comes to my mind the beautiful poem of Babcock:

Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle, face it; 'tis God's gift.

Be strong!
Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce. O shame!
Stand up, speak out and bravely, in God's name.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long;
Faint not; fight on! To-morrow comes the song.

Mr. Speaker, on his crypt in the cemetery in Minnesota is a bronze tablet bearing the inscription which best describes his life. It is as follows:

CARL C. VAN DYKE. Born February 18, 1881. Died May 20, 1919. Commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans. Member of the Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth (World War), Sixty-sixth Congresses of the United States of America, representing the fourth district of Minnesota.

A great-souled man, whose life was an interpretation of America to Americans; a man of the people, endowed by and representative of that Nation which gave him birth, for which he fought, and for whose Christian ideals of brotherhood he ever was a militant evangelist, beloved of men.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, man can not contemplate the flowers and trees, the hills and valleys, the sun and stars, without awakening in his breast the fervid hope of the life beyond.

We are not philosophers; the mazes of theology and the processes of theosophy are to us a mystery; but we can discern beyond the twilight zone which separates the existence here from that beyond the spirit of the teachings of the Nazarene.

We feel an intuitive sense of mighty power, of exalted ideals, of an inexplicable grandeur, in nature, and we soliloquize.

Ah, we think, surely if the Power above breathes into the rosebuds the bloom which fills the winds of the valley with richest fragrance, it is more than chance that the assembled thoughts and hopes and aspirations of men should furnish the hidden motive power that drives the turbine and builds a city.

If nature's alchemy, in the first biting frosts of late summer, will change the mountain forest into a variegated screen for the curious and reflective to ponder over, surely the triumph of this same master hand is the marvelous blend of the babel of the human race.

And when the autumn is come and the sear and yellow leaves of the mountain wood glide through the chill November air to light upon the polished steel railroad rails at the mountain's foot, to be crushed to bare and sapless skeletons, if the oak and the poplar and the pine will live to reproduce their wonder panorama for generations yet unborn, will the Divine Father leave neglected the souls of men when in their autumn time they shake off the barren hulks that form the biding places for their short sojourns here?

And when the blasts of winter come, if the Father of Fathers in His all-wise and omnipotent power will cuddle the willow and the rosebush and the palm in nature's protecting robe, and hold forth the prospect of returning summers, will He withhold the promise of the life beyond to the still soul waiting in the grave?

Ah, no! Let us rather believe that the beneficent Creator who fixes the seasons and the stars, who dispenses the rainfall and the dew, who scatters the pollen to perpetuate the green verdure of mother earth, will find some sweet haven of rest for the tired soul whose earthly span has been devoted to the guardianship of the Master's creation.

Death but marks the terminal of earth's journey and is the transition state to prepare the neophite for initiation into the ethereal splendor of the never-ending day. The finite mind can not comprehend its metaphysical state or encompass its boundless sphere.

Earth's milestones are but weak and linkless chains with which the mortal mind is impotent to reach through the cavern of eternity's fugitive goal. Our day's fleeting sunshine and night's dazzling incandescence are but the glow and flickering of uncertain beacons on the way to the perpetual radiance of the palace in the skies. Earth's broken reeds and shrill flageolets can only form the listening ear to drink the perfect harmony of the celestial choir.

We reach for salvation; it moves away. We grope for understanding; the mind fails. We build by the rule and guide of the prophets and philosophers, and when we would crown the superstructure it crumbles and is gone.

Men whose dominant life's note is accomplishment of salvation for their own souls are but self-serving ambassadors, who treat in a language unspoken by the Creator; but he who holds self as an infinitesimal being save as he may commingle his impulses and aspirations with the universal scheme must become an indispensable part of the general plan.

Ah, my friends, I do not believe that anyone in all the world could have a more difficult task to perform than have I this day.

When the sad news came from Washington that Congressman CARL C. VAN DYKE had died, it might well be said that never in our State's history has intelligence of such nature been met with more widespread grief and sorrow.

The tribute paid to-day by the thousands on the streets of this beautiful city of St. Paul, under the dome of our State capitol, and in this splendid mausoleum was a most magnificent one and shows but in a small degree the esteem in which Congressman VAN DYKE was held by all citizens of all walks of life.

When this sad news came from Washington it meant to the loving and sorrowful wife, the two daughters grown to womanhood, and the seven brothers of the same character and sturdy stock, part of them gathered from distant States, that a loving and affectionate husband and kind and indulgent father and a generous-hearted and considerate brother had been taken away.

To the little compact community of Alexandria, near fields and lakes and streams where he sported in boyhood, where the older residents point out the path to the village school of the earlier days, where he was born and reared and betrothed and took up, almost a mere youth, life's problems of husbandhood and fatherhood, the sad news meant that "CARL," native son who had achieved distinction and reflected honor on his native city, was cut down in early life and his career was ended.

The sad message of death meant that thousands in the Government Railway Mail Service throughout America, men who had fought valiantly behind him while he organized them and led them, in Congress and out, in their fight for their rights and privileges, had lost their loyal chief; it meant that every city and rural letter carrier and every employee of the great Post Office Department had lost his friend. I saw its mute evidence as the funeral train reached the city. At the open door of a railway mail car, in working garb, cap in hand, head bowed, and with eyes fixed upon the American flag draped over the body of the former chieftain, a tall, pale-faced man, perhaps a fighter in the ranks, perhaps an official associate, and perhaps just going out on the old run through Devils Lake or Larimore, where "VAN" had worked in days gone by, stood silently and unobserved among the thousands, the tears streaming down his cheeks. To him and his associates death's most exalted dignity and life's most generous impulses were embodied in the name upon their lips this day, the simple name "VAN DYKE."

The sad news of the death of CARL C. VAN DYKE meant to 40,000 men who left their homes 21 years ago to give their services to the country's cause that their recently elected commander in chief had fallen. It meant the passing of their champion in Congress for pensions for their widows and preference in Government employment for soldiers and sailors and marines of all wars. We saw these veterans in platoon formation at the Grand Central Station at Chicago sounding taps upon the bugle as the funeral train departed; and to-day this occasion is honored by the presence of three past commanders in chief, Comrades Smith, Chisholm, and Busch, and Adjt. Gen. Raths, comrade, coworker, lifelong friend, and beneficiary of the most sacred public trust that it was his duty during his lifetime to confer.

To his colleagues in Congress CARL C. VAN DYKE's death meant that there had been taken away a Member of that honorable body who had always, with conspicuous courage for his convictions, faithfully performed every sacred trust. He was known in Congress as a man who was unswervingly loyal to his ideals, and whose aspirations were not for station and position, but to be able to perform a service. We saw him in our country's greatest crisis, disregarding what for the time seemed to best subserve his own personal or selfish ends, as he courageously fought for his convictions and for the best interests and welfare of his country.

But I have not spoken of the guiding motive of his life, the controlling ideal which made his career a conspicuous one. It was his attitude toward his fellow man. Reared in a country community, learning early the responsibilities of the home provider, starting as a worker in the ranks, his heart was always with the worker. He loved and trusted the men who work. He had their confidence and they enjoyed his confidence. He believed but little in the aristocracy of social caste, but was absorbed in the aristocracy of service. His friendships and sympathies were not those of utility, passing when the utilitarian purpose had been accomplished, nor of pleasure, vanishishing as the flitting moments passed, but the strong, substantial friendships of admiration, of human sympathy, of common cause, and early in life he adopted, unconsciously perhaps, the cause of the workers, and it became his life's work. Like the face chiseled in the solid granite rock of the White Mountains of New Hampshire, reverently termed the "Old Man of the Mountain," and representing to the New Englanders who sojourn there a lofty ideal and purpose, so there will ever remain in the affections and memories of the working people of our great State the tender recollections of the ideals and purposes and of the life and character of CARL C. VAN DYKE.

Speaking for my colleagues in Congress assembled here on this occasion, representing as we do the Senate and House of Representatives, we wish to extend our sympathy to the wife, the daughters, and brothers of our colleague and comrade, and to say to you that amidst your heavy burden of sorrow you must recognize the right to feel a just pride in future years that no man in Minnesota's history will occupy a higher place on the roster of honor, and that few men have ever contributed a more substantial and definite service to their fellow men, than did CARL C. VAN DYKE.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is little that I can add to the eloquent tributes paid by the gentlemen who have preceeded me to the memory of my friend and colleague, CARL C. VAN DYKE, but nevertheless I wish to add my humble testimony to what has already been said.

CARL C. VAN DYKE was my friend, and I loved him. His influence on all those who came in contact with him was inspiring to better things, and his death was a great loss to the State of Minnesota and to the body wherein he has served so faithfully and well. Born among humble surroundings and reared in the hard school of experience, he developed such sturdy, honest, and sincere traits of character that he rose to a place of honor and trust in the greatest law-making body of the world and in the hearts of the people of his State and of the Nation.

CARL C. VAN DYKE was raised on a farm in Minnesota. His early life was spent on the hard work that was required to develop that great State. He was educated in the common schools and high schools of Alexandria. After completing his high-school course he taught school in Douglas County, Minn. When the call for troops was made at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, young VAN DYKE was one of the first to offer his services in defense of the flag. At the close of the war Mr. VAN DYKE entered the Government as a railway mail clerk. He afterwards represented the railway mail clerks' branch of the Government employees in this city. While in the Government service he completed a law course. He was elected to the Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and reelected to the Sixty-sixth Congresses. At the time of his death he was the honored commander in chief of the Spanish-American War Veterans' Association.

The whole course of CARL C. VAN DYKE's life was a struggle against adverse circumstances. It was my sad duty to be present at his funeral in St. Paul. Seldom if ever in the history of Minnesota has such a tribute of love and honor been paid to one of its citizens. The children strewed the route of the funeral cortege with wild flowers. The entire city of St. Paul was in mourning for the big-hearted, loyal friend of the common people; people of all ranks and station in life laid aside their accustomed pursuits to join in doing honor to this truly great man. The entire business life of the city was suspended, and thousands crowded the route of the funeral procession, with bared heads, to pay a last farewell to the man they loved.

As I last looked upon his features as he lay in state under the dome of that magnificent palace, the capitol building at St. Paul, surrounded by banks of flowers, the tokens of respect and love of his host of friends, guarded by the faithful comrades who never left his side from the time his body left the hospital until they fired the last volley over his grave, I realized that I was indeed parting with a true friend, and one whose like I might not look upon again. The life of CARL C. VAN DYKE stands as an inspiration to all the young of our land. It stands as an example of what may be achieved by those who by honest, earnest efforts seek to raise themselves to positions of honor and prominence, and emphasizes the fact that America is indeed the land of opportunity.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, when the finger of death is laid on a man, young, alert, capable, in the fullness of his powers, it adds a greater pathos and widens the circle of bereavement. When the grim reaper garnered Comrade CARL VAN DYKE to his Maker he took a man in his prime, at the moment when he was reaching out his hand to grasp fruition from years of deprivation, of toil, of self-denial. Born into a family of straitened means, he early shouldered his own burden and put his strength into the task of bringing along the others in the large family. He made his own way through the public schools, helping himself along by teaching school, and finally taking law while a railway mail clerk.

His 14 years in the Railway Mail Service showed a steady upward climb, and though clerk in charge, his big heart and quick sympathy and justice were always keen to understand and appreciate the side of the men. He fought for their interests at all times; hence he managed to incur the disfavor of those in power, and finally resigned. He was made chairman of the welfare committee of the tenth division, and while in this service, though still a young man, he had so endeared himself, his wonderful warmth of heart, personal magnetism, and knowledge of human nature had won him so many friends, that he was sent to Congress, being elected to the Sixty-fourth. His victory, young and unknown, with no machine but his own self-made one, woven of the iron bands of friendship, over a man older, experienced, statesmanlike, polished, cultured, well-trained, and capable, came as one of the surprises of the campaign—the one Democratic Representative in a Republican State. His unblemished labor record won him reelection.

He was intensely domestic, passionately devoted to his home and to his family. His constant regret was that unsatisfactory housing conditions in Washington prevented him from having them with him. The strain, the irregularity, the tremendous responsibilities of the war session, took toll of his strength. It is in keeping with the character of the man that even those closest to him did not suspect that for a long time before he died he was suffering. He made light of his physical condition, refused to consider himself, drove his splendid constitution at the rate he had always maintained, and so performed his duties and bore his affliction that few suspected the terrible handicap under which he was working.

When his final illness occurred he refused to notify any of his colleagues, but went to the hospital alone. His death did not come as a surprise to him. Before he came to the last session, when he was taking leave of his wife, his Spartan courage for a moment gave way, and he said: "I will never see you again." And he never did. He was stricken down in the midst of his duties. At the hospital, with his lifeblood draining away in a hemorrhage, he still fought valiantly, never giving up his courage or his will to live. With the realization that the flood of black waters was rising over him inevitably, he asked the hospital assistants around, "Aren't you going to do something for me?" Unable to the last to believe that his fighting courage and determination must give way before a mightier power.

Simple, democratic, unaffected, he possessed in an unusual degree the power of making and keeping friends. He kept his word, he kept his head; a plain, blunt man, that loved his friends and told them what they themselves did know. His heart was a heart of understanding, for he had been upon Mount Sinai, had seen the lightning flash and heard the thunders roll; had partaken of the meal of locusts and clothed himself in the camel's hair. He knew adversity, and could never forget its lesson, and therefore understood the heart of the laboring man, whose constant friend he was in private life as well as in his career as Congressman. A Spanish-American War veteran, through his executive ability and sterling qualities he rose to commander in chief of our organization, whose principles and ideals have held aloft to the youth of the land an example of loyal Americanism.

To know Comrade CARL VAN DYKE was to be his friend. To ultimately understand his character was to admire it. To come in contact with his mental power was to respect it. To oppose him was to fear him, for the undemonstrative resources that he could call to his command were astounding to his political enemies.

Quiet, unassuming, modest, unpretentious, caring not for the vaunt of leadership if the cause he championed was victorious. It was results he sought, not praise.

Laborer, student of nature, statesman, he put himself in harmony with the constitution of things, ever stamping them with his mark. The plain folks, who knew him and who gathered at his funeral in such multitudes as no public man in the history of St. Paul ever attracted, cherish his memory, and their hearts will echo and reecho his praise and his prowess in his fight for the human cause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to state that last evening quite late HAROLD KNUTSON, from Minnesota, came to my office and made this request to me, saying that he very much desired to be present on this occasion to deliver a short eulogy at least upon the death of CARL VAN DYKE, but he was suddenly and hastily called to Minnesota on very important matters and could not be here, and requested that I have some one of our colleagues read for him, to go into the RECORD, a statement which he handed to me. I have just given the statement to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON], and I request him to read that statement as and for HAROLD KNUTSON.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota read the following:

"Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, 'Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.'

"When the news came to me that my friend and colleague, Congressman CARL C. VAN DYKE, had passed to the great beyond, I was shocked and pained. I had seen him but a few days before, apparently in full vigor and virile manhood, and his sudden and unexpected demise called to my mind the biblical quotation quoted.

"To know CARL VAN DYKE was to love, admire, and esteem him. He possessed all those sterling qualities which go to make a good citizen. At the early age of 17 he answered his country's call and served faithfully during the Spanish-American War. His life since that time was one of sacrifice for others. He was never so happy as when he was doing something for some one else. He was in every way a self-made man. Elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress after a very strenuous campaign, he immediately took a prominent part in the House. As a member of the Labor and District of Columbia Committees he showed the stuff that was in him. He was a two-fisted fighter who always fought open and aboveboard. CARL VAN DYKE would not stoop to underhanded methods, no matter what the provocation, and he commanded the respect and admiration of friend and foe alike.

"In his death the Nation lost a true and faithful legislator, Minnesota and the city of St. Paul a splendid citizen, and the sorrowing family a kind and loving husband and father. Of him it can be truthfully said, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant.'

"To-day I join with my colleagues in paying this poor tribute to his memory and silently drop a tear for a good friend who 'has gone on before to that undiscovered bourne from whence no traveler returns.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the resolution heretofore adopted and as a further tribute to the deceased the Chair declares the House now adjourned.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Monday, May 17, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 17, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray Thee to lead us into all the deeper truths. Give us vision, vision to see Thy face, to see Thy movements in national and personal life. Give us, we pray Thee, devotion to the great ideals of Thy holy revelation. Give us that insight into the movement of God that will read the ever-continued revelations of Thy will to men. May we follow Thy lead as men who are brave to do the things which are true, and following God's guidance may we establish permanently order and peace in all our boundaries. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, May 11, 1920, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SPREAD OF RADICALISM.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the close of the routine morning business to-morrow I shall address the Senate on the spread of radicalism in America, and also some of the causes of it, and the remedies therefor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Eureka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Manufacturers' State Association of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation granting a bonus to ex-service men who were disabled or sick in consequence of their service in the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Nature Club of Westport, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation permitting private enterprises to cut into the public parks in the West, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented petitions of sundry postal employees of Windsor Locks and Terryville, of sundry citizens of Hartford and New Haven, of sundry postal employees of Seymour and Litchfield, of the National Association of Post Office Clerks of Stamford, and of the Kiwanis Club, of Bridgeport, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1695) validating certain homestead entries (Rept. No. 591); and

A bill (H. R. 9825) authorizing certain railroad companies, or their successors in interest, to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of their rights of way (Rept. No. 592).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4393) relating to fees to be allowed registers and receivers of United States land offices, providing for the abolishment of the office of receiver of public moneys of such land offices, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. TRAMMELL (for Mr. FLETCHER):

A bill (S. 4394) granting an increase of pension to William Genovar (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4395) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Roberts (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4396) authorizing the incorporation of the United States Oil Corporation; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4397) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. George Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 4398) for the relief of a certain estate; to the Committee on Claims;

A bill (S. 4399) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close certain streets, roads, or highways in the District of Columbia rendered useless or unnecessary by reason of the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of other streets, roads, or highways in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4400) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869, as amended; and

A bill (S. 4401) to authorize the widening of First Street NE., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KNOX:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 198) authorizing the Secretary of War to sell to the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., a certain tract of land within the Allegheny Arsenal Reservation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $400,000 for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY AUTOCRACY.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to read a brief statement from the Washington Post and to make a few observations upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRONNA. I find in this morning's Post, on the front page, the following:

KING FOR VOLUNTEER ARMY—SEES PROOF OF PEACEFUL STRENGTH IN GIVING UP CONSCRIPTION.

[Canadian Press.]

LONDON, May 16.

King George declared yesterday to the lord lieutenants of the counties, the lord mayors, and lord provosts who gathered at Buckingham Palace in answer to the call for the reconstruction of the territorial volunteer army that the formation of a volunteer citizen army was indispensable to the safety and freedom of the Empire.

"No more valuable proof of our peaceful strength and the soundness of our national life and character," continued the King, "could be given to the world than the fact that we have abandoned the principle of compulsory military service, to which we were forced to resort in the hard times of the war, and have returned to the purely voluntary system."

Mr. President, I call attention to this for the purpose of showing that the Empire of Great Britain sees the danger of establishing a military autocracy. It is needless for me to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is not one single Government on the face of the earth to-day that has withstood a military autocracy. Greece had it, Persia had it, Rome had it, Germany had it. Before Germany Sweden had it. They were all, if not reduced to a small nation, destroyed. The military Government of Germany has been entirely destroyed.

Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the King of the great Empire of Great Britain upon the stand which he has taken. I only hope that this body and the other body will take the same step which the Empire of Great Britain has taken and will not impose upon this Government a military autocracy.

We know, Mr. President, that what destroyed the German Government was the military autocracy of Germany. The entire country knows that it was not the people of Germany who were the cause of destroying it, but it was the carefully and well established military autocracy which caused its destruction.

Mr. President, we are proceeding in this country, as I understand it, intending to place everything under the Army, to educate the farmer, to educate the blacksmith, to educate everyone in the industries under the War Department, ignoring all the other executive departments. We have an Agricultural Department, and yet it is well understood now that already we are trying to place the farmers of the country under a military autocracy.

Mr. President, again I want to express my approval of the action taken by the great Empire of Great Britain.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up Senate resolution 363, on which I desire to say only a word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it is a resolution coming over from a preceding day.

Mr. McCORMICK. It is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule the Senator has a right to call it up, if there is no objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think there will not be any objection to the resolution.

Mr. GERRY. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read Senate resolution 363, submitted by Mr. McCORMICK on the 15th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices, and what further steps it purposes to take or recommend to mobilize credits in order to move the 1920 crop.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the resolution has been reported by the committee?

Mr. McCORMICK. It has not been referred to a committee. It is a Senate resolution. I recognize that there may be some question in the mind of the Senator from Utah as to the purpose of the resolution, but I do not believe he will have any objection to it after a word of explanation.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator, if he will pardon me, that I do not know that I have any objection to it, and yet there are some recitations in it that may not be agreed to by many students of political economy and many members of the committee to which the resolution would properly go.

Mr. McCORMICK. What recitations, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. KING. That high prices are the result of the so-called inflation of credits and currency, and the implication to be derived from the resolution that there is inflation as a result of the activities or lack of activities of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. McCORMICK. I do not think the last will be found in the resolution. It is indisputable that not only in this country but in every country there has been a vast increment in the total of currency and of credits. It is indisputable that there is a relation between the increment of currency and of credit and existing prices. The Senator surely recognizes that all the classic symptoms of impending financial crisis are manifest to-day. The principal hope of relief is in the Federal Reserve Board, and in the board advising the business world of steps proposed to meet the demand for credit when the period of crop moving comes.

While the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was still Secretary of the Treasury, the Reserve Board with his concurrence, and, if I am not mistaken, following his advice, raised the bank rate. Subsequently Congress legislated to vest in the Reserve Board and the member banks discretion as to the establishment of different rates.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator briefly outline what are the provisions of the resolution?

Mr. McCORMICK. The resolution calls upon the Reserve Board to inform the Senate what steps it contemplates taking to relieve the existing inflation and to mobilize credits against the time when we must move the crops of the country. The Senator very well remembers that in 1907, at this period in the year, there were manifest exactly the symptoms of economic and credit disorder which are present to-day, very much the same symptoms that were manifest in 1903. Unless, under the Reserve System, the Reserve Board takes steps to forestall a credit stringency in the fall, we shall have something approximating a panic.

In my judgment announcement at this time of the contemplated steps will serve a most valuable purpose in relieving the apprehension of thousands of creditors in the country. Such announcement will tend to meet the very stringency which is threatened in the fall.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator if the resolution simply asks for information?

Mr. McCORMICK. It asks for nothing more.

Mr. GRONNA. I certainly have no objection to that. I think it is very advisable that we should adopt such a resolution.

Mr. McCORMICK. The resolution asks for nothing more than information; in fact, I may say to the Senator that to-day there are gathering in Washington representative bankers from all over the country to confer with the reserve board and the Secretary of the Treasury about the grave situation now impending.

Mr. GRONNA. I rose only for the purpose of securing information. The Senator knows, of course, as well as I do, the danger of changing the monetary laws by piecemeal. In reference to rates of interest and what they will do, I think any man who has studied political science from any angle at all knows that the men who will get the advantage of a high rate of interest, or the concerns which will get the benefit of a high rate of interest, are those which are making large profits. There is nothing which will harm the farming interests any more than to compel them to pay a high rate of interest. They will be obliged, if that be done, to cease operations, because their business does not pay a sufficient profit to enable them to pay high rates of interest.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from North Dakota will learn, if he will examine the resolution, that there is no reference to rates of interest. Unless steps are taken to-day to mobilize the necessary credit resources, farmers will be hard put to it to find money this fall when it is necessary for their very lives.

Mr. GRONNA. We know that the men who are now getting money are the automobile manufacturers and others who can place the burden upon the other party.

Mr. McCORMICK. Great amounts of credit are being utilized in the manufacture of silk stockings, phonographs, and all kinds of nonessentials.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois why he has such an apprehension of a stringency in connection with the securing of money to handle the crops when grain receipts or warehouse receipts can be taken as security to the Federal reserve banks, deposited there, and any amount of money issued upon them and no interest charged upon that money for six months? If a warehouse receipt is good for the cash—and it certainly is, if it covers wheat—why should there be the danger of inability to expand the currency when there is no interest charge for six months for such expansion?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, we may continue to expand the currency, as we have expanded it, without checking the increase in interest rates, which has been manifest all this year.

Mr. McCUMBER. The increase of interest rates is due to the demand for money.

Mr. McCORMICK. Precisely.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the information I wanted to obtain from the Senator was the basis of his fear that we could not get sufficient money in the fall; in other words, that we could not sufficiently expand our currency to meet the requirements of moving the crops.

Mr. McCORMICK. Doubtless we can expand the currency while prices and interest rates increase indefinitely.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator from Illinois assume that we will fail to utilize the power in the present banking laws to meet the requirements incident to handling the crops?

Mr. McCORMICK. I assume nothing. I want to learn from the Federal Reserve Board what plan of relief, if any, it has in contemplation.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. Under the law there is, of course, a limit to the expansion of the currency. That limit is the gold reserve which is required. When the reserves of the Federal reserve banks are exhausted, no more currency can be issued until the gold reserve is replenished.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois, if I may, in connection with his resolution, to explain the rate of interest that is being charged by the reserve banks? What rate of interest are the Federal reserve banks charging?

Mr. McCORMICK. They are not charging a uniform rate of interest, as the Senator from Iowa knows.

Mr. KENYON. They are, I know, charging a very high rate of interest in some cases.

Mr. McCORMICK. They are seeking, I am told, to moderate activities in the production of nonessentials, or they are supposedly doing so.

Mr. KENYON. They have forced some particular banks to pay all the way from 10 to 13 per cent for money. That is reflected on the small banks and is reflected as to the farmer, and it is becoming a very serious situation in the sections of the country which the Senator and I represent.

Mr. McCORMICK. The resolution seeks for information as to the policy of the Reserve Board. That is what is most immediately necessary in the present situation.

Mr. KENYON. It never was intended, was it, that the Reserve Board should be engaged in building up banks or getting profits for banks? Its purpose was to serve a general public use.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator welcome information as to whether they expect to earn 102 per cent on their capital stock next year?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to speak upon that if we can have it disposed of.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, can we not have a vote on the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a few days ago I offered a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Subsequently, by unanimous consent, that committee was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I was advised by the chairman of that committee last week that he hoped to report the resolution on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The chairman of the committee is absent to-day, but I see the able Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is present, and I should like to ask if there is a probability that we can have an immediate report upon the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee undertook to hold a meeting on last Saturday, but it was impossible to secure a quorum. The chairman was called to New York and will not return until to-morrow morning. I was informed by him before he left that on his return he intended to call another meeting of the committee for the purpose of taking up the resolution of the Senator from Idaho and considering it. It is my understanding that the meeting will be held some time to-morrow, and it is also my understanding that a decision will be reached at that meeting as to the disposition of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that we may hope for a report, I presume, to-morrow, either pro or con, I have nothing further to say at this time.

OIL PROSPECTING IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The message was read, and on motion of Mr. PHELAN the message and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate:

In response to the Senate's resolution of March 10, 1920, requesting the President, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the Senate,

"First, as to what restrictions, if any, are imposed either directly or indirectly by France, Great Britain, Holland, Japan, or any other foreign country, or the dependencies thereof, upon the citizens of the United States in the matter of prospecting for petroleum, or in the acquisition and development of lands containing the same within the territory subject to the jurisdiction and influence of such countries.

"Second, if such restrictions exist, what steps have been taken by the Government of the United States to secure their removal and equality of treatment in respect of citizens of the United States.

"Third, if any restrictions are imposed by the Government of Mexico upon citizens of the United States in regard to the acquisition or development of petroleum-bearing lands within its jurisdiction which are not imposed upon nationals of other foreign countries.

"Fourth, if any such discriminating restrictions are imposed by the Government of Mexico upon citizens of the United States, what steps have been taken by the Government to secure removal of such restrictions and the equality of treatment in respect to citizens of the United States,"

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying inclosure, furnishing the information requested by the resolution as far as it can be supplied compatibly with the public interest.

WOODROW WILSON.

(Inclosure: Report by the Secretary of State with its inclosures.)

THE WHITE HOUSE,
17 May, 1920.

The PRESIDENT: The Acting Secretary of State, to whom was referred the resolution adopted on March 10, 1920, requesting the President to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest,

"First, as to what restrictions, if any, are imposed, either directly or indirectly, by France, Great Britain, Holland, Japan, or any other foreign country, or the dependencies thereof, upon the citizens of the United States in the matter of prospecting for petroleum, or in the acquisition and development of lands containing the same within the territory subject to the jurisdiction and influence of such countries.

"Second, if such restrictions exist, what steps have been taken by the Government of the United States to secure their removal and equality of treatment in respect of citizens of the United States.

"Third, if any restrictions are imposed by the Government of Mexico upon citizens of the United States in regard to the acquisition or development of petroleum-bearing lands within its jurisdiction which are not imposed upon nationals of other foreign countries.

"Fourth, if any such discriminating restrictions are imposed by the Government of Mexico upon citizens of the United States, what steps have been taken by the Government to secure removal of such restrictions and the equality of treatment in respect to citizens of the United States," has the honor to lay before the President a report furnishing the information requested by the resolution as far as it can be supplied compatibly with the public interest.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

(Inclosure: Report by the Department of State, with accompanying inclosures.)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 14, 1920.

REPORT TO THE SENATE IN RESPONSE TO SENATE RESOLUTION 331.

In response to the request of the Senate embodied in Senate resolution 331 for certain information regarding restrictions directly or indirectly imposed upon citizens of the United States in prospecting, acquiring, and developing petroleum lands abroad, and further regarding action taken by this Government with a view to securing the removal of such restrictions and equality of treatment in respect to citizens of the United States, the following report is submitted as containing the information now available and not incompatible with the public interest.

A great part of the data contained herein has been derived from consular reports received in response to special consular instruction No. 672 of May 31, 1919, and diplomatic and consular instruction of August 16, 1919, instructing diplomatic and consular officers to obtain and forward certain specific information relating to mining laws and legal restrictions imposed upon foreigners in securing or operating mineral concessions within their consular districts.

It will be noted from the copy of instruction No. 672 hereto attached that it was issued almost a year (May 31, 1919) prior to the passage of the above resolution of March 10, 1920, and further, that although mineral oil is expressly mentioned as being within the purview of the instruction, nevertheless the scope of the investigation called for therein did not permit of the intensive study of the foreign petroleum situation which its present and prospective importance would seem to require. With a view to directing attention to petroleum, the general circular instruction of August 16, 1919, of which a copy is attached, relating to mineral oil concessions and rights, was sent out. Since this was in the nature of a standing instruction, the department expects to be continuously in the receipt of information on this situation.

The above instruction was supplemented by a circular cablegram, under date of October 17, 1919, again requesting specific information on the petroleum situation, directed to posts from which significant information might be expected. It further appears that some of the restrictions on petroleum development are of a temporary character, growing out of the war situation, and it is still too early to tell whether they may form a part of permanent legislation on this subject. Moreover, there is nothing to show what action may be taken by the newly formed, reorganized, and unrecognized Governments of Europe and Asia, many of which have important petroleum-producing properties.

In view of these considerations and the probable urgency of an early reply, it has seemed desirable to submit the information now available and subsequently to supplement it with such more timely and detailed data as may be obtained on the rapidly changing international petroleum situation as reflected in restrictive legislation along nationalistic lines.

Because of the broad scope of the study based on instruction No. 672 of May 31, 1919, and the further fact that petroleum restrictions are not specifically mentioned in the general instruction of August 16, 1919, much of the data derived therefrom only remotely relates to restrictions on petroleum development. In many countries petroleum has not been discovered in commercial quantities, and there is consequently no specific legislation bearing on it except as general mining legislation might be supposed to cover it in the event of its discovery.

The present report with special reference to the first paragraph of the Senate resolution will be in general limited to restrictions arising out of legislation enacted to control the prospecting, acquiring, and development of petroleum lands in those countries in which petroleum is produced. The report falls in three principal parts so as to be in conformity with and responsive to the Senate resolution.

SECTION 1.

The restrictions in the countries and their dependencies named in the first paragraph of the Senate resolution follow in this section in the order of their designation with other foreign countries listed alphabetically.

FRANCE.

There appear to be no mineral oil concessions granted in continental France, although there are encouraging indications, and in the French colonial possessions of northern Africa several projects are in the course of development. The French Government exercises wide discretionary powers in the granting of concessions. This wide discretion makes possible discriminatory action, but there is no evidence of its operation against citizens of the United States. It is probable that the French policy is to regard all applications for concessions in the light of the public interest which was reflected by an act of September 9, 1919, providing for complete nationalization of all mineral resources. It is not clear whether petroleum would come within the scope of this act or be covered by special legislation. There is reason to believe that the policy mentioned above would find expression in a restriction on development by aliens, at least to the extent that concessions would not be granted to alien groups unless they form a part of a French joint-stock company, of which two-thirds of the directors should be French citizens.

This policy would probably be effective in Algeria, French West Africa, and Madagascar should petroleum be found in those dependencies. It does not appear whether the above restrictions would be applicable to Morocco and Tunis. (Cablegram from Paris, Oct. 18, 1919; consular report, Oct. 31, 1919; consular report, Tananarive, Madagascar, Oct. 29, 1919; report, Tangier, Morocco, Aug. 28, 1919; and consular reports from Tunis, May 31, 1919, and Jan. 26, 1920.)

BRITISH EMPIRE.

In general, each dominion and colony has its own legislation on the subject of the petroleum industry.

The policy of the British Empire is reported to be to bring about the exclusion of aliens from the control of the petroleum supplies of the Empire and to endeavor to secure some measure of control over oil properties in foreign countries. This policy appears to be developing along the following lines, which are directly or indirectly restrictive on citizens of the United States:

1. By debarring foreigners and foreign nationals from owning or operating oil-producing properties in the British Isles, colonies, and protectorates.

2. By direct participation in ownership and control of petroleum companies.

3. By arrangements to prevent British oil companies from selling their properties to foreign owned or controlled companies.

4. By orders in council that prohibit the transfer of shares in British oil companies to other than British subjects or nationals.

It is understood that the British Government has a controlling interest in the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. and that it has also assisted in the development of the Papuan oil fields by bearing one-half of the expense and contributing experts.

It may be of some significance that by general license of September 1, 1919, prohibited transactions under the regulations of the defense of the realm act were again permitted except as such transactions might relate to oil-mining property. (Cablegram from London, Oct. 18, 1919; consular reports from London, Oct. 21, 1919, Nov. 8, 1919.)

According to recent reports, prospecting for petroleum is lawful in the United Kingdom only by the board of trade or the minister of munitions or persons authorized by them. Similar regulations apply to working a petroleum property. The only drilling now going on in the United Kingdom for petroleum is being done by S. Pearson & Son (Ltd.) as petroleum development managers to the Government.

It is said to be unlawful for a British citizen, without the consent of the board of trade, to transfer to an alien or to a foreign-controlled company any interest in a company controlling an oil field in the United Kingdom. (Defense of the realm act of 1915, as ameded Oct. 23, 1917, regulation No. 30, B B).

AUSTRALIA.

Commonwealth mining regulations are contained in regulations under the war precautions act, 1914–1916, and amendments thereto. According to this act, no contract for the acquisition of any mining business, or of any interest in such, or of any security issued by a mining company shall be made by any other than a natural-born British subject without the written consent of the attorney general. It appears that no application for a mining lease to any person other than a natural-born British subject for a term of more than five years, and that no contract for the assignment or acquisition to or by any person other than a natural-born British subject of a mining lease of which a period of five years is unexpired, shall be made or granted without the written consent of the attorney general.

BRITISH EAST AFRICA.

Under the laws of this protectorate, all aliens would seem to be excluded from the development of petroleum:

"A prospecting license shall not authorize a person who is not a British subject to peg out an oil claim. (Ordinance, 1912, Pt. III, Div. II–24 (5).)

"A person who is not a British subject shall not be entitled to own an oil claim or enjoy the right of mining for oil, anything in the ordinance to the contrary notwithstanding. (Ordinance, 1912, Pt. III, Div. II–25.)

"And whenever oil is found on any claim other than an oil claim the holder of a prospecting license, being a British subject, may peg out on such claim an oil claim. (Ordinance, 1912, Pt. III, Div. II–35.)

"The transfer of an oil claim and the grant or transfer of any share or interest therein shall be invalid unless the consent in writing of the governor to such transfer or grant shall first have been obtained, and the transferee or grantee is a British subject, or a firm or syndicate all the members of which shall at all times be and remain British subjects, or a British company registered in Great Britain or in a British colony or in the protectorate and having its principal place of business within His Majesty's dominions or in the protectorate, and the chairman of the said company and all the remaining directors shall at all times be British subjects, and the company shall not at any time be or become a corporation directly or indirectly controlled by foreigners or foreign corporations. (Ordinance, 1912, Pt. III, Div. II–46 (2).)

"No lease for the purpose of mining for mineral oil or authorizing the lessee to mine for mineral oil shall be granted, and no assignment of any such license or lease shall be made, unless the lessee or assignee shall be a British subject or a firm or syndicate all the members of which shall at all times be and remain British subjects, or a British company registered in Great Britain or in a British colony or in the protectorate and having its principal place of business within His Majesty's dominions or the protectorate, and the chairman of the said company and all the remaining directors shall at all times be British subjects, and the company shall not at any time be or become a corporation directly or indirectly controlled by foreigners or foreign corporations.

"If the lessees shall assign the same, in whole or in part, without the previous consent in writing of the governor, or if the lessee or assignee shall cease to be a British subject; or if, where a firm or syndicate is the leseee or assignee, any member of the firm or syndicate shall cease to be a British subject, the governor may thereupon cancel the lease; and in the event of any alteration being made in the articles of association or constitution of a company holding any such lease, previous notice thereof shall be given in writing to the governor, who, if in his opinion the said alteration shall be contrary to the cardinal principle that the said company shall be and remain a British company and under British control, may refuse his consent to such alteration. If and whenever any such alteration shall be made without the written consent of the governor; or if the company shall at any time cease to be a British company or shall become a corporation under foreign control, the governor may thereupon cancel the lease. (Ordinance, 1912, Pt. III, Div. V–59, (1) and (2), and Mining Regulations, 1912, 134, (1) and (2).)

"No license held by a person who is not a British subject shall confer any right on the holder to prospect for oil or to acquire claims or leases for mining for oil or working oil. (Mining Regulations, 1912, 90.)"

Under ordinance No. 12 of 1917, no alien is allowed to acquire an interest of any description in any immovable property without the consent of the governor in council. This ordinance was to remain in operation during the continuance of the war, but it seems to have been still in force on October 27, 1919. (Consular report, Oct. 27, 1919, from Nairobi, British East Africa, with inclosures.)

UGANDA.

In this protectorate the general rules and regulations governing the development of mineral resources do not apply to mineral oil prospecting, which may be carried on only under special license and in defined areas. These licenses are issued subject to such restrictions, conditions, and regulations as the governor may impose in each particular case. (Ordinance No. 14 of 1915, consular reports, Oct. 27, 1919, from Nairobi.)

GERMAN EAST AFRICA (OCCUPIED).

Under British rule no mining department has as yet been organized, and all prospecting for minerals in this controlled territory is at present forbidden by proclamation No. 12, dated July 7, 1917. (Consular report of Oct. 27, 1919, from Nairobi.)

BRITISH WEST AFRICA.

The following notice was published in the Government Gazette, of the Gold Coast Colony, on May 25, 1918, restricting mineral-oil concessions to British subjects:

"The attention of all persons concerned with or likely to be concerned with mineral-oil interests in the Gold Coast Colony is hereby directed to the provisions of section 21 of the concessions ordinance, 1900, of the said colony, which reads as follows:

"'(1) No concession with respect to mineral oil shall be granted and no assignment of any such concession shall be made unless the grantee or assignee shall be a British subject or shall be a firm, syndicate, or company which shall at all times be and remain a British company, registered in Great Britain or in a British colony, and having its principal place of business within His Majesty's dominions; and the chairman of the said company and all the remaining directors shall at all times be British subjects, and the company shall not at any time be or become a corporation directly or indirectly controlled by foreigners or foreign corporations.

"'(2) In this section the expression "foreigners" means any person who is not a British subject, and the expression "foreign corporation" means any corporation other than a corporation established under and subject to the laws of some part of His Majesty's dominions, and having its principal place of business in those dominions.

"'(3) Every concession and assignment of a concession in respect of mineral oil shall be subject to the approval of the governor.

"'(4) If the grantee of any such concession shall assign the same in whole or in part without the previous consent in writing of the governor, or if the grantee or assignee shall cease to be a British subject, the governor may thereupon cancel the concession; and in the event of any alteration being made in the articles of association or constitution of a company holding any such concession, previous notice thereof shall be given in writing to the governor, who, if in his opinion the said alteration shall be contrary to the cardinal principle that the said company shall be and remain a British company and under British control, may refuse his consent to such alteration. If and whenever any such alteration shall be made without the written consent of the governor, or if the company shall at any time cease to be a British company, or shall become a corporation under foreign control, or shall assign such concession in whole or in part without the previous consent of the governor, the governor may thereupon cancel the concession.

"'(5) The expression "mineral oil" includes bitumen, asphalt, and all other bituminous substances, with the exception of coal.'

"All persons interested herein are informed that for several years past it has been the policy of the Gold Coast Government, a policy to which the statutory support above cited has been given, to insure that no concession with respect to mineral oil in the Gold Coast Colony shall be granted or assigned to or held by any person other than a British subject, or by any syndicate, firm, or company other than one of a predominantly British character and under a control predominantly British." (Consular reports from Dakar, Senegal, Nov. 20, 1919; Feb. 5, 1920.)

CANADA.

Most of the Canadian legislation regulating petroleum development has been enacted for the Crown lands in the western part of the dominion. The following is a provision of the order in council (P. C., Jan. 29, 1920) effective March 1, 1920, relating to petroleum and gas development:

"Any company acquiring, by assignment or otherwise, a lease under the provisions of these regulations shall be a company registered or licensed in Canada and having its principal place of business within His Majesty's dominion."

The above provision was substituted for article 40 of the Dominion regulations for the disposal of petroleum and gas. Leases on Crown lands provide that any company acquiring by assignment or otherwise a lease of petroleum or natural gas lands should at all times be and remain British companies, and if any such company which might acquire a location should cease to be a British company its lease should be subject to immediate cancellation in the discretion of the minister.

The reasons advanced by the governor general for rescinding article 40 of the Dominion regulations with the above-mentioned restrictions were, first, that the restrictions did not give the Dominion Government an effective control of oil production; second, that the restrictions had the effect of discouraging the introduction of foreign capital so essential to the exploitation and development of Dominion lands thought to contain oil. (Consular report from Ottawa of Dec. 29, 1919; Feb. 18, 1920; and Feb. 24, 1920.)

BRITISH GUIANA.

The only restrictions on mining concessions in this colony discriminating against aliens are in connection with concessions with mineral-oil rights. None but British subjects are reported to be entitled to secure such rights. The same restriction holds with regard to the transfer of mineral-oil rights and property to aliens. (Consular reports from Georgetown, Sept. 19, 1919, with inclosures, and Oct. 22, 1919.)

BRITISH HONDURAS.

"All mines of mineral oil are reserved to the Crown." (Ordinance No. 26, 1907, Bureau of Mines Report on the Petroleum Industry.)

INDIA.

American oil companies are expressly excluded from doing business in Burma by proclamation signed by Queen Victoria and Lord Salisbury, secretary of state for India, on September 24, 1884, and a blanket concession of 99 years was given the Burma Oil Co. (Ltd.) on August 23, 1885, protecting this company from all foreign competition.

In India no prospecting license or lease can be granted otherwise than according to the rules summarized below, except with the previous sanction of the secretary of state for India in council, or with that of the governor general under authority delegated to him by the secretary of state for India in council. A certificate of approval, or a prospecting license, or a mining lease shall be granted only to a British subject, or to a British-controlled company. It would seem that the regulations preclude the sale of concessions or leases to foreigners, although this is not specifically stated. Leases and concessions are granted only on Government land. Private land may be exploited, but only with the consent of the owner and in accordance with the restrictions above mentioned. (Consular report from Bombay, Nov. 26, 1919.)

BRITISH WEST INDIES—BARBADOS.

Up to the present time no oil has been found in commercial quantities in Barbados, though there are croppings which seem to indicate the presence of oil. It is reported that no companies other than British companies have secured mineral concessions in the islands. The oil mines act, 1904–1908, III, 66, empowers the governor, in executive committee, to make regulations and by provisional order grant to any person the right to survey and to probe and bore to ascertain the nature of the soil and to make explorations and mine for oil within any area that the governor and the executive committee may think proper. Within the past few months the British Union Oil Co. has received certain powers under this legislation. The legislation in question appears to make no specific distinctions between aliens or nationals, but the grant to the British Union Oil Co., known as the British Union Oil Co. act of 1919, expressly provided that the privileges and powers therein shall not be conveyed or extended to any successors of the said British Union Oil Co. of a nationality other than British. The oil mines act referred to above provides in paragraphs 3 and 4 that the British Imperial Government shall have the right of preemption over all oil residues. (Consular report from Barbados, British West Indies, Oct. 21, 1919.)

TRINIDAD.

Title or interest in oil-bearing lands in the colonies of Trinidad and Tobago are covered in an ordinance (No. 29, 1917) which became effective December 3, 1917, entitled "An ordinance to control the acquisition of oil-bearing lands in the colony." This ordinance as enacted was a war measure and stipulated to remain in force during the continuance of the war and for a period of six months after the close thereof. It provided that no person shall acquire any right, title, or interest to oil-bearing lands without consent in writing of the governor. The governor may limit his consent, as he deems necessary, under instructions received from the secretary of state for the colonies. The above ordinance appears to apply particularly to privately owned oil lands.

Regulations applying to oil on Crown lands came into effect January 2, 1918, and remain in force until amended or revoked by the Government. These lands are leased by the governor, subject to the approval of the secretary of state for the colonies. It appears that the secretary of state for the colonies has been following the policy which would require that any acquisition of oil rights by a British company would provide that not more than 25 per cent of its capital or voting power is to be held by aliens, and also that the chairman and managing director and a majority of the other directors shall at all times be British subjects, together with such other provisions as might be deemed necessary to insure the company remaining under British control. It is probable that the present and future policy of the colony will be dictated by the secretary of state for the colonies at London with considerable regard to the needs of the British Admiralty, which seems anxious to reserve sufficient prospective supplies of petroleum for the British Navy. Trinidad, by reason of its location and its petroleum deposits, has a strategic importance from the standpoint of the British Navy, and in view of this it is unlikely that foreign capitalists would be given an opportunity to secure petroleum concessions. (Consular reports, Oct. 22, 1919, and Feb. 28, 1920, from Trinidad.)

HOLLAND (NETHERLANDS)—SUMATRA EAST COAST.

A number of companies are drilling for oil with reported success. All of these companies are said to be controlled by the Bataafsche Petroleum Maatschappij, of which the Kolonials Nederlandsche Petroleum Maatschappij of The Hague is the holding company. (Consular report from Medan, Sumatra, Oct. 19, 1919.)

DUTCH EAST INDIES.

Prospecting licenses and concessions are granted only to Dutch subjects, inhabitants of the Netherlands or Netherlands East Indies, and to companies incorporated under the Dutch laws either in the Netherlands or in the Netherlands East Indies having in their board of directors a majority of Dutch subjects. Persons or companies not established in the Netherlands East Indies must be represented in the islands by a trustee, who must comply with the stipulations of the mining law.

Considerable part of the archipelago, more especially the smaller islands, is still entirely closed to private mining work, partly by the reservation of large areas for State exploration, with a view to their being worked later either by the Government or by private companies. American companies have for many years without success endeavored to secure leases in this field.

The Royal Dutch Shell Co. has a complete economic monopoly of production.

A new bill has been laid before the Netherlands State Council to confirm the contract between the Royal Dutch Petroleum Co. and the Government, under which contract the company will secure the working of all the oil lands in the Dutch East Indies, including Sumatra. (Consular report from Soerabaya, Java, of Jan. 27, 1920.)

JAPAN.

Five oil fields, sufficient for the use of the Japanese Navy, are held by the navy department. Foreigners would seem to be restricted in the development of petroleum properties by article 5 of the Japanese mining law, promulgated by Imperial order on the 7th of March, 1905, reading as follows:

"No persons other than subjects of the Empire or juridical persons duly formed in accordance with the laws thereof are entitled to acquire mining rights."

The meaning of "juridical persons" in the Japanese law is such that it is believed to be practically impossible for foreign companies to retain or transfer undisputed possession of mining rights in Japan. (Consular reports, with inclosure of Oct. 8, 1919, and Dec. 10, 1919, from Yokohama, and Jan. 23, 1920.)

BOLIVIA.

Under a law dated December 12, 1916, all oil lands belong to the State except those already legally taken up by private owners. However, it is believed that there are no restrictions against aliens, since any person may freely prospect on these public lands without a license by merely notifying the local administrative authority. (Consular report from La Paz, Bolivia, Nov. 26, 1919.)

COLOMBIA.

Aliens have the same rights as natives to locate and own mines where such rights are secured by treaties or where the aliens' national laws give reciprocal rights to Colombians. (Consular reports from Barranquilla, Jan. 19, 1919, and Oct. 11, 1919.)

COSTA RICA.

There is said to be no distinction between natives and foreigners. The Government reserves ownership of the subsoil. No permission is required for exploration. Acquisitions can be obtained only by concessions from the Government. The only monopoly of mineral resources in the Republic concerns petroleum rights through contracts with the Government giving exclusive oil rights to one company in the Provinces of Limon, Puntarenas, and Guanacasti and to another company in the Provinces of Heredia, Alajuela, and Cartago. (Consular report, Oct. 6, 1919, from San Jose.)

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

There appear to be no legal distinctions between nationals and aliens in granting concessions. The proposed new mining law provides that petroleum or natural gas wherever found will be considered as the property of the nation. Special permits for exploration and exploitation are now required and will be required under the new law. (Consular report from Santo Domingo, July 25, 1919.)

ECUADOR.

A new law is reported to declare that petroleum mines not adjudicated belong exclusively to the State, and private parties may not denounce them pending the enactment of a new law. There are said to be no restrictions, legislative or administrative, discriminating between aliens and nationals. (Consular reports, June 5, 1919, and Aug. 30. 1919, from Guayaquil; cablegram of Oct. 30, 1919, from Quito.)

GUATEMALA.

Restrictions are laid on aliens in the acquisition of mining rights in the case of petroleum. These restrictions on petroleum are contained in presidential decree No. 722 of December 20, 1915:

"ARTICLE 1. The nation reserves the absolute title to all sources of petroleum and hydrocarbons in general which exist in the Republic.

"ART. 2. The acquisition and exploitation of said sources shall only be accomplished by means of a lease, not to exceed 10 years in duration, contracted with the ministry of public works, which shall be submitted for the approval of the Chief Executive, and which shall only be made with native or naturalized citizens.

"ART. 3. The above-mentioned contracts shall be nontransferrable, except by express authorization of the Government, and then only provided the interested parties are citizens of Guatamala.

"ART. 4. Special regulations shall detail the requirements and conditions necessary for entering into these contracts, and this decree shall be held as an integral part of the mining code and shall be reported to the National Legislative Assembly at its ordinary sessions." (Published in El Guatemalteco of Dec. 20, 1915; approved by the National Legislative Assembly on Apr. 29, 1916, decree 945; consular reports of July 3, 1919, and Aug. 30, 1919, from Guatemala City.)

MEXICO.

Denouncement (filing claim by due legal process) of mining properties is made in accordance with the provisions of Mexican mining laws, as modified by the provisions of articles 27 and 33 of the Mexican constitution of 1917. This constitution was signed January 31, 1917, and promulgated February 5, 1917. The following is believed to be a reliable translation of pertinent excerpts from articles 27 and 33:

"ART. 27. The ownership of lands and waters within the limits of the national territory is vested originally in the Nation, which has had and has the right to transmit title thereof to private persons, thereby constituting private property.

"Private property shall not be expropriated except for cause of public utility[1] and by means of indemnification.

"The nation shall have at all times the right to impose on private property such limitations as the public interest may demand, as well as the right to regulate the development of natural resources, which are susceptible of appropriation, in order to conserve them and equitably to distribute the public wealth. In the nation is vested direct ownership of all minerals, petroleum, and all hydrocarbons—solid, liquid, or gaseous.

"Legal capacity to acquire ownership of lands and waters of the nation shall be governed by the following provisions:

"'I. Only Mexicans by birth or naturalization and Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters, and their appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop mines, waters, or mineral fuels in the Republic of Mexico. The nation may grant the same right to foreigners, provided they agree before the department of foreign affairs to be considered Mexicans in respect to such property, and accordingly not to invoke the protection of their governments in respect to the same, under penalty, in case of breach, of forfeiture to the nation of property so acquired. With a zone of 100 kilometers (62.14 miles) from the frontiers and of 50 kilometers (31.07 miles) from the seacoast no foreigner shall under any conditions acquire direct ownership of lands and waters.

"'IV. Commercial stock companies may not acquire, hold, or administer rural properties. Companies of this nature which may be organized to develop any manufacturing, mining, petroleum, or other industry, excepting only agricultural industries, may acquire, hold, or administer lands only in an area absolutely necessary for their establishments or adequate to serve the purposes indicated, which the executive of the union or of the State in each case shall determine.'

"ART. 33. Foreigners are those who do not posses the qualifications prescribed by article 30 (birth or naturalization). They shall be entitled to the rights granted by chapter 1, Title I, of the present constitution; but the Executive shall have the exclusive right to expel from the Republic forthwith and without judicial process any foreigner whose presence he may deem inexpedient.

"No foreigner shall meddle in any way whatsoever in the political affairs of the country." (The Mexican Review for March, 1917.)

There appears to have been as yet no judicial interpretation of article 27. However, the following, from an opinion of the attorney general of Mexico as to the interpretation to be given to the first paragraph of article 27 of the new constitution, may be informative:

"I. All landed property, whether of national or of private ownership, urban or rural, comprised within the confines of the Republic, shall be considered as covered by the term 'lands and waters of the nation.'

"II. Only Mexican individuals and Mexican associations have the right to acquire lands, waters, and their appurtenances in the Republic.

"III. Alien individuals may acquire such property, either directly from the nation or from individuals—Mexican or alien—on complying with the conditions prescribed in section 1 of the seventh paragraph of article 27, when authorized by the State. Hence, even though compliance be had as hereinbefore provided, the State may deny aliens this right under the discretionary power vested in it by this provision.

"IV. Alien corporations shall in no event acquire such property." (Translated from Diario Oficial, Dec. 8, 1917; consular reports from Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, Sept. 27, 1919, and Guaymas, Mexico, Oct. 10, 1919, and from Aguascalientes, Aguas, Mexico, Aug. 22, 1919; also the Mexican Oil Question.)

PALESTINE.

Rich petroleum fields are believed to exist in certain districts of Palestine. The British policy in this section, as in all other occupied areas, seems to be to restrict petroleum activities so far as that may be possible by leaving in force for the time being the regulations in force prior to the time of occupation. (Consular report of Nov. 8, 1919, from Jerusalem.)

PERSIA.

Citizens of the United States are generally excluded from petroleum development in Persia, where the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. has an exclusive right, granted May 28, 1901, for a term of 60 years. This concession, extending over the entire country, with the exception of five Provinces, and covering about 500,000 square miles, has been greatly strengthened by the agreement between the British and Persian Governments, signed on August 9, 1919, by which the Persian civil, military, and financial administrations were placed under British supervision and direction. (Memorandum and inclosure from the American Petroleum Institute.)

SECTION 2.

With reference to steps taken by this Government looking to the removal of restrictions operating directly or indirectly on citizens of the United States as mentioned in the second paragraph of Senate resolution 331, it should be noted that in general the restrictions set forth above are so drawn as to distinguish between aliens and nationals. This distinction causes the discrimination, if any, to fall on aliens generally, thus only indirectly operating on citizens of the United States. In the absence of prohibitory treaty provisions, this form of discrimination would seem to be justifiable from the viewpoint of international law, however impolitic it might be as regards reciprocity and international comity.

It should be further noted that the above legal restrictions generally applicable to aliens are in a large measure enforceable by administrative regulations which give large play to the discretionary powers of the Executive. It is in the application of these comprehensive discretionary powers to particular cases that the possibility of discriminatory action is involved. Since this discriminatory action would seem in the absence of treaty provisions to be the only basis on which diplomatic protest could be based, the Department of State has endeavored promptly and systematically to secure detailed information regarding injuries to particular American interests resulting from the alleged discriminatory enforcement of these restrictions in foreign countries, with a view to making representations to these foreign Governments when the circumstances should seem to warrant.

The action taken by the department in connection with the restrictive legislation of Mexico appears in greater detail in the third section of this report.

Representations have been made to the Colombian Government for the fuller protection of the vested subsoil rights of citizens of the United States by the modification of Colombian legislation.

Pending future developments it has seemed to be the policy of the British Government in the occupied areas to prohibit prospecting for minerals (see German East Africa in sec. 1 above). It is believed that a similar policy is being followed in the occupied areas of the Ottoman Empire. The unsettled conditions generally prevailing in these occupied regions make it impossible to hazard any speculation as to the ultimate policy to be adopted. A final decision on this question, however, will be of great significance to this Government because of extensive American interests already present in these regions and the promise of future development. In connection with this policy of the British authorities in the occupied areas of the Ottoman Empire, the American Embassy at London was authorized by cable on October 30, 1919, to make representations to the British Government. In reply assurances were received that discrimination with reference to the [1] While the term "public utility" may be somewhat misleading, it is felt that that of "public use" may be even more so. The same expression ("por causa de utilidad publica") is to be found in the 1857 constitution, and has always been interpreted by the courts of Mexico in the sense of public interest, as in the case of land expropriated for the surface work of a mine, etc.

granting and development of concessions in the occupied regions is not being permitted.

The vastly increased importance of petroleum in gradually supplanting coal as a sinew of trade and war is reflected in the widespread restrictive legislation set forth above (see sec. 1). A step in the same direction in the legislation of the United States is found in section 1 of the recently enacted "Act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain" (Public, No. 146, 66th Cong.), reading as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, and lands containing such deposits owned by the United States, including those in national forests, but excluding lands acquired under the act known as the Appalachian forest act approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stats., p. 961), and those in national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas to municipalities: Provided, That the United States reserves the right to extract helium from all gas produced from lands permitted, leased, or otherwise granted under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in the extraction of helium from gas produced from such lands, it shall be so extracted as to cause no substantial delay in the delivery of gas produced from the well to the purchaser thereof: And provided further, That citizens of another country, the laws, customs, or regulations of which deny similar or like privileges to citizens or corporations of this country, shall not by stock ownership, stock holding, or stock control own any interest in any lease acquired under the provisions of this act."

This legislation, although limited by its application to the public domain, evoked considerable interest abroad. This manifestation of foreign interest, indicative of the intense international competition to secure and restrict exploitation of the world's petroleum resources, makes the further protection and development of American petroleum interests abroad in a large measure dependent on reciprocal arrangements between Governments. A suggestion of a trend in this direction is already noticed in the following excerpt from a note directed by this department to an interested foreign Government prior to the enactment of the above legislation by Congress:

"The exclusion of American citizens, either in law or in fact, from commercial production in other countries has given rise in this country to an agitation for some form of governmental action. The source of this movement lies in the conviction that, with respect to certain essential raw materials, the enjoyment of the same rights in foreign countries that aliens enjoy in the United States is essential to the future welfare of our people. This conviction is believed to underlie and explain the provisions of the public lands leasing bill to which you have referred. The movement would lose much of its force if an agreement were in existence providing in adequate measure for that reciprocity toward which the proposed legislation is directed. The securing of adequate supplies of oil in emergencies does not appear to be irreconcilably opposed to the principle of reciprocal access to supplies."

SECTION 3.

In reference to the information requested in the third and fourth paragraphs of Senate resolution above mentioned, the Department of State is not advised that the Government of Mexico has imposed express restrictions upon citizens of the United States in regard to the acquisition and development of petroleum-bearing lands in Mexico which are not imposed upon the nationals of other foreign countries.

It should be noted that the holdings of American interests in Mexico are so extensive that general restrictions applicable to foreigners fall most heavily on American interests.

The alleged nationalization of petroleum by the separation of subsoil from surface rights, and the governmental reservation of the former, may have been effected by article 27 of the new Mexican constitution of 1917. (Mexico—above sec. 1.) There appears to have been no judicial interpretation on the construction of article 27. It may be that some relief may be expected from a judicial construction of the conflict which appears to exist between article 27 and article 14, which states that no law shall be given retroactive effect to the prejudice of any person. On February 19, 1918, the Mexican executive, under authority of a congressional resolution of May 8, 1917, conferring upon him extraordinary powers in the department of finance, issued the first of a series of decrees, which seems to have been the first step in enforcing article 27. To this decree diplomatic protests were made by this Government, Great Britain, and France. The position of this Government in regard to this apparently radical legislation is set forth in the following from Ambassador Fletcher's note of April 2, 1918, to the Mexican Government:

"While the United States Government is not disposed to request for its citizens exemption from the payment of their ordinary and just share of the burdens of taxation, so long as the tax is uniform and not discriminatory in its operation and can fairly be considered a tax and not a confiscation or unfair imposition, and while the United States Government is not inclined to interpose in behalf of its citizens in case of expropriation of private property for sound reasons of public welfare and upon just compensation and by legal proceedings before tribunals, allowing fair and equal opportunity to be heard and giving due consideration to American rights, nevertheless, the United States can not acquiesce in any procedure ostensibly or nominally in the form of taxation or the exercise of eminent domain but really resulting in confiscation of private rights and arbitrary deprivation of vested rights."

REPORT ON MINING LAWS AND LEGAL RESTRICTIONS IMPOSED ON FOREIGNERS IN SECURING OR OPERATING MINERAL CONCESSIONS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 31, 1919.

To the American Consular Officers.

GENTLEMEN: The Department of State, cooperating with other departments, is undertaking an economic study of the mineral resources of the world. This study will include, among other phases of the subject, an investigation into the legal restrictions imposed by the various countries upon aliens in securing mining concessions or operating mining properties.

Accordingly you are instructed to obtain and forward as soon as circumstances permit information on the following points:

1. General laws and rules governing the granting of mineral concessions, so far as they affect legal titles of concessionaires and not the physical aspects of mining property.
2. Restrictions, legislative or administrative, which are placed on aliens and not on nationals in granting mining rights or concessions.
3. Restrictions, legislative or administrative, which are placed on aliens and not on nationals in operating mineral properties or distributing mineral products.
4. Restrictions, either legislative or administrative, on the sale of mining rights and properties to aliens.
5. Information as to whether mineral rights are commonly reserved to the Government and special permits required from the Government to explore or develop mineral resources.
6. If licenses are required, restrictions, legislative or administrative, which are imposed on aliens and not on nationals.
7. Information regarding any development of mineral resources, or the distribution of mineral products, directly by the Government.
8. Information regarding governmental financing of private companies engaged in producing or distributing mineral products.
9. Information regarding any excessively large mining grants which, because of their size, can not be developed by the concessionaires in the immediate future.
10. Information regarding any monopolistic mineral grants covering the entire country.
11. The amount and character of taxes imposed by the Government on the output of minerals.

The terms "mines" and "minerals" as used above are to be construed broadly and include mineral oil.

If there is available a compiled mining code of recent date, you are requested to forward the code with your report.

You are also requested to distinguish between restrictions which are war measures and which will, or probably will, be repealed with the resumption of normal relations and those which are of a more permanent nature.

I am, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

For the Acting Secretary of State:

WILBUR J. CARR.

MINERAL-OIL CONCESSIONS AND RIGHTS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 16, 1919.

To the American Diplomatic and Consular Officers.

GENTLEMEN: The vital importance of securing adequate supplies of mineral oil both for present and future needs of the United States has been forcibly brought to the attention of the department. The development of proven fields and exploration of new areas is being aggressively conducted in many parts of the world by nationals of various countries, and concessions for mineral-oil rights are being actively sought. It is desired to have the most complete and recent information regarding such activities, either by United States citizens or by others.

You are accordingly instructed to obtain and forward promptly from time to time information regarding mineral-oil concessions either proposed or granted, sale or transfer of such concessions, change of ownership of oil property, or important changes in ownership or control of corporate companies concerned with oil production or distribution. Information regarding development of new oil fields or increased output of producing areas should also be forwarded. Comprehensive data are desired and reports should not be limited to the points specifically mentioned above, but should include information regarding all matters of interest affecting the mineral-oil industry which may arise from time to time.

You are also instructed to lend all legitimate aid to reliable and responsible United States citizens or interests which are seeking mineral-oil concessions or rights. Care should be taken, however, to distinguish between United States citizens representing United States capital and United States citizens representing foreign capital; also between companies incorporated in the United States and actually controlled by United States capital and those companies which are merely incorporated under United States laws but dominated by foreign capital.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant.

For the Secretary of State:

ALVEY A. ADEE.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the further consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 1699, the civil-service retirement bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I was about to ask unanimous consent to take up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill. I do not think it will take more than a few minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. STERLING. The conference report on the retirement bill is the unfinished business; it has been pending for some time, and I do not think it will take very long to dispose of it.

Mr. GRONNA. I can assure the Senator that if it requires more than five minutes to dispose of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill I shall ask that it be laid aside.

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is Monday morning, on which day, according to the rule, the consideration of the calendar is in order. On last Monday morning the calendar was not considered, and I was going to ask that we take up the calendar at Order of Business 493, where we discontinued its consideration two weeks ago, and allow the calendar to be run through—there are not very many bills on it—before any other business is taken up this morning. Of course, the consideration of the calendar could only be postponed by unanimous consent under the rule, and I do not wish to be forced to object to the consideration of any bill or conference report.

Mr. STERLING. I hope the Senator from Utah will forego his request for the present. I believe there will be time enough to take up the calendar after the conference report has been disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from South Dakota will assure me that there will be no debate upon the conference report, I shall not object.

Mr. STERLING. I can not absolutely assure the Senator from Utah of that, but my impression is—and it is a very strong impression—from the information I have in regard to it, that there will be no debate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Utah there will be no extended debate on the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I should like to have it disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill is not a complete report.

Mr. GRONNA. No; it is not a complete report.

Mr. SMOOT. It leaves three items still in disagreement, and the Senator desires, if the Senate agrees to the report as presented, to ask for a further conference on the items still in disagreement.

Mr. GRONNA. That is exactly right.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I have no objection at all to that.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 12272, being the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is the Senator from North Dakota going to discuss the conference report?

Mr. GRONNA. No; I stated that if there was any discussion I would ask to have it laid aside. There are three items which are still in disagreement. One is the item relative to the congressional seed distribution, being amendment No. 93; amendment No. 116 relates to a resurvey of the value of grazing privileges on forest lands; and the third item in disagreement is the so-called Comer cotton amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I am familiar with the provisions of the conference report and with the amendments still in disagreement, as well as those which have been agreed to, but I desire to address myself to the report when it is considered, and I may address myself to it at some length. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from North Dakota stated that if there was any discussion he would not ask for the consideration of the report; I came in as the report was being laid before the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, the Senator has a right to discuss the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to taking it up now, but there will be some discussion.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to make my word good to the Senator from South Dakota and to the Senate. I stated that if the conference report took to exceed five minutes I would be willing to lay it aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, however, finds that the conference report was submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] on the 11th instant and has been lying on the table. Nothing can be done about it except by unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Reserving the right to object, I may not have made myself understood. I am willing that the report be taken up now or at any other time, but I do want to submit some remarks before the report is adopted; and if the Senator does not want to proceed with its consideration if there is going to be any discussion, perhaps he had better allow it to go over for a while.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is a member of the committee, and, of course, he ought to have the privilege of making whatever remarks he wishes. I am only asking for a further conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he intends to discuss this conference report if unanimous consent is given for its consideration at this time?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I am going to discuss it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I object to the consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. Is there any further morning business?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, referring to the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, I desire to say that I regret very much that the conferees did not agree on what is known as the Comer amendment.

To show the importance of that, Mr. President, I will state that on the 6th day of May good middling cotton was bringing in Columbia, S. C., 42 cents, strict middling 41½ cents, and middling 40½ cents. On that day July cotton futures in New York opened at 38.45 and closed at 38.24—some 2 cents a pound under the actual cotton. The object of the Comer amendment is to get around this condition.

Here is a cotton letter from New Orleans, dated on that day, which says:

> Cotton ruled higher for new crops on more unfavorable rains, while July was soft on liquidation, presumably due to the idea that deliveries of low and strict low middling will be sufficient to prevent a squeeze in that month.

That is where they use this low-grade cotton. They will have a great quantity of low middling and strict low middling, and use it so as to depress the price. There is no reason in the world why there should be a difference of 2 cents a pound between the actual cotton and the future market. By reason of the fact that under the law the seller has the right to tender any of the 10 grades, it keeps down the price, so that the operation is simply a millstone around the neck of cotton.

While it may not be possible to get this legislation now, I hope the day will come, and I believe it will shortly come, when the people even in the South, the Members of Congress from the South, will better understand the theory of this amendment and some such law will be enacted. It ought to be so that the future market and the spot market shall go along together, and then the only difference there ought to be from one month to another would be the additional carrying charges. We lose millions annually by unfair dealings.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. STERLING. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the further consideration of the conference report on the civil-service retirement bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will ask unanimous consent to take it up, with the understanding that it is not going to lead to any debate, I have not any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that on Monday morning this report, being the unfinished business, can be taken up only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is as I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object unless it leads to discussion. If it does, then I want to reserve the right to object to the further consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the conference report before the Senate. It has been read.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Harris	McNary	Simmons
Borah	Harrison	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Jones, Wash.	New	Smoot
Comer	Kellogg	Norris	Spencer
Culberson	Kendrick	Nugent	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Swanson
Dial	Keyes	Phelan	Thomas
Edge	King	Phipps	Trammell
Elkins	Knox	Pittman	Underwood
Fernald	Lenroot	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Gerry	Lodge	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Glass	McCumber	Ransdell	Warren
Gronna	McKellar	Reed
Hale	McLean	Sheppard

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are absent on official business.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we begin the consideration of the calendar with Order of Business 493, a bill authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians, residing in the States of Oklahoma and Nebraska, to submit claims to the Court of Claims. That is the bill that we reached two weeks ago when the calendar was being considered under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (S. 804) authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians, residing in the States of Oklahoma and Nebraska, to submit claims to the Court of Claims was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 1023) for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 4, after the word "begun," to insert the words "within five years after the passage of this act"; on line 8, after the word "Interior," to insert the words "in accordance with sections 2103–2106 of the United States Revised Statutes"; and on line 16, after the word "Indians," to insert a comma and the words "such compensation in no event to exceed the sum of $25,000," so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to consider and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of the Blackfeet, Blood, Piegan, Gros Ventre, River Crow, and Assiniboine Nations or Tribes of Indians against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counterclaims which the United States may have against the said nations or tribes, and to enter judgment thereon, all claims and defenses to be considered without regard to lapse of time; and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof shall be a full settlement of all claims whatsoever of said Indians against the United States.

SEC. 2. That suits under this act shall be begun within five years after the passage of this act by the filing of a petition to be verified by an attorney or attorneys selected by the claimant Indians with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with sections 2103–2106 of the United States Revised Statutes. The claimant Indians shall be parties plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and such suits shall on motion of either party be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the United States. The compensation to be paid the attorney for the claimant Indians shall be determined by the Court of Claims and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found and adjudged to be due said Indians, such compensation in no event to exceed the sum of $25,000. The balance of any such judgment shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians entitled thereto and draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, which interest shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be paid to said Indians or expended for their benefit.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have been advised that a number of the bills which were passed the other day—and I understand this is analogous to them—impose obligations upon the Government of the United States. Can the Senator give assurance that that is not the case?

Mr. CURTIS. This is a claim against the United States under the old treaties. These Indians claim that there is a certain amount of money due them because of the violation of certain treaty obligations. The bill permits the tribe to go to the court and set up that claim. The Government will be allowed to set up any counterclaim it may have and to set up as a counterclaim any gratuity given to these Indians at any time. In other words, it is designed to settle all the affairs between the tribe and the Government. Agreements have been made with these Indians, allotments of their lands have been made, and the object of this legislation is to finally settle up their affairs.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the alleged claims are based upon contractual relations?

Mr. CURTIS. They are based upon old treaties. There may be something in them, and there may be nothing in them. In many of the cases there is nothing in them at all. In many of them they recover damages against the Government because the Government failed to keep its treaty agreements with the Indians.

Mr. KING. Is there anything in this bill or in any of this proposed legislation which would enlarge the obligations of the Government or increase its obligations above those which are provided in the treaties?

Mr. CURTIS. Not at all.

Mr. KING. Was there a unanimous report by the committee?

Mr. CURTIS. There was. I may add that the bill was recommended by the Interior Department. All these bills were referred to the Interior Department and recommended by the department.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLATHEAD NATION OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 2298) for the relief of the Flathead Nation of Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 10, after the words "final judgment thereon," to add the following proviso: "Provided, That the court shall also consider and determine any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counterclaims which the United States may have against the said tribe of Indians"; on page 2, line 9, before the words "by the Flathead Nation," to insert the words "within five years from the approval of this act"; on line 13, after the words "Flathead Nation of Indians," to insert the words "by contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in accordance with existing law"; on line 19, to strike out the numerals "15" and insert the numerals "10"; and on line 20, after the word "recovery," to insert the words "and in no event to exceed the sum of $25,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims, of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Flathead Nation of Indians, residing in the State of Montana, may have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States, for determination; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all such claims and to render final judgment thereon: Provided, That the court shall also consider and determine any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counterclaims which the United States may have against the said tribe of Indians.

The Court of Claims shall advance the cause upon its docket for hearing and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of the said Flathead Nation of Indians and the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun within five years from the approval of this act by the Flathead Nation of Indians as parties plaintiff and the United States as party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the Flathead Nation of Indians by contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in accordance with existing law, upon information and belief, as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery and in no event to exceed the sum of $25,000, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the Flathead Nation of Indians, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due the said nation of Indians.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS IN OREGON.

The bill (S. 2800) authorizing the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians, in the State of Oregon, to submit claims to the Court of Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 11, after the words "judgment thereon," to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That the United States may plead set-offs, counterclaims, or any other equitable defense it may have against the Indians"; on page 2, line 11, after the words "party defendant," to add the words "within five years of approval of this act"; on line 14, after the word "Tribes," to insert the words "by contract to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as provided by existing law," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims, of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon may have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all such claims and to render final judgment thereon: Provided, That the United States may plead set-offs, counterclaims, or any other equitable defense it may have against the Indians.

The Court of Claims shall advance the cause upon its docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of the said Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun by the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians as parties plaintiff and the United States as the party defendant within five years of approval of this act. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes by contract to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as provided by existing law upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said tribes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES UNDER TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 1519) making appropriations for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PRINTING COURT RECORDS.

The bill (S. 4273) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 866), was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 866), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That any citizen of the United States entitled to commence any suit or action, civil or criminal, in any court of the United States, may, upon the order of the court, commence and prosecute or defend to conclusion any suit or action, or a writ of error or an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, or to the Supreme Court in such suit or action, including all appellate proceedings, unless the trial court shall certify in writing that in the opinion of the court such appeal or writ of error is not taken in good faith, without being required to prepay fees or costs or for the printing of the record in the appellate court or give security therefor, before or after bringing suit or action, or upon suing out a writ of error or appealing, upon filing in said court a statement under oath in writing, that because of his poverty he is unable to pay the costs of said suit or action or of such writ of error or appeal, or to give security for the same, and that he believes that he is entitled to the redress he seeks in such suit or action or writ of error or appeal, and setting forth briefly the nature of his alleged cause of action, or appeal: Provided, That in any criminal case the court may, upon the filing in said court of the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned, direct that the expense of printing the record on appeal or writ of error be paid by the United States, and the same shall be paid when authorized by the Attorney General."

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether he desires to have the bill passed at this time?

Mr. NELSON. The only change made by it in existing law is a proviso, which reads as follows:

Provided, That in any criminal case the court may, upon the filing in said court of the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned, direct that the expense of printing the record on appeal or writ of error be paid by the United States, and the same shall be paid when authorized by the Attorney General.

This is an amendment to the law authorizing a poor man who is not able to pay the costs to sue in United States courts in forma pauperis, as a pauper, without giving security or advancing the costs. That is the existing law. Under the law, or a rule of court, when a case is appealed to the Supreme Court the record on appeal has to be printed. The Comptroller of the Treasury held that under existing law there was no provision for the Government of the United States to pay the costs of printing the record, and this is simply to cover that point. It is the whole object of the bill to provide for payment in a case where a man sues as a pauper, that he is not obliged to pay the costs or to give security therefor. It is simply to provide for such a case, and it is subject to the control of the judge and the Attorney General. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the judge is compelled, upon the filing of the affidavit provided for in the bill, to make the order.

Mr. NELSON. No; it is left to the judge. Furthermore, the Senator will find that it must be approved by the Attorney General. I will read the provison again:

Provided, That in any criminal case the court may—

That leaves it discretionary.

upon the filing in said court of the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned—

That is, an affidavit that a man is a poor man and can not pay—direct that the expense of printing the record on appeal or writ of error be paid by the United States, and the same shall be paid when authorized by the Attorney General.

In the first place, it is in the discretion of the court, and, in the next place, it must be approved by the Attorney General.

Mr. KING. There is some question as to whether that is discretionary, but I think I shall resolve the doubt in favor of the construction placed upon it by the Senator. If it was compulsory, I think it would be bad legislation, because the Senator knows that too often a defendant in a criminal case will make an affidavit for the costs to be paid by the Government when a full investigation would disclose that it was not a case in which the Government should incur the expense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why not amend it by inserting the words "in his discretion"?

Mr. KING. Would the Senator object to the addition of the words "in his discretion"?

Mr. NELSON. It is practically left in the discretion of the court. It says "may." The court may do it, and the judge has the same discretion that he has with reference to the other costs in the case. Under existing law the judge now determines it upon the affidavits filed.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that in many decisions the word "may" has been construed to mean "must," and I suggest to the Senator that if he is absolutely sure the word "may" does involve discretionary power——

Mr. NELSON. I think it does. It is left in the discretion of the court to pass upon it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator is so sure of that, suppose we add the words "in his discretion"?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think it is necessary and I do not think there is any use putting it in the law. It is not in the law in respect to the other costs, and why should we put it in specially in this case and make it different?

Mr. KING. Because I am not sure that the construction which the Senator places on the word "may" will always be followed by the court.

Mr. NELSON. I think it will.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LONGEVITY PAY.

The bill (S. 3251) granting longevity pay from and including August 5, 1917, to certain officers and enlisted men was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INDIAN CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 5163) authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, after line 15, to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That if it be determined by the Court of Claims in the said suit herein authorized that the United States Government has wrongfully appropriated any lands belonging to the said Indians, damages therefor shall be confined to the value of the said land at the time of said appropriation, together with interest at 3 per cent per annum, and the decree of the Court of Claims with reference thereto, when satisfied, shall annul and cancel all claim and title of the said Indians or any other tribe or band of Indians in and to said lands, as well as all damages for all wrongs and injuries, if any, committed by the Government of the United States with reference thereto.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to. I want to offer an amendment later on to the section.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to amend the House text, on page 3, line 21, by striking out, after the word "appropriation," the words: "together with interest at 3 per cent per annum," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That if it be determined by the Court of Claims in the said suit herein authorized that the United States Government has wrongfully appropriated any lands belonging to the said Indians, damages therefor shall be confined to the value of the said land at the time of said appropriation, and the decree of the Court of Claims with reference thereto, when satisfied, shall annul and cancel all claim and title of the said Indians or any other tribe or band of Indians in and to said lands, as well as all damages for all wrongs and injuries, if any, committed by the Government of the United States with reference thereto.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had time to examine it. Would that make a direct appropriation?

Mr. CURTIS. No; it simply prevents interest from being paid on whatever judgment may be obtained.

Mr. SMOOT. But if section 3 of the bill is finally agreed to, with those words stricken out, does the bill provide an appropriation to cover whatever judgment the court may render?

Mr. CURTIS. It does not provide an appropriation, but simply for a judgment, the payment of which Congress would have to appropriate for. It is in the same language as all the other bills which go to the court, except this provision for the collection of interest, and it has not been the policy of Congress to pay interest on judgments or on claims against the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. After reading the section, Mr. President, I see that it does not provide for a direct appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 3998) authorizing any tribes or bands of Indians of California to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which any tribes or bands of Indians of California may have against the United States may be submitted to the Court of Claims for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes or bands from the United States for lands formerly occupied and claimed by them in the said State, which lands are alleged to have been taken from them without compensation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribes or bands against the United States and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That, if any claim or claims be submitted to said court, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation; and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribes or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the said tribe, or any band thereof, may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States shall be party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribes the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the aforesaid tribes or bands of Indians of California, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary; official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribes or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribes, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fees decreed by said court be more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered by such cause, such fee to be paid from said judgment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMEN'S BUREAU OF DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. KENYON. I was called out of the Chamber, Mr. President, and I want to inquire what became of No. 477 on the calendar, the bill (H. R. 13229) to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the Women's Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. We began with No. 493, where we left off two weeks ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We started at No. 493.

COST OF STREET IMPROVEMENTS FOR INDIANS.

The bill (H. R. 11024) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 20, 1914," approved June 30, 1913, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay out of any funds of the Creek, Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, the proportionate cost of street paving, construction of sidewalks and sewers abutting on unsold lots belonging to any of said tribes and as may be properly chargeable against said town lots, said payments to be made upon submission of proof to said Secretary of the Interior showing the entire cost of the said street paving, sidewalk, and sewer construction and that said improvement was duly authorized and undertaken in accordance with law: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied that the charges made are reasonable and that the lots belonging to the above-mentioned tribes against which the charges were made have been enhanced in value by said improvements to not less than the amount of said charges.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIS B. CROSS.

The bill (S. 3318) for the relief of Willis B. Cross, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BIG ROCK STONE & CONSTRUCTION CO.

The bill (H. R. 13274) to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots in the State of Arkansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the payment by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, of such sum as he may determine to be the reasonable value of the premises (but not less than $150 per acre), to convey to the said company the following-described portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, near the city of Little Rock, State of Arkansas, to wit:

Beginning at the southeast corner of a 2-acre tract purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., approved by act of Congress August 14, 1912; thence north 1 degree 18 minutes east 437 feet to the southeast corner of an 18.75-acre tract purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., approved by act of Congress August 14, 1912; thence south 54 degrees 30 minutes west along boundary line 250 feet to the southwest corner of said 18.75-acre tract, this point being also the northeast corner of the 2-acre tract above mentioned; thence south 33 degrees 34 minutes east 350 feet along boundary of said 2-acre tract to point of beginning, same being a triangular parcel of ground located in the southwest quarter of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west, containing 1 acre.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into a revocable lease with the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., a corporation as aforesaid, on the following-described portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, near the city of Little Rock, State of Arkansas, to wit:

From cut-stone monument in boundary line of military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, approximately 150 feet southeast of brick pumping station, run north 37 degrees 52 minutes west 624 feet from point of beginning; thence south 54 degrees 30 minutes west approximately 240 feet to bank of Arkansas River; thence in a northwesterly direction, following up the left bank of river, approximately 1,300 feet to boundary line of a 2-acre tract purchased from the United States by the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co., approved by act of Congress August 14, 1912; thence north 54 degrees 30 minutes east along boundary line of said 2-acre tract to the southeast corner of said tract; thence south 33 degrees 34 minutes east alongside of bluff 1,300 feet to point of beginning, same being a strip of ground lying along the east bank of Arkansas River in the southwest quarter of section 28, township 2 north, range 12 west, containing 7.20 acres, at a rental value to be determined by the War Department.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES K. BOND.

The bill (S. 515) to correct the military record of Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF FARM LOAN ACT TO PORTO RICO.

The bill (H. R. 8038) to amend section 4 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, extending its provisions to Porto Rico, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committe on Banking and Currency whether this bill meets with the approval of his committee unanimously.

Mr. McLEAN. It merely extends the provisions of the farm loan act to the island of Porto Rico. I am not anxious to have the bill acted on to-day, in view of the fact that the attack on the act in the courts has practically suspended the application of the farm loan system, and there is some question as to whether it would be worth while to enact this legislation at this time, although the bill has passed the House. In any event, I think it is well to pass it over for to-day.

The next bill on the calendar, House bill 13133, merely extends to private banks the privilege that is extended to member banks. The Senater from Utah will remember that an amendment to the Clayton Act gave the Federal reserve banks the power to keep a clerk in any member bank to act as a director of two other banks which were not competitive, but it did not apply to private banking institutions. We are organizing these institutions to help out in the foreign trade, and it is a great handicap on private banks. Many of them can not invest because before doing so they would like to have something to say about the management of the bank that is engaged in foreign business. The bill passed the House, and I can not conceive that there can be any objection to it.

Mr. KING. I do not have the bill before me, so I can not express any opinion upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that House bill 8038 may go over.

Mr. McLEAN. I am willing that it shall go over, but the next one on the calendar, House bill 13138, I think ought to be acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. House bill 8038 will be passed over.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The bill (H. R. 13138) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended May 15, 1916, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended by the act of May 15, 1916, be further amended by inserting in the proviso at the end of the second clause of said section after the word "prohibit" the words "any private banker or," so that the proviso as amended shall read:

"And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prohibit any private banker or any officer, director, or employee of any member bank or class A director of a Federal reserve bank, who shall first procure the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, which board is hereby authorized, at its discretion, to grant, withhold, or revoke such consent, from being an officer, director, or employee of not more than two other banks, banking associations, or trust companies, whether organized under the laws of the United States or any State, if such other bank, banking association, or trust company is not in substantial competition with such banker or member bank.

"The consent of the Federal Reserve Board may be procured before the person applying therefor has been elected as a class A director of a Federal reserve bank or as a director of any member bank."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTORS.

The bill (S. 4076) to amend section 4404 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved July 2, 1918, providing that the supervising inspectors of the Steamboat-Inspection Service be included under the classified civil service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was very much in hopes that the measure might be acted upon favorably at this time. I simply wish to say that it places the supervising inspectors of the Steamboat-Inspection Service under the classified service. They are presidential appointees, it is true, but they have very technical work to do, and they ought to be men of training, men who have come up through the service.

The memorandum prepared by Gen. Uhler for the Secretary of Commerce states that they are practically all taken from the classified service. He urges that the bill be passed for several reasons. One is that if they are put in the classified service it would be an incentive to every man in the classified service to fit himself for this position that he could look forward to filling. I think that is very desirable.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KING. If I believed that the operation of the bill would effectuate the object which the Senator states, I would not object to it, but I have had a great deal to do with the operation of the Civil Service Commission; I have seen its operations, I have witnessed the methods employed in determining advancement, and I have reached the conclusion that the civil service as administered by our Government is a failure. It does not make for efficiency, it does not make for reform, it does not make for good administration. They have the most absurd, ridiculous, and inefficient method of determining whether men are efficient, and I do not think the Senator can appeal successfully to those who are familiar with the service in favor of the perpetuation of the system or its application to the matter under consideration here. I shall be glad to look into the measure a little further, but for the present I object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish the Senator would do so. The committee were ruled of course by a desire to benefit the service. We felt from the statements made by the Secretary of Commerce through Gen. Uhler it would be a benefit to the service. As it is now, these men are appointed of course by the President and can be taken from anywhere. I am glad to say that I am informed that they have been taken from the classified service, but there is nothing which requires it and there may be a change in administration, and it did not strike the committee that a change would be good for the service. I hope the Senator will examine the matter further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah still object?

Mr. KING. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

ROBBING OF BANK A FELONY.

The bill (S. 2903) to provide that robbery of a Federal reserve bank or member bank shall constitute a felony, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

REGULATION OF COLD STORAGE.

The bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I desired to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] a question with reference to this bill. I thought I had my papers here respecting the measure. I think the way the bill is reported it is all right and I do not think I have any objection to it. I will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the bill, and for that reason I must object, in the absence of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SMOOT. Then may I ask that it go over only temporarily?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only until the Senator from North Dakota returns to the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota has just entered the Chamber.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I take it that it will require some time to pass this bill. If it does not, I shall be very glad to have it disposed of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it might be disposed of quickly.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that it should go over temporarily until the Senator returned to the Chamber. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] objected because he wished to interrogate the Senator from North Dakota with reference to the bill. The Senator from California will now make his inquiries.

Mr. PHELAN. I have sent for a copy of the bill. My only objection is my lack of familiarity with it and that it involves matters affecting my State. I should like to read the bill before consenting to its consideration.

Mr. GRONNA. I take it that the Senator has had protests against the bill because it affects fresh fruits. The fact of the matter is that the Senate committee in framing the substitute bill struck out the provision affecting fresh fruits and fresh vegetables. So I can not see how the fruit packers of California can have any possible objection now, because it can not affect them.

Mr. PHELAN. In view of that fact, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the bill read, so that I can follow it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That this act may be cited as the "United States cold-storage act."

SEC. 2. That wherever used in this act (a) the term "person" means an individual, a partnership, a corporation, or two or more individuals having a joint or common interest;

(b) The term "commerce" means commerce among the several States or between any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia and any foreign nation, or between any Territory or the District of Columbia and any State, or between any Territory and any other, or between any Territory and the District of Columbia, or within any Territory or the District of Columbia, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation;

(c) The term "cold storage" means the storage or keeping of any article of food at or below the temperature of 45° above zero (Fahrenheit) in a cold-storage warehouse, but does not include chilling or precooling therein for not more than 30 days for manufacture, sale, or transportation;

(d) The term "cold-storage warehouse" means any place in which the temperature is artificially cooled to or artificially maintained at or below 45° above zero (Fahrenheit), but does not include a car, vessel, or other vehicle of transportation used as such, or a place used solely for chilling or precooling for manufacture, sale, or transportation, or a place used exclusively for storage of any article for the sole use of the occupant, owner, or maintainer thereof (1) for consumption by himself or his family or guests, or (2) in his business of serving meals, or (3) in connection with his retail business only, in which case this exception shall be limited to articles of food stored for not more than 30 days;

(e) The term "article of food" means fresh meat, including all fresh edible portions of food animals, fresh fish, fresh poultry drawn or undrawn, fresh game, eggs in shell or frozen, butter, oleomargarine, and butter substitutes, but does not include any such article not intended or designed for food purposes which is plainly and conspicuously marked in such manner as to show the fact in accordance with regulations under this act; and

(f) The term "mark" includes stamp, brand, tag, and label, and the term "marked" includes stamped, branded, tagged, and labeled. When construing or enforcing the provisions of this act or any regulation thereunder the act, omission, or failure of any person acting for or employed by any other person, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such other person as well as of the person acting for or employed by him.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person to ship, deliver for shipment, or sell, in commerce, any article of food that is or has been in cold storage, or to hold in cold storage in commerce any article of food, or, having received in commerce, to sell in the original, unbroken package any article of food that is or has been in cold storage, unless such article of food or the container thereof shall be plainly and conspicuously marked, in accordance with this act and the regulations thereunder, in such manner as to show (a) "cold storage," except that these words may be removed or omitted as the case may be in the event that before the expiration of 30 days following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage it is sold or delivered to the consumer thereof, (b) all the dates when put in and when taken out of cold storage, except that if the Secretary of Agriculture shall find it to be commercially impracticable to mark any article of food or the container thereof with the exact date, the day, but not the month or year, may be omitted, in which case the date when the article of food was first placed in cold storage shall for the purposes of this act be deemed the first day of the month, and (c) the names and locations of all the cold-storage warehouses in which it was stored, or suitable distinguishing designations thereof approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose. If any such article of food be mingled with any other article of food of the same kind placed in cold storage on a different date so that the identity of each is not separately maintained, the dates for the purposes of subdivision (b) of this section shall be those of the article of food so mingled which was first placed in cold storage. No person shall divide, or place in a container, or transfer to a different container, any article of food in commerce which is or has been in cold storage unless the portions of such article of food, or such container in which it is placed or to which it is transferred, shall be marked in accordance with this act.

SEC. 4. That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the proper and customary manner of handling any article of food is such that it is commercially impracticable to mark the same or the container thereof in accordance with this act, the person otherwise required under this act to have the same so marked shall furnish or display, as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, to the receiver of such article of food a written statement, or an invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document, which shall describe such article of food, shall correctly state the facts otherwise required by this act to be marked, in the manner prescribed in the regulations under this act, and shall be preserved and be subject to examination by an officer, employee, or agent duly authorized under this act for such reasonable length of time as the Secretary of Agriculture shall deem necessary for the purposes of this act; except that, in the case, under this section, of a sale at retail to the consumer, the facts required by subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 3 may be omitted unless otherwise requested by such consumer.

SEC. 5. That, except as otherwise permitted by this act, it shall be unlawful for any person (a) to alter, mutilate, destroy, obscure, obliterate, or remove any mark required by this act to be placed on any article of food or the container thereof, while it is in commerce or, having been transported in commerce, remains unloaded, unsold, or in the original, unbroken package, or (b) to alter, mutilate, destroy, obscure, or obliterate any statement, invoice, or document or portion thereof, required to be furnished or displayed, during the time the same is required to be preserved, under section 4 of this act.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any person to ship, deliver for shipment, or sell, in commerce, any article of food that is or has been in cold storage, or to hold in cold storage in commerce any article of food, or having received in commerce to sell in the original, unbroken package any article of food that is or has been in cold storage, after the expiration of 12 months following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage.

SEC. 7. That the provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, or 6 of this act shall not apply to any article of food shipped or sold or delivered for shipment to any foreign country, if in respect to the requirements of such section the article of food complies with the specifications and directions of the purchaser or consignee in such foreign country and be not in contravention of the laws of such country, but if said article of food be not actually exported this section shall not exempt such article of food from the operation of said sections.

SEC. 8. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of Agriculture or any officer, employee, or agent specifically authorized by him in writing for the purpose may, on any business day during the usual hours of business, enter any warehouse which receives, or from which is shipped or delivered, or any car, vessel, or other vehicle which transports, any article of food in commerce, and may inspect such warehouse or car, vessel, or other vehicle and the contents thereof, and any books, papers, letters, or documents relating thereto.

SEC. 9. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act and to provide information for the Congress, every warehouseman and every person transporting foodstuffs, as defined in section 2, subdivision (e), which is or shall have been in cold storage, in commerce in a car, vessel, or other vehicle shall keep such records and accounts and make such reports, in such manner or form, verified under oath or otherwise, and at such times, as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, as to the amounts, kinds, and ownership of any foodstuffs received, held, transported, or delivered by such warehouseman or other person, loans made by such warehouseman upon the security of such foodstuffs, charges made by such warehouseman for storage and other services rendered by him, and the size or capacity of his warehouse. Any information obtained by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act shall be available for the use of either House of Congress, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause such information as may be of public interest to be published from time to time. No person shall willfully (a) fail or refuse to make full and true entries or make any false entry in the accounts or records of his business required to be kept pursuant to this section, or (b) alter, mutilate, conceal, or destroy any such account or record, or (c) make any report required under this section which is false or fraudulent in any material particular, or (d) fail or refuse to make any report required under this section.

SEC. 10. That no person shall willfully hinder, obstruct, or resist the Secretary of Agriculture or any duly authorized officer, employee, or agent in the performance of his duties under this act.

SEC. 11. (a) That whenever in the case of any article of food being offered for importation the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any provision of this act is being violated with respect to such article of food, he shall give due notice and opportunity for hearing thereon to the owner or consignee, and certify such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon (1) refuse admission and delivery to the consignee of such article of food, or (2) deliver such article of food to the consignee pending examination, hearing, and decision in the matter on the execution of a penal bond to the amount of the full invoice value of such article of food, together with the duty thereon, if any, and to the effect that on refusal to return such article of food for any cause to the Secretary of the Treasury when demanded, for the purpose of excluding it from the country or for any other purpose, the consignee shall forfeit the full amount of the bond.

(b) If, after proceeding in accordance with subdivision (a) of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture is satisfied that any provision of this act is being violated with respect to such article of food, he shall certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon notify the owner or consignee and cause the sale or other disposition of such article of food refused admission and delivery or entered under bond, unless it is exported by the owner or consignee within three months from the date of such notice, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. All charges for storage, cartage, or labor on any such article of food which is refused admission or delivery or is entered upon bond shall be paid by the owner or consignee.

"(c) That nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt from compliance with all of the provisions hereof products which have been in cold storage or in a refrigerated vehicle or in any vehicle in the course of transportation into the United States or in cold storage or in storage prior thereto; and any such period of cold storage or of ordinary storage or of refrigeration or of transportation in any refrigerated or other vessel shall be included in the period of storage set forth in the previous sections hereof; and any importer of such articles of food shall be required to certify to any such period of prior storage or refrigeration or shipment and to mark the articles of food or containers thereof accordingly as required by the previous sections hereof.

"(c) Any and all eggs offered for importation after transportation or through transportation of more than three weeks in a refrigerated vessel or more than two weeks in a nonrefrigerated vessel must be indelibly stamped, as to each individual egg, with the name of the original point and the date of shipment, and any eggs not so marked shall not be admitted into this country and shall not be delivered to the consignee thereof. And the proceedings in reference thereto shall be as prescribed in section 16 hereof."

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to designate in writing specifically officers, employees, and agents of the Department of Agriculture to administer oaths for the purpose of this act. All such officers, employees, and agents are authorized and empowered to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit for the purposes of this act, or for use in prosecutions or proceedings thereunder. Any such oath, affirmation, or affidavit, authenticated by the official seal of the Department of Agriculture, shall, when offered for use in any proceeding under this act or in any court of the United States, have like force and effect as if administered or taken by or before the clerk of such court, without further proof of the identity or authority of such officer, employee, or agent. No such officer, employee, or agent shall demand or accept any fee or compensation whatsoever for administering or taking any oath, affirmation, or affidavit under the authority conferred by this act.

SEC. 13. That any person who violates any provision of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, or 12 of this act shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both. After judgment of any court with respect to any violation of this act the Secretary of Agriculture may give notice thereof by publication in such manner as he by regulation may prescribe. A person shall not be prosecuted for any violation of sections 3, 4, or 6, resulting from the act, omission, or failure of any person not acting for or employed by him, prior to the time when the article of food involved came into his possession or control, if he shall show that such violation was not knowingly committed by him and also shall establish a written guaranty signed by the person, who shall be a resident of the United States, from whom he obtained the possession or control of such article of food, to the effect that such article of food had not been in cold storage or that, if it had been in cold storage and if apparently marked or represented in accordance with sections 3 or 4 of this act, the marks or representation were true. Said guaranty shall contain the address of the person required to sign it and such person shall be amenable to the prosecution, fine, penalty, or imprisonment which would otherwise attach to the person to whom he delivered the possession or control of the article of food.

SEC. 14. That for the enforcement of this act the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until expended, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Secretary of Agriculture (a) is authorized to prescribe and promulgate such regulations as may be necessary; (b) may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and (c) shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

SEC. 15. That no provision of this act shall be deemed to repeal or limit the operation of any provision of any other act of Congress, unless directly in conflict therewith.

SEC. 16. That if any provision of this act or the application of such provision to certain circumstances be held unconstitutional, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to circumstances other than those as to which it is held unconstitutional shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 17. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage; but no penalty, fine, forfeiture, or imprisonment shall be enforced for any violation occurring within 90 days after its passage.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to prevent hoarding and deterioration of, and deception with respect to cold-storage foods; to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes."

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if the effect of section 4 would not be to place under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture practically all of the transportation business in food products of the United States and permit him to impose restrictions and limitations upon the vendor and upon those who prepare food products that might be so onerous and so burdensome as to practically destroy their business?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I can only say that I do not understand that there is any such drastic authority given to the Secretary of Agriculture by this proposed legislation. If there were, I myself should certainly be opposed to the bill. I will say to the Senator from Utah that this bill has been indorsed by all the great organizations of the country, the cold-storage houses, the dairy interests, and the poultry associations; in fact, I do not know of any business which is opposed to the provisions of the bill. It has been given very careful attention. We had hearings on the bill for many days, and there appeared before the committee a great number of witnesses who are deeply interested in the legislation. They are not only not opposed to the bill but they heartily approve it, I will say to the Senator, and they believe it is absolutely necessary that the bill shall be passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not know that this bill was on the calendar; I have not had an opportunity to read it, and I do not know what its provisions are and how far it goes; but it seems to me that the placing under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture practically the control of all the products that are shipped—at any rate, those which have been in cold storage—and authorizing him to determine how they should be marked, the character of containers, and so forth, is a very great power. That there should be some legislation dealing with articles held in cold storage, I think all will admit; but the States can deal with the subject in a comprehensive manner. Indeed, some States have passed laws for the protection of the public, and all will do so as fast as their attention is challenged to the same. There is a field which possibly can not be reached by the States, which is within the zone of interstate commerce. If this bill merely provides for the control of matters clearly within the field of interstate commerce and provides reasonable and just regulations, then no one can be heard to object. Unfortunately, there are too many efforts now being made to control the States and the commerce activities of the States and the people within the States under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. Power is being asserted by the Federal Government under this clause that will, if unchecked, place practically all the business of the country and all the domestic affairs of the people under the control and jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr.GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, I will enumerate the associations which have had their representatives before the committee and which have indorsed the bill. I read from pages 4 and 5 of the report of the committee, as follows:

It also meets with the approval of the American Association of Refrigeration; the joint committee representing cold-storage warehousemen and affiliated industries, and represented in that committee are the following organizations: The American Association of Refrigeration; the cold-storage subdivision of the American Warehousemen's Association; the New York State Cold Storage Association; the United States Fisheries Association; the National Poultry, Butter, and Egg Association; the International Apple Shippers' Association; the National League of Commission Merchants; the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association; and the New York Mercantile Exchange. It also meets with the approval of the Merchants' Rrefrigerating Co.

I can hardly conceive, Mr. President, that this bill can be objectionable, in view of its indorsement by all these associations that are vitally interested in this kind of legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if most of the duties proposed to be imposed upon the Secretary of Agriculture by the bill are not rather to enable him to mitigate the hardships of the drastic provisions of the bill with reference to cold storage?

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad the Senator from North Carolina has made that observation. That is exactly my understanding, and I am sorry that I was not able to answer the question of the Senator from Utah so well as the Senator from North Carolina has done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will note that in the past there has been great apprehension on the part of the agricultural interests of the country in reference to the passage of legislation which might injuriously affect that industry, but I understand that section 4 of the pending bill meets with their approval, and that there is nothing that they can see in the bill which is going to militate against the interest of any agriculturalist in the country.

Mr. GRONNA. I so understand the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. The strongest objection to such legislation in the past came from that source, but in reading the remainder of the bill I find that it conforms to every requirement of which I can think to protect the public and also not to interfere unduly with the free flow of the products of the farm that may become subject to the terms of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. That is exactly the purpose which the committee had in mind. I think I shall ask that the report on the bill proposed by the committee be read. Considerable time has been given to the writing of the report. It gives an explanation of the bill and makes a comparison between the House bill and the Senate bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the reading of the report.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have twice read this bill. I shall not interpose any objection to its enactment, although I am not at all in accord with the idea that it is going to prove otherwise than burdensome upon the consumer.

This is one of the regulatory acts to which we are resorting through public pressure for the purpose of relieving the consumer. We are adding to the penal statutes of the United States by a system of very specific regulations with regard to food of a certain character. The branding and the labeling of the food, its inspection, and various other stages through which it passes before reaching the ultimate consumer will all be attended with an added expense, not the least of which will be another small army of Federal officials whose business it will be to enforce the provisions of the law.

The sum of $20,000 is appropriated as a starter for this new bureau, and, of course, that will be followed by constantly increasing appropriations, a constantly augmenting number of officials, and constantly increasing rules and regulations prepared by the department for the effective administration of the law.

I hope that it will prove beneficial, but my impression is that before any person will be able to get anything from cold storage, however much he may need it, he will be required to go through more performances and more services than were required for initiation into the old organization known as the "Thousand and One."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are doubtless evils in connection with cold-storage plants that should be dealt with. Individuals or corporations dealing in foodstuffs should be held to the highest standard of conduct. The health and, indeed, the lives of the people may be affected by their products and proper legislation should be enacted to fully protect the people.

But I am somewhat suspicious of Federal control and the constant efforts of Federal officials to interfere with the States and the local affairs of the communities therein. We are constantly appealed to for legislation to take over the control or suspension of the business of individuals and to authorize bureaus and Federal agencies to exercise authority which should be exercised by State officials. This bill, I perceive, provides pains and penalties and Federal machinery and a Federal appropriation. It creates new offices and will call for more Federal officials. It may be necessary and may serve some useful purpose.

We are enacting so many measures dealing with the police functions and duties of the States that we will soon drive the States out of the field which they should occupy and which they would be willing to occupy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to page 17, line 5. I desire to suggest an amendment to the language which is to be found on lines 5 and 6. Let me say at the outset that I am in hearty sympathy with the proposed legislation; I regard the bill as being a most excellent one and in most excellent form; but on page 17, commencing in line 2, we find this language:

Except that these words—

That is, the words "cold storage"—

may be removed or omitted, as the case may be, in the event that before the expiration of 30 days following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage it is sold or delivered to the consumer thereof.

A question arises at that point. An article placed in cold storage is not deemed to fall under the provisions of this bill until it has been in cold storage for 30 days. If it is withdrawn from cold storage before the 30 days have expired and is delivered to the consumer within that time, as I read the bill, it need not be labeled "cold storage," and therefore such an act would not be in violation of the law.

The trouble with that situation is this: Cold-storage concerns are warehouse concerns; they do a warehouse business, a storage business; they do not own the foods which are placed in cold storage; other people own those articles. The owner of the food which is placed in cold storage may withdraw it from cold storage at any time. Under this provision if the owner withdraws food, we will say, after it has been in cold storage for 28 days and then does not sell it or deliver it to the consumer for 5, 6, or 7 days, the cold-storage man will be responsible for the breaking of the law, although he would have no control whatsoever of the food after it had passed out of his cold-storage warehouse.

An amendment to this phrase was suggested to the Committee on Agriculture. I was not present at the last meeting of the committee which reported the bill; and I desire now to suggest an amendment which will make the provision perfectly clear.

Mr. GRONNA. I recollect very distinctly that Mr. Horne, I think it was, of New York, suggested that the word "sale," as I recall, should be added.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The proposed amendment was to that effect. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the words "sold or delivered to the consumer thereof" and inserting the words "removed in order to be sold," so as to read: "When such article of food was first placed in cold storage it is removed in order to be sold." That would relieve the cold-storage concern of the responsibility for the delivery of the goods to the consumer after the goods shall have left his cold-storage warehouse.

Mr. GRONNA. I fully realize that the Senator's suggestion is worthy of consideration, and I have no objection to agreeing to his amendment and letting it go to conference, where the matter may be further considered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; that will be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that the amendment be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 17, in line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "sold or delivered to the consumer thereof," and insert in lieu thereof the words "removed in order to be sold," so as to read:

Before the expiration of 30 days following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage it is removed in order to be sold.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to read this measure. I am in entire sympathy with it. I have an amendment on my desk in my office that I wanted to offer to the bill before it went through finally, but I do not want to object to its passage at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. FERNALD. I was not expecting it to come up this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed. A motion to reconsider the votes by which it was passed is in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent——

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. GRONNA. Has the Senator his amendment here?

Mr. FERNALD. I have not it with me, and I am not disposed to object.

Mr. GRONNA. It can be worked out in conference, I think. There are a great many changes from the original text of the bill, and I am very anxious that it shall go through to-day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a complete substitution of the House bill. The whole matter is in conference.

Mr. FERNALD. I withdraw any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the bill surely is passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2903) to provide that robbery of a Federal reserve bank or member bank shall constitute a felony, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] desires to be heard upon this bill, and in his absence I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 12266) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], who reported the bill, desires that it shall go over; and I also understand that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], if here, would object to its present consideration. I therefore ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROPOSED GRECIAN TERRITORY.

The resolution (S. Res. 324) declaring it the sense of the Senate that northern Epirus, the 12 islands of the Ægean, and the western coast of Asia Minor should be awarded to Greece, etc., was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that northern Epirus (including Corytza), the 12 islands of the Ægean, and the western coast of Asia Minor, where a strong Greek population predominates, should be awarded by the peace conference to Greece and become incorporated in the Kingdom of Greece.

JEFFERSON NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 3210) for the consolidation of lands within the Jefferson National Forest was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 10, after the word "acres," to insert "of Government land or timber," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the exterior boundaries of the Jefferson National Forest if, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of such national forest land or timber within the national forests of the State of Montana as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and acceptable to the owner as fair compensation, considering any reservations which either the grantor or the Government may make of timber, minerals, or easements. Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the Jefferson National Forest.

SEC. 2. That not more than 10,000 acres of Government land or timber may be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for exchange under the provisions of this act within the Jefferson National Forest during any one year, and the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress annually the quantities of such land exchanges consummated and the name of the parties thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. L. CREDILLE, MAYOR, ETC.

The bill (S. 3244) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to R. L. Credille, mayor of the village of Bonita, La., in trust, for certain purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon payment to the United States of $1.25 per acre, the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to issue patent to R. L. Credille, mayor of the village of Bonita, La., for the south half of the southwest quarter, section 5, township 22 north, range 8 east, Louisiana meridian, situated in Morehouse Parish, La., in trust for the use and benefit of the persons, estates, firms, or corporations now claiming said lands or parts thereof under or by virtue of titles derived from or through the State of Louisiana or its grantee, L. S. Neighbours, of which said lands the present claimants and their grantors have had the actual possession as owners by virtue of titles derived from said State and its grantee for more than 30 years: Provided, That application for the purchase of the said described tract of land under this authorization shall be filed at the United States land office at Baton Rouge, La., within 60 days from the passage and approval of this act.

The true intent of this act is hereby declared to be to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said lands or parts thereof under the laws of Louisiana, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of said interest, title, and estate of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN IDAHO.

The bill (H. R. 12626) for the relief of certain persons to whom, or their predecessors, patents were issued to public lands along the Snake River in the State of Idaho under an erroneous survey made in 1883 was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, before the numerals "$1.25," to strike out "not less than," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his discretion, is authorized to sell for cash, for $1.25 per acre, any unsurveyed public land which may, on resurvey, be found to exist in townships 9 south of range 14 east, 9 south of range 15 east, 9 south of range 16 east, and 9 south of range 17 east of the Boise meridian along Snake River, in the State of Idaho, to those persons who in good faith, by themselves and their predecessors in interest have heretofore acquired, occupied, and improved under the public land laws in accordance with a Government survey made in 1883, and said commissioner may, in like manner, on principles of equity, adjust, settle, and confirm by patent the title to any lands in said townships heretofore claimed, occupied, and improved under descriptions which on resurvey are found to be erroneous; the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make any rules and regulations necessary to carry out and effect the purpose of this act, and any person claiming the benefits hereof shall make the required payments and perform such other acts as may be required within the time fixed in the regulations, otherwise any right or advantage claimed under this act shall be forfeited.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FEDERAL BUILDING AND SITE, GASTONIA, N. C.

The bill (S. 4332) to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to exchange and convey to the Citizens' National Bank, of Gastonia, N. C., by the usual quitclaim deed, the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for the site at the northwest corner of South Street and West Franklin Street, in said city, offered by said bank, and in addition to said land said bank shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury $175,000 to cover the cost of the erection of a stone-faced public building thereon adequate and suitable for the needs of the United States in such city. The present Federal building and site to remain in the custody and control of the United States until the completion of the proposed new building.

That upon the said new site, when acquired as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, approaches, etc., for the accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices in said city, at a limit of cost, exclusive of the site, of not exceeding $175,000, which is hereby appropriated. Said amount being hereby authorized and made available from the moneys to be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury by said Citizens' National Bank, of Gastonia, N. C., as hereinbefore mentioned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS AT WATERTOWN, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 13576) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to the Postmaster General without charge therefor a certain building or buildings now located at Watertown, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 13416 making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT FOR CONVERSION OF MONEYS.

The bill (H. R. 10072) to provide for the punishment of officers of United States courts wrongfully converting moneys coming into their possession and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Commitee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not feel like objecting to the consideration of this bill. It comes from a committee of which I am a member, and all of the members of the committee except myself are in favor of it. I am, however, opposed to the bill, and shall vote against it, but I shall not object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 6, after the word "shall," to insert "after demand by the party entitled thereto"; and on line 8, before the word "convert," to insert the words "who shall," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any United States marshal, clerk, receiver, referee, trustee, or other officer of a United States court, or any deputy, assistant, or employee of any such marshal, clerk, receiver, referee, trustee, or other officer who shall, after demand by the party entitled thereto, unlawfully retain or who shall convert to his own use or to the use of another any moneys received for or on account of costs or advance deposits to cover fees, expenses, or costs, deposits for fees or expenses in bankruptcy cases, composition funds or money of bankrupt estates, fees in naturalization matters, or any other money whatever which has come into his hands by virtue of his official relation or by the facts of his official position or employment shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement and shall, where the offense is not otherwise punishable by some statute of the United States, be fined not more than double the value of the money thus retained or converted or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both; and it shall not be a defense in such case that the accused person had an interest, contingent or otherwise, in some part of such moneys or of the fund from which they were retained or converted.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2279) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Humboldt National Forest was announced as next in order.

Mr. NUGENT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN WYOMING.

The bill (H. R. 13157) authorizing the issuance of patent to Johnson County, Wyo., of lands for poor-farm purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4373) to amend sections 207 and 210 of the transportation act, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read. I should like to ask some member of the committee the purpose of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no member of the committee here.

Mr. KING. Then I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over for the present.

LANDS IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 3372) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to Jennie Dunphy Meyer for certain lands in the State of Nevada was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "of the," to strike out "southwest" and insert "northwest"; and on page 2, line 4, after the word "Nevada," to insert: "Provided, That proper application for the purchase of these lands be filed hereunder in the district land office within six months from the passage of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to Jennie Dunphy Meyer for the following-described lands: The north half of the northeast quarter and the south half of the northwest quarter of section 10, township 33 north, range 47 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, in the county of Lander, State of Nevada, upon the payment in advance therefor to the Secretary of the Interior for the Government of the United States of the full sum of $2.50 per acre for such lands, which patent shall confirm the conveyance of such lands to the said Jennie Dunphy Meyer by the State of Nevada: Provided, That proper application for the purchase of these lands be filed hereunder in the district land office within six months from the passage of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 3992) authorizing the exchange of certain lands in the State of Nevada was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 3, after line 7, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That as a consideration for the issue of said patent R. L. Douglass will construct a substantial fence around the tract of land conveyed to him under the provisions of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to R. L. Douglass, of Fallon, Nev., for a certain tract of land now a part of the public domain, lying below the Carson Lake meander in the unsurveyed portion of section 19, township 17 north, range 29 east, Mount Diablo meridian, in the State of Nevada, more fully described as follows: Beginning at the meander corner south of section corner common to sections 12 and 13, township 17 north, range 28 east, and sections 18 and 19, township 17 north, range 29 east, Mount Diablo meridian; thence south 9.6 chains; thence north 89° 21′ east 21.9 chains; thence north 20.56 chains; thence north 73° 30′ west eighty-one one-hundredths chain along Carson Lake meander; thence south 61° 30′ west 24 chains to the point of beginning, containing 33.74 acres, more or less, on the express condition, however, that said R. L. Douglass shall first execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a warranty deed satisfactory to such Secretary conveying to the Government of the United States, free of all encumbrance, a certain tract of land composed of portions of lots 2, 3, and 4 of section 19, township 17 north, range 29 east, Mount Diablo meridian, in the State of Nevada, more fully described as follows: Beginning at the meander corner of the section line common to sections 18 and 19, township 17 north, range 29 east, Mount Diablo meridian, running thence along the north boundary of section 19, south 89° 21′ west 53.82 chains; thence south 1.34 chains to a point in the meander line of Carson Lake; thence south 73° 30′ east 36.69 chains along Carson Lake meander; thence north 36° 30′ east 22.40 chains to the point of beginning, containing 33.74 acres, more or less, which shall thereupon become a part of the public domain.

SEC. 2. That as a consideration for the issue of said patent, R. L. Douglass will construct a substantial fence around the tract of land conveyed to him under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE PENAL LAWS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. GRONNA]. Some time ago I asked for the consideration of House bill 7629, and the Senator from North Dakota objected to its consideration. It merely adds to the existing statute in regard to transmission through the mails of certain articles the words "motion-picture film." The Senator later advised me that he had no objection. I ask that we may return to that bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have made an investigation, and I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, at the end of line 1, to insert "to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof"; and on line 5, after the word "through," to strike out "any" and insert "a," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 245 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 245. Whoever shall bring or cause to be brought into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, or shall therein knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier, for carriage from one State, Territory, or District of the United States or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, through a foreign country, to any place in or subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, any obscene, lewd, or lascivious, or any filthy book, pamphlet, picture, motion-picture film, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character, or any drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for preventing conception, or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use; or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made; or whoever shall knowingly take or cause to be taken from such express company or other common carrier any matter or thing the depositing of which for carriage is herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

The bill (H. R. 8440) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Calif., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT MYRTLE POINT, OREG.

The bill (H. R. 10285) to authorize the purchase by the city of Myrtle Point, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to the city of Myrtle Point, Oreg., for the following described lands, being a part of the lands revested in the United States by the act of Congress enacted June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., p. 218), to wit: The south half of the southeast quarter of section 11, and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 13, all in township 29 south, range 12 west, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon; on condition that the said city first shall pay to the United States, when said lands are subject to disposition under said act of revestment, the sum of $2.50 per acre for all of said lands and the appraised price of the timber on all such lands as may be classified as timberlands: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 13389) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of at public sale certain isolated and fractional tracts of lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, be, and the same are hereby, extended to class 3 of the lands formerly embraced by what are known as the Oregon & California Railroad grants, title to which was revested in the United States under the provisions of the act approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 218): Provided, That no sales hereunder shall be made for less than $2.50 per acre, and the appraised value of the timber on the land, nor until such lands shall have been subject to homestead entry for a period of two years: Provided further, That the proceeds of such sales shall be applied in the manner prescribed in said act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 218).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD OPERATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I notice that Senate bill 4373, to amend sections 207 and 210 of the transportation act, 1920, was passed over, I presume on account of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that I asked for some information respecting the measure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know just why the chairman of the committee is not present. As to this particular piece of legislation, it proposes to extend the time of the loan of the present revolving fund of $300,000,000 which was provided for in the act returning the railroads to their private owners. The $300 000,000, which was to be used as a revolving fund to aid railroads, both to meet their maturing obligations and also to provide themselves a basis of credit for increasing their motive power and rolling stock, was to terminate in five years. The committee had a hearing on the subject, and they all agreed that under section 210, which provided the five-year limitation, the railroads could not function properly unless the paper, or whatever form the credit extension took, could be extended to 15 years, because the railroads could not get themselves rehabilitated and out of their earnings pay the maturing paper within five years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for an inquiry, as I understand, then, the bill merely changes the maturing of the obligation from 5 to 15 years?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It not only does that, but it gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the discretionary power as to whether it shall use a certain percentage of this money to meet the obligations due the Government, setting aside so much to meet the claims, which are now being adjudicated; and also it provides that they shall use their discretion as to whether or not a per cent of it shall be set aside to meet the maturing obligations of the roads. The roads have certain outstanding obligations, and the credit of the roads depends upon whether their obligations are met promptly or not. The investors in railroad securities are very anxious that a certain amount of this money shall be used to meet the maturing obligations of the roads, while representatives of the roads were insisting that the necessary per cent of it should be used for new equipment in motive power and in rolling stock.

I think there is a shortage of something like 150,000 box cars, and something like three or four thousand engines are necessary to meet the absolutely normal requirements of the expanded business.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator if, after a due hearing, this was a unanimous report?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It was a unanimous report.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I have sent for the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I understand that this proposed legislation was left in his charge when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was called from the city.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not know in whose charge the chairman left it, but I know the bill was discussed and hearings were had, and the committee reached the conclusion that the extension to 15 years would not involve any further expense on the part of the Government and might enable us to meet the existing conditions without making an added appropriation of some half billion dollars to meet the condition.

Mr. SMOOT. This morning the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] discussed this bill with me somewhat, and on account of some ruling which has been made by the Department of Justice, as I understand it, the Senator from Minnesota has telegraphed to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. Of course, up to the present time I do not think he has had time to get an answer. No one would object to the extension to 15 years, but for the reason I have stated, and knowing that there is this question involved in the bill, I ask the Senator that it may go over until the Senator from Minnesota can explain it in detail and we can find out whether he wants the bill passed in its present form.

I am in full, hearty sympathy with the proposed legislation, and I simply call the Senator's attention to what took place this morning in relation to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should think it would be very well to let it go over, but for a moment I just want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the condition of our transportation is so affecting the commerce and the production of the country, plus the attempt to deflate the currency at this time, forcing people to hold their products at home, and then not giving them any credit for holding it, that we are being burned up at both ends, and the outlook is not very hopeful.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that legislation of this character will pass at the very earliest date possible, but I am quite sure, from the ruling which has been made, that the bill will have to be amended in some particulars. That is the reason why I have asked that it may go over.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is true that the Treasury Department has made a ruling. There were some unfortunate words in the legislation we passed turning the railroads back. There was a construction which the Treasury Department placed upon certain language that made it impossible for the roads to function as those who passed the bill thought it was necessary for them to function.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CESSION BY CALIFORNIA OF LANDS FOR NATIONAL PARKS.

The bill (H. R. 12044) to accept the cession by the State of California of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Yosemite National Park, Sequoia National Park, and General Grant National Park, respectively, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 4, line 25, after the word "therein," to strike out the word "from" and insert in lieu thereof the word "for," so as to make the clause read:

Or for the protection of the property therein for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 17, after the word "process," to strike out the word "by" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of," so as to make the clause read:

Without process of any person taken in the act of violating the law, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RIGHTS OF WAY FOR PUBLIC ROADS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the shipping bill.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator to withhold that motion. There are two bills which do not appear on the printed calendar, but which were unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands this morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to considering them up to 2 o'clock.

The bill (H. R. 9825) authorizing certain railroad companies, or their successors in interest, to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of their rights of way was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all railroad companies to which grants for rights of way through the public lands have been made by Congress, or their successors in interest or assigns, are hereby authorized to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of such right of way to be used as a public highway or street: Provided, That no such conveyance shall have the effect to diminish the right of way of such railroad company to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main track of the railroad as now established and maintained.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 1695) validating certain homestead entries was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to January 1, 1916, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, and all rights to enter land under said laws, based on settlement made thereon in good faith before said date, and while the land was unsurveyed, by persons who, before making such enlarged homestead entry, had acquired title to land under the homestead laws, and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry, or such settlement, be, and the same are hereby, validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land: Provided, That no settlement claim shall be validated hereby where adverse claim for the land has been initiated before the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That no homestead entry heretofore made under the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of the Colorado Cooperative Colony, to permit homestead entries in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1900, shall be canceled for the reason that the former entry made by the entryman was commuted under the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to the public lands of the United States," approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., p. 237). And all entries heretofore canceled on the ground that an entryman who commuted under the provisions of said act of June 15, 1880, is not entitled to the benefits of the act of June 5, 1900, shall be reinstated upon a showing by the entryman or his heirs, within one year from the approval of this act, that there were no valid grounds for the cancellation of such entries except that a former entry was perfected under the act of June 15, 1880, in all cases where valid adverse rights have not attached to the lands covered by such second entries since the date of their cancellation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. NUGENT. I object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Harding	Moses	Smith, Md.
Capper	Harris	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Harrison	New	Smoot
Comer	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Townsend
Edge	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Phipps	Underwood
Fernald	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	McCumber	Ransdell
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The roll of absentees will be called.

The names of the absent Senators were called and Mr. FRANCE, Mr. LODGE, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. McNARY, Mr. NELSON, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to their names when called.

Mr. DIAL, Mr. COLT, Mr. STERLING, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. KNOX, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. HALE, Mr. McCORMICK, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. GLASS, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. REED, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WATSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has moved that the Senate proceed with the consideration of what is known as the shipping bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice at this time that to-morrow morning, after the close of routine morning business, I shall move the Senate to take up Calendar No. 528, the bill (H. R. 12530) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war. This is an omnibus pension bill and has taken out of all the previous omnibus pension bills just those names that were not taken care of by the Fuller pension bill. I hope to be able to dispose of it before 2 o'clock, and if not I shall desire to go on with the consideration of the bill until it is disposed of.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from Washington kindly yield to me to call up the conference report on House bill 12272, the Agriculture appropriation bill? I understand there is no objection to it at all. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] wishes to make a short statement, and after that there will be no discussion whatever, as I understand it, and the report will be disposed of. I should like to have it go back to conference as soon as possible, because I may have to go away this week and I am anxious to have it disposed of as early as possible.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course I am very anxious to get along with the merchant marine bill, which is a very important measure and is likely to take considerable time in conference. So it ought to be put through as soon as possible. I desire to accommodate the Senator from North Dakota as much as I possibly can. I understand the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] desires to take some little time in the discussion of some matter connected with the conference report, and that he expects to take the time on the conference report or on the shipping bill. So it would make no difference as far as time is concerned. If that is the case, of course, I feel that I would not be losing any time by consenting to the shipping bill being temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask a question of the Senator from North Dakota before unanimous consent is given? Is there some provision in the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill with reference to increasing rates which are charged upon the leasing lands of the West?

Mr. GRONNA. There is no provision increasing the rates, but there is a provision for an appropriation of $25,000 to make an investigation as to the reasonableness of the charges that are made.

Mr. BORAH. That is involved in this conference report?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; it was disagreed to by the conferees of the two Houses, and I intend to ask that the Senate further insist on its amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Then there is nothing in the report affecting the leasing charges in the way of increasing them?

Mr. GRONNA. No; there is not. The only provision is, as I told the Senator, an appropriation to make an investigation. Of course the Senate expects that the House will recede; at least we hope that they will recede.

Mr. BORAH. There is a misunderstanding somewhere, but I think the Senator from North Dakota knows what is in the bill, and I take his word for it.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that in the case of western men it might affect the grazing rate. The House put in a provision for an appropriation of $25,000, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an investigation of the rates. The Senate committee struck out that provision and we were unable to agree, and we reported the disagreement. All I intend to do is to insist that the Senate shall further insist upon its amendment.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senate should want to recede, then would be the time for Senators from the West to speak?

Mr. GRONNA. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. I shall speak when that time comes.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill be laid before the Senate, and that the shipping bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

[Mr. HARRISON addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for nearly two hours he yielded the floor for the day.]

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

During the delivery of Mr. HARRISON's speech,

Mr. JONES of Washington. If I may interrupt the Senator from Mississippi just a moment, I will say to him that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has to take a train at 4 o'clock. He has an amendment which he would like to propose to one section of the shipping bill, which I think will take probably but a minute or two. I thought if the Senator from Mississippi would yield for him to do that, then I would consent that the shipping bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Washington for that purpose.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey has an amendment to section 17 of the shipping bill with relation to a dock proposition. I think the amendment is very fair and very meritorious and should be adopted.

Mr. EDGE. I offer an amendment to section 17 of the bill under consideration, which I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, in section 17, page 19, line 11, after the numerals "1918," it is proposed to insert the following:

The board shall pay out of its revenues to the proper officer of the city of Hoboken, in the State of New Jersey, a sum equivalent to the amount which the board finds to have been levied and assessed but uncollected by such city on account of taxes for the calendar years 1918 and 1919 on the properties affected by this section. The board shall, for the calendar year 1920 and annually thereafter, pay out of its revenues to such officer a sum equivalent to the amount which in the opinion of the board would have been payable for such year to such city, on account of taxes on the properties affected by this section if they had remained under private ownership, but such amount shall not for 1920, or for any subsequent year, be less than the average annual amount of such taxes levied and assessed against such properties for the years 1916–1920, both inclusive.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation of the amendment. It relates to the so-called Hoboken Docks, which were taken over by the Government, and which were formerly owned by the North German-Lloyd and Hamburg-American lines. Under the terms of the shipping bill, the jurisdiction of those docks will pass to the Shipping Board, the War Department now having jurisdiction. Under an arrangement proposed by the War Department they were to pay the average amount of taxes heretofore assessed by the city of Hoboken. When the jurisdiction over the docks is transferred to the Shipping Board it is desired that the bill contain a provision by which a like arrangement can be made with them.

I might say, in further explanation, that the docks referred to, of course, furnish quite a different proposition from that involved in the usual case of Government occupied property. Before the war they represented one-sixth of the entire tax income of the city of Hoboken. When the Government are administering the docks they are not occupying them as they ordinarily occupy property, without gain, but they are occupying them and leasing privileges and leasing the docks to various private interests and are receiving an income. Of course, there can be no question as to the city being entitled to its regular average annual income in lieu of taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not care to act on the entire committee amendment at this time. I do not now care to take the time to do that. I will ask that the bill may be laid aside, in order that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. HARRISON's speech for the day,

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the distribution, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have one or two amendments which I desire to offer at this time.

At the close of section 4, on page 7, I desire to present the following proviso that will make plain what we really did not intend to cover by that section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Insert at the end of section 4, page 7, the following proviso:

Provided, That all vessels in the military and naval service of the United States, including the vessels assigned to river and harbor work, inland waterways, or vessels for such needs in the course of construction or under contract by the War Department, shall be exempt from the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 19, section 17, I offer the following amendments to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In section 17, page 19, line 2, after the word "over," insert the words "after the expiration of one year from the enactment of this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 13, page 19, after the word "need," insert the words "permit or."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Also, on page 19, line 15, after the word "department," insert "for their needs."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, line 17, strike out the words "disposed of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sold."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

DEATH OF HON. LEVI P. MORTON.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolutions (S. Res. 365) as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound regret of the death of Hon. Levi P. Morton, former Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of this distinguished man, whose long life was filled with useful service to the Nation, to his State, and to his fellow men, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 18, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 17, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in Heaven, for the spirit of patriotism which moved the Congress of the United States of America to provide ways and means for the construction of the amphitheater, the marble shrine, in beautiful Arlington, which was dedicated by imposing ceremonies under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic, on Saturday last, in memory of our sacred dead who met the supreme sacrifice defending the land they loved, a Government conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Grant, O God, that it may stand for ages as a faithful sentinel guarding the bivouac of the dead whose spirits now rest on fame's eternal camping ground. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 15, and Sunday, May 16, 1920, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war declared to exist April 6, 1917, between the Imperial German Government and the United States, permitting on conditions the resumption of reciprocal trade with Germany, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that May 15 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9944. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept on behalf of the United States the donation by Sedgwick Post, No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of its memorial hall property in Bedford, Taylor County, Iowa, for Federal building purposes; and

H. R. 11927. An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13555. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. SMALL, for three weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWNE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. On what subject, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. It is principally to insert in the RECORD a speech that was made by a Republican some three or four years ago.

Mr. MONDELL. That is rather indefinite, Mr. Speaker. I think that we would hardly be justified in acceding to the gentleman's request on such an indefinite description.

Mr. BLANTON. It was to insert a Republican speech.

Mr. CANNON. There is once in a while a fool Republican. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. But that is very rare. [Laughter.]

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Eagle	Kendall	Reed, N. Y.
Aswell	Edmonds	Kennedy, Iowa	Reed, W. Va.

Drewry	Kelly, Pa.	Reber

The SPEAKER. On this vote 292 Members have answered present, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11960, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to arrange with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if possible, for time in opposition to the conference report.

Mr. PORTER. How much time does the gentleman from Washington desire?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This matter has not been before the House except for a few minutes on Saturday, and it is not well understood by the House, and as chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization I would like to have at least 10 minutes.

Mr. PORTER. I have no objection. First I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, my objection to the conference report is not identical with that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL]. The gentleman from New York is objecting because of the stringency of the passport regulations which are imposed in the case of foreigners coming to the United States. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection as to how strong you make those regulations in guaranteeing the exclusion of undesirables. [Applause.] My objection to this bill——

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there for a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. Wait until I have finished this sentence. My chief objection to the report is because it imposes restrictions on American citizens.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIEGEL. When I spoke on Saturday on the floor of the House I called attention to the fact specifically that no one could get out of the country without a passport, contrary to what the country has had in all its history heretofore.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the gentleman to that extent. Gentlemen of the House, section 5 of the amendment of the Senate No. 15 provides as follows:

SEC. 5. From and after the passage of this act every citizen or person, other than a seaman, owning allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States and departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof for any foreign country, except the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, St. Pierre, and Miquelon, Panama, the Bermudas, the Bahamas, Mexico, and Cuba, or departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof by way of any of said countries for any other country, shall be required to bear a valid passport.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am opposed to adopting in peace times legislation which says to our citizens that they may not leave the boundaries of the United States to travel in a foreign land unless they possess passports.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Are we not doing the citizens of the United States a favor because they are required to have a passport when they get to the foreign country?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman that few foreign countries require in peace times the possession of a passport. If that were the case, there would be no reason for exempting Canada, Mexico, and Cuba, as the provision in this bill does exempt them.

The whole secret of the proposition is this: When this bill was before the House originally I offered an amendment on the floor providing for raising the passport fees from $1 to $5, but leaving the requirements of the law as they were before the war. I did that because I believed that the cost of administration in maintaining our foreign service, the expenses of maintaining the machinery for issuing passports, and their visés, justified the United States in charging $5, and that that amount of money would produce a million or a million and a half dollars revenue annually, but I was no more willing then than I am now to make it unlawful for a citizen to travel abroad without a passport.

Gentlemen of the committee, or the majority members of the committee, raised a point of order, and my amendment went out on the point of order. But, lo and behold, when this measure reached the Senate, in their zeal to raise revenue, in their anxiety to bring money into the Treasury, the Senate was induced by them to adopt an amendment fixing the passport fee not at $5, but at $10. I have no special objection to raising the fee to $10, but gentlemen of the committee, for fear that some citizens would not procure a passport and pay the $10, adopted a provision requiring the possession of a passport before the citizen leaves the shores of the United States.

It illustrates, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the difficulty which we meet in getting away from war-time restrictions. I was hopeful that this Republican Congress would put us back somewhat on a peace-time basis; that it would quit talking about a return to prewar conditions and do something to prove its professions; that instead of passing futile and unconstitutional "peace resolutions" it would do something really effective and legal to restore former conditions.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Would this provision requiring a passport do anybody any good except salaried officials who draw down money for passing upon these things?

Mr. CONNALLY. It would bring money into the Treasury of the United States—$9 a head.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the purpose of it to raise revenue? Is it a revenue measure?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; its purpose is to bring in revenue to the Treasury. That is why the compulsory feature as to citizens was inserted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the schoolmistress going abroad for a summer vacation will have to contribute to the revenue of the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say that under the provisions of section 5 they will not be permitted to leave the United States for certain countries unless they possess passports.

Among the countries excepted are Mexico and Canada, because gentlemen of the committee realized that for these countries it would be impracticable to require a passport each time a citizen stepped across the boundary line. But for many other countries American citizens, under the terms of this bill, will not have the right to travel unless they first secure a passport from the Department of State.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state if before the war there was any requirement that an American citizen leaving this country should have a passport?

Mr. CONNALLY. There was absolutely no requirement. I will say, furthermore, to the gentleman from Massachusetts that not only did the United States not require a passport for its citizens leaving the country but no other country on the face of the globe except Russia, and perhaps Turkey, required its citizens to possess passports in order to journey in foreign lands. These are countries which I am unwilling to accept as models for the conduct of my country.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not my colleague believe that the helpful benefits that one of our citizens will receive for having a passport to travel in foreign countries will be worth $10 to him?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to my colleague that I have not yet reached the point where I believe that I have the right to judge for another citizen as to what is right and helpful and beneficial to him and by law require him to accept my judgment when he may judge otherwise as to that question, and when the exercise of his judgment and will does not trespass upon the rights of another. Now, the vice of it is not so much the payment of $10—the vice of it is not so much that this will not prove helpful or beneficial to the citizen—but the vice of it is that the citizen before he may depart from the country must come on his hands and knees to the Department of State, and if the Department of State in its discretion, and it is bound to have discretion, otherwise there would be no strength or force in the law—if the Department of State in its discretion should say it is not wise for that citizen to go abroad; that conditions in some particular country are such that in the opinion of the Secretary of State traveling in that country should be denied, then the Department of State may refuse that passport, and when you do that you deny to a citizen to travel beyond the borders of the United States, a right that has never heretofore, except in time of war, been denied or abridged.

Now, gentlemen, this may seem to be a trivial matter. I grant you that, standing alone, this requirement for the possession of a passport may seem to amount to but little, but it is only one of the small things whose toleration make it easier for us to adopt greater restrictions under a pretext which this precedent will establish.

It has ever been a cherished boast that American citizenship was unique; that it possesses privileges that are possessed by the citizens of no other country; that our Government derives its powers from the people, and not that the citizen is dependent upon the will or whim of Government as to his coming or going, so long as he molests no other. I am unwilling to enact a solemn law that makes the coming or going of a citizen—a free man in a free country—from or to his own home land in time of peace contingent upon the consent of some bureau of Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. PORTER. The time has all been taken up.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much is there on this side?

Mr. PORTER. Thirty minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman if we can not make an agreement to extend the time 30 minutes? A great many matters in this report need discussion. I think the gentleman will save time to give us this extra time and thrash this out. It has not been discussed anywhere.

Mr. PORTER. We have been discussing it quite a length of time.

Mr. SABATH. Not on this floor.

Mr. PORTER. The time has been fixed, and I have given one-half to those who object to the report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, this legislation which we are asked to enact to-day without any discussion on the floor of the House, or a vote ever having been had upon it in the House, contains features which must be denounced very emphatically and very strongly. In the first place, the attempt is made to take away from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization whatever powers it possesses at the present time in bringing in legislation affecting immigration, as the American consul on the other side is given absolute power to determine who shall have a passport visèed when the applicant desires to come to the United States. True, there is a proviso that an appeal may be taken to the Secretary of State, but there is not a word in the amendment to show how that appeal is ever to reach the Secretary of State or requiring the consul to transmit it. Let us take an example. Some one in Ireland, we will say, desires to escape from Ireland to come to the United States on account of persecution. He is refused a passport from the authorities in Ireland. He desires to come here as a place of refuge, where he may live in freedom, and grow up to become an active American citizen, as so many who have come here from Ireland have done. Lo and behold, if he does not get his passport, he can not come to the United States, or, if he does get his passport, and the average American consul, who is very friendly with the local authorities, or who fears to incur their enmity, does not desire to aid this man, he will simply make up his mind that he will not visé the passport. That will prevent the applicant from either leaving Ireland or ever coming here.

While the war was on many of us submitted to the legislation, which in time of peace we would never tolerate for a day. The question now is as to whether we are going to pass more laws, not even discussed here in the House, created in secret conference; laws which are oppressive; laws which take away liberty and freedom of the American citizen in the United States and when he leaves it to go abroad. The proponents of this drastic amendment tell us that they are raising this money from visés and passports for the sake of revenue. I have always assumed that revenue measures originated under the Constitution in the House, in its Committee on Ways and Means. That committee has never passed upon this proposition. Mr. Speaker, hidden beyond the question of $10 is the proposition of trying to pass a law without deliberation or consideration here, and which is oppressive in the extreme. We have gotten along from 1798 up to this time, as a matter of fact, without any law prohibiting an individual from leaving the United States. If he wanted a passport, he obtained it by paying $3, and the history of passport legislation, with which I am familiar, shows that at the time of the Civil War we issued passports without exacting or receiving a single cent.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is causing many people in our country to see "red" when it does not exist. Let us not lose our poise. We are here to do our duty under the Constitution without fear or favor. Let us remember that under our oath we swore to weigh every piece of legislation fairly and squarely. Let us uphold the highest traditions of the Republic and demonstrate our fearlessness by voting down this conference report, showing that we have faith in our citizens that they will at all times be loyal to our flag, whether at home or abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, no doubt it will be charged that I am responsible for the inauguration of the embodied legislation in this appropriation. I admit that when the committee, during the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, started to cut down the needed appropriations for the Consular Service, that I suggested to increase the passport fees from $1 to $5, which I considered then and consider now as fair and reasonable and at the same time sufficiently high to raise a large enough revenue to make that service self-sustaining and to assure it continuous efficiency and to provide for its needed growth and expansion.

Mr. Speaker, ever since the armistice was signed I have watched the strenuous efforts and activities of other nations to regain the commerce they have lost and we have gained during the war; the manifold commercial agencies they have established and the large sums of money they are expending to bring it about. It was for that reason that I objected to any effort on the part of the committee to cripple our wisely built-up foreign service, which has and is rendering such splendid aid to our manufacturers and to our export trade. It was for that purpose, and that alone, that I suggested increasing the passport fees and not for the purpose of imposing restrictions on American citizens or assessing additional burdens of $10 on the needful immigrants.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am forced, due to the action of the committee, to state that it is my opinion and firm belief that the Republican majority thinks more of political campaign material than of the country's material prosperity. In this I am borne out by the report of the committee, in which they lay great stress on the reductions they have made in their appropriations, failing to say, however, that it was at the expense of efficiency and service to which our trade and our country is entitled.

Mr. Speaker, since the war, under the wise and prudent policy of the Democratic Party, our exports have increased over four billion annually, our merchant marine has grown from two to nearly nine millions of gross tons, and from 1,100 indifferent sea-going vessels to 3,227 up-to-date ships. So that to-day these ships can be seen in every port and on every sea. This fast-growing merchant marine requires and is entitled to our protection and to the best possible service the country is capable of providing, which only can be done through our consular and foreign service; but all of this, it seems to me, is of no importance to the Republican committee or the Republican Party, which has for years been able to parade and mislead the American manufacturer and business man. And that was their aim in cutting down the needed appropriations, utilizing for campaign purposes the cry of Republican economy; but by this false economy, I am satisfied, the American people will not be misled. Now I desire to say a few words about sections 4 and 5 of the bill.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am opposed to this conference report not only for the reasons I have given or those given by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL], but for still other reasons. I consider the provisions written into this bill on the part of the conferees as most unreasonable, most drastic, un-American, and undemocratic. Not only will it, if enacted, preclude an American citizen from leaving the country at will, as has been the custom since the formation of the Government, but section 4 of the provision goes much further. It provides that no one can enter the United States unless he will first obtain a passport from the country of which he is a citizen. For nearly 150 years it has been the traditional policy of our Nation to extend to the advocates of free and liberal government fleeing from the wrath of autocratic governments a haven of refuge. The pages of history record the great services which have been rendered our country by them, and beyond doubt demonstrated that they have deserved the hospitality that has been accorded them by this great Nation. Due to wild and unfair charges and reports on the part of publicity and favor-seeking publicists, professional patriots, selfish politicians, and guilty-conscience and unscrupulous profiteers there has been created against the foreign born and even those of foreign parentage a prejudice that has even penetrated both Chambers of Congress, but every fair-minded man whose mind has not been poisoned will, if not to-day then in the near future, be forced to admit that these people have been more sinned against than sinned.

To the unprejudiced mind it must be clear that they have, when put to the test, demonstrated beyond any doubt their loyalty and patriotism. True there are exceptions and the Immigration Committee, having jurisdiction, is now proceeding in formulating legislation that, I am sure, will properly but sanely safeguard the interests of our country against the incoming of any dangerous or even undesirable alien without nullifying our traditional policy followed ever since the foundation of our Government.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I stated on the floor of the House Saturday, that this section 4 has never been considered by the committee or by the House, but has been inserted into this bill by the conferees and, I venture to say, that there are not over 10 per cent of the Members of the House that are familiar with it, and for that purpose I feel it my duty to read it:

SEC. 4. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, it shall be unlawful for any alien, other than a seaman, to enter or attempt to enter the United States without a passport duly viséd by a person duly authorized by the Secretary of State to issue such visé: Provided, That this section shall not apply to nationals of Great Britain domiciled in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, or the Bahamas, or to nationals of France domiciled in St. Pierre and Miquelon, or to citizens of Cuba, Panama, or Mexico.

As you will observe, under the provisions of this section anyone who has not first obtained a passport from his own country can not, as long as this law would remain on our statute books, enter the United States. If this law had been in force during the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812, it would have been impossible for Lafayette, Rochambeau, Von Steuben, Pulaski, and Kosciusko and hundreds of other liberty-loving men to aid America's cause for independence. Men like Kossuth, Schurz; yes, men like Paderewski, the present President of the Czechoslovak Republic, Masaryk, and others never would have been allowed to enter upon American soil, nor could those Cuban patriots who for so many years sought to secure their freedom and independence from the oppressive Spanish rule been permitted to enter to seek our aid and assistance. But thanks to America's broadmindness, liberal spirit, great wisdom, and humane statesmanship our country has remained up to this hour the haven of refuge of the sincere liberty-loving men and women of every tyrannical Government, and as such I hope it will always remain.

Mr. Speaker, the mere fact the Republican Party is now in power does not justify this Congress to force down the throats of the American people this legislation. I am satisfied the passage of it to-day will not benefit you, as I have every confidence, knowing President Wilson as I do, that he will never approve this uncalled-for legislation.

I am justified in making this statement, because in his message to Congress of January 28, 1915, vetoing the immigration bill which contained the unwise literacy provision, he firmly laid down what he believed to be the traditional policy of our Government:

To the House of Representatives:

This bill embodies a radical departure from the traditional and long-established policy of this country, a policy in which our people have conceived the very character of their Government to be expressed, the very mission and spirit of the Nation in respect of its relations to the peoples of the world outside their borders. It seeks to all but close entirely the gates of asylum which have always been open to those who could find nowhere else the right and opportunity of constitutional agitation for what they conceived to be the natural and inalienable rights of men.

Restrictions like these, adopted earlier in our history as a Nation, would very materially have altered the course and cooled the humane ardors of our politics. The right of political asylum has brought to this country many a man of noble character and elevated purpose who was marked as an outlaw in his own less fortunate land, and who has yet become an ornament to our citizenship and to our public councils. The children and the compatriots of these illustrious Americans must stand amazed to see the representatives of their Nation now resolved, in the fullness of our national strength and at the maturity of our great institutions, to risk turning such men back from our shores.

I am confident that he will not deviate from it and am satisfied that, unlike the Republican conferees, he will not advocate for the purpose of political expediency anything which would be detrimental and against the best interests of our country and its people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a statement from the President on this question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments to the House bill, H. R. 11960, making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, increase the amount appropriated in the House bill by the sum of $818,500. One hundred and forty-three thousand five hundred dollars of this increase is for the following items, which were not included in the House bill:

For the purchase of a building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, for an embassy, $130,000.

For the payment to Mrs. Winifred T. Magelssen, being one year's salary of her deceased husband who died from illness incurred in the foreign service while returning to the United States from his post of duty, $4,500.

To meet the actual necessary expenses of delegates from the United States to the first Pan-Pacific Scientific Congress held in the city of Honolulu in August, 1920, $9,000.

The conference report reduces the increases by the Senate amendments on the items in the House bill to the sum of $267,000 and agrees to the new items, making a total increase in the conference report of $410,500 above the amount appropriated in the House bill.

In lieu of Senate amendment No. 15, increasing the passport and viséing fees and requiring a citizen of the United States to carry a valid passport, except to certain countries before departing therefrom for any foreign country, and also making it compulsory for an alien to have a passport viséed before entering the United States, your conferees agreed upon the following:

FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

SECTION 1. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application for a passport and $9 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Secretary of State by regulation to authorize the retention by State officials of the fee of $1 for executing an application for a passport: And provided further, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers or employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties, or to members of their immediate families accompanying them, or to seamen, or to widows, children, parents, brothers, and sisters of American soldiers, sailors, or marines, buried abroad whose journey is undertaken for the purpose and with the intent of visiting the graves of such soldiers, sailors, or marines, which facts shall be made a part of the application for the passport.

SEC. 2. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application of an alien for a visé and $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officer of any foreign Government, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States, or of any soldiers coming within the terms of public resolution approved October 19, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1014).

SEC. 3. The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission: Provided, That such applicant, if rejected by the officer of the United States to whom the application was originally made, may appeal to the Secretary of State: And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States.

SEC. 4. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, it shall be unlawful for any alien, other than a seaman, to enter or attempt to enter the United States without a passport duly viséed by a person duly authorized by the Secretary of State to issue such visé: Provided, That this section shall not apply to nationals of Great Britain domiciled in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, or the Bahamas, or to nationals of France domiciled in St. Pierre and Miquelon, or to citizens of Cuba, Panama, or Mexico.

SEC. 5. From and after the passage of this act every citizen or person, other than a seaman, owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States and departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof for any foreign country, except the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, St. Pierre, and Miquelon, Panama, the Bermudas, the Bahamas, Mexico, and Cuba, or departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof by way of any of said countries for any other country shall be required to bear a valid passport.

SEC. 6. The validity of a passport or visé shall be limited to two years, unless the Secretary of State shall by regulation limit the validity of such passport or visé to a shorter period.

SEC. 7. Whenever the appropriate officer within the United States of any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued by the United States, the Department of State is hereby authorized upon request in writing and the return of the unused passport within six months from the date of issue to refund to the person to whom the passport was issued the fees which have been paid to Federal officials, and the money for that purpose is hereby appropriated and directed to be paid upon the order of the Secretary of State.

SEC. 8. Section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad" (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1228), authorizing the Secretary of State to issue passports to certain persons not citizens of the United States is hereby repealed.

And the Senate agree to the same.

This amendment to the bill fixes a charge of $1 for executing each application for a passport and a fee of $9 for each passport, and a charge of $1 for executing each application of an alien for a visé and a fee of $9 for the viséing of such passport. It also requires the carrying of a valid passport by a person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States in departing this country. The Dominion of Canada, Mexico, Cuba, the Bahamas, the Bermudas, Newfoundland, St. Pierre, and Miquelon are excepted from this provision for obvious reasons.

Prior to the enactment of the passport-control act of May 22, 1918, and the extension thereof by the act of October 16, 1919, a person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States was not required to carry a passport before departing for foreign countries. The operation of this law has been highly satisfactory, as it gives to our citizens before leaving for foreign lands conclusive evidence of their American citizenship in case it is questioned or for any other reason they need the assistance of our representatives abroad. It also enables our representatives in foreign countries to determine without delay and with certainty and precision the identity of our citizens, and will save the Government large sums of money which have been heretofore expended on cablegrams and other forms of communication by our representatives abroad in their efforts to determine citizenship. It also relieves the citizen from annoying and vexatious delays in receiving such evidence from the United States.

The economic distress that exists in Europe and a part of Asia is without parallel in the world's history and is plainly reflected in the disturbed condition of the political and social life of these countries. Economic laws are as inexorable as the laws of nature, and prudent men believe that these conditions will continue for many years to come. It is therefore of the highest importance that an American citizen who enters these chaotic countries should have conclusive evidence of his citizenship and thus avoid involving our Republic in controversies and disputes.

The enormous burden of taxation which the war has cast upon the American people requires the strictest economy in the administration of the affairs of the Nation, and Congress should exhaust every effort to reduce taxation wherever it can be done without impairment of the public service. There are instances where the public service performed should be paid by the individual who alone benefits thereby and not be borne by general taxation. It is with the idea of correcting one of these injustices to the taxpayer that your conferees earnestly suggest the approval of the substitute for amendment No. 15 in the Senate bill. The principal function performed by our representatives in foreign countries in times of peace is the protection of the rights of American citizens while abroad, and there is no sound reason why all the expense of this service should be paid out of general taxation. They who alone benefit from it should be compelled to contribute at least a part of the cost of maintenance.

It is true that only a small percentage of our citizens while traveling abroad require assistance from our representatives, but this is immaterial, as everyone who goes abroad benefits by the moral effect of the maintenance of our foreign service. The fact that we have such representatives to whom American citizens may appeal for protection deters interference with their rights. The situation is almost identical with the one between a citizen of one of our great cities and its department of public safety. I doubt very much if one citizen out of 10,000 in Washington last year asked for assistance or protection from the police force of this city, and yet all have benefited by its moral effect on evildoers.

The fee of $1 provided by existing law appears to be based on the unsound principle of reimbursing the Government only for the clerical service necessary in the issuance of a passport. The fee should be based not only on the cost of issuing the passport to the departing citizen, but also the service which the holder of it will receive from the American representatives stationed abroad in protecting him in person and property. It is difficult to estimate the amount of revenue derived from this increase in the passport fees in normal times, but your committee feels justified in saying that it, together with the increase in the viséing fees, added to the fees already charged by the Consular Service, will largely pay the expenses of our entire foreign service and may, when immigration to this country and foreign travel become normal, make the service self-sustaining.

The following records of immigration from June 30, 1910, to June 30, 1919, and the number of United States citizens departed from June 30, 1910, to June 30, 1919, as shown on page 7 of the hearings on H. R. 12211, will be helpful in estimating the amount of revenue to be raised by this substitute:

Immigration, fiscal years ended June 30, 1910 to 1919.

1911	878,587
1912	838,172
1913	1,197,892
1914	1,218,480
1915	326,700
1916	298,826
1917	295,403
1918	110,618
1919	141,132

Number of United States citizens departed, fiscal years ended June 30, 1910 to 1919.

1910	342,600
1911	349,472
1912	353,890
1913	347,702
1914	368,797
1915	172,371
1916	110,733
1919	218,929

It is true that our Republic owes to our citizens a duty of protection in their rights and properties wherever they may be, but, on the other hand, the citizen also owes duties to his country, one of which is to aid it wherever he can in the performance of its duty to him. It is not unreasonable or unjust either to require him to pay a reasonable fee for this special protection which he receives or that he carry a valid passport before departing the country, so that his identity can be fixed and determined and thus avoid the doubts and uncertainties which frequently arise and insure to him a more prompt and efficient service.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. How much more appropriation does the bill carry now than it did when it passed the House?

Mr. PORTER. Four hundred and ten thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. McKEOWN. What is the total amount carried by the bill at this time?

Mr. PORTER. Nine million two hundred and fifty-three thousand five hundred and thirty-seven dollars and ninety-one cents.

Mr. McKEOWN. Why is it necessary to appropriate $130,000 to build an embassy building in Santiago Chile, with the present condition of the Treasury?

Mr. PORTER. It has been the policy of the committee and, I believe, of Congress for a number of years to purchase embassies from time to time, and we felt that we were entirely justified—or rather that the Senate was—in this amendment providing $130,000 for purchasing the embassy building in Santiago, Chile.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be postponed, in view of the fact that in our own country we are not carrying on any building program?

Mr. PORTER. I do not think it should be postponed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose an English citizen or a citizen of some other foreign country should go to Canada or to Cuba, then he could come into the United States without a passport.

Mr. PORTER. That question was raised, and I think it is covered by the bill. At least we tried to cover it.

Mr. CANNON. If he does not pay the passport fee, then you will have all of the travel in foreign vessels in Canada or Cuba.

Mr. PORTER. Of course, an English citizen would not pay the passport fee. He would pay the visé fee, but he would probably do that before leaving Great Britain.

Mr. CANNON. They could not go out that way under the bill, so far as I have been able to determine, but they could come in that way.

Mr. PORTER. I think the bill is broad enough to take care of that situation.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. I will.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman—the last clause the gentleman has here on page 2 of his report states:

And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States.

Now, does the gentleman think it is entirely proper that first a man appeals to his own Government for permission to travel, and he gets that permission, and then he goes to an official of the United States and pays a fee, and receives permission to come into this country, and after he has done all that it is entirely left to some other official whether he is going to let him land or not?

Mr. PORTER. The gentleman from Illinois has not correctly read the provision. It is limited in its application to aliens; it does not refer to American citizens.

Mr. JUUL. That is just what I am talking about. A man goes to a representative of his own Government and obtains a permit to travel, and that permission to travel to the United States is O. K'd by an official of this Government, and then, after he in good faith has accepted that permission from an official of this Government to come to the United States, when he comes to this country this Government may use its further judgment and deny him access to the country?

Mr. PORTER. Oh, no.

Mr. JUUL. It certainly will under this provision.

Mr. PORTER. If the gentleman will read the bill he will find that provision in regard to the steamship company is limited to aliens.

Mr. JUUL. I am speaking of aliens and on that very subject.

Mr. PORTER. I can not yield further; but if he would read the bill he would see his error.

Mr. JUUL. I think it ought to be made clear.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. I do.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that he states that Mexico was left out of the bill for obvious reasons, whether one of those reasons was it would be rather dangerous for a citizen to travel in Mexico to have an American passport on him on account of our lack of protection to American citizens?

Mr. PORTER. That was not the reason.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Section 4, which refers to a visé by the United States and requires a man——

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has yielded to me for a question, and I would like to have him hear it and I would like to have my colleagues hear it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the House is not in order, and we can not hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the chairman of the committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, whether section 4 is not an entirely new proposition from the amendment which we made? This is a proposition which requires a man coming from another country not only to have a passport from some authorized official of that country but a visé by the United States. That was not in the bill, as I remember it, that we reported to the House.

Mr. PORTER. That is correct.

Mr. MASON. I desire, if the chairman will give me time, or some one, to be heard upon section 4, which I regard as a very dangerous and obnoxious amendment to our law. I ask the chairman of the committee or some one opposed to give me a chance to be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield? To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. How much time remains?

The SPEAKER. Those opposed have used 20 minutes and those in favor 15 minutes. There are 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. PORTER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask the serious attention of Members to these proposals suddenly sprung upon us in a conference report. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to introduce the bill extending that war-time passport control act in so far as it applied to aliens coming to the United States. Congress gave that extension with but one opposing vote, and made the extension for the lifetime of this Congress—that is, until March 4 next. When that extension bill was dropped in the basket I thought it should go to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. It went, however, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which had handled the original war legislation concerning passports for both aliens and citizens. I did not raise the question of jurisdiction. I was very anxious to see that extension. Mr. Lansing was before that committee, and said that while the extension might permit the State Department to override and nullify the provisions of the immigration law passed by Congress, he assured the members that every effort would be made not to do that. Then happened an extension of appropriations for consular agents attending to these visés, and now comes the effort perfected in conference and written into the bill, provisions that neither this House nor the other House has considered; new matter, which I think will make a great deal of trouble and confusion, and which if accepted to-day will not last as law for a year. Mind you, we still have the temporary extension.

Mr. MASON. May I just say to the gentleman I expect to make a point of order against section 4 as being new legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I understand the point was made Saturday and overruled.

Mr. SABATH. It was made on Saturday and overruled by the Speaker.

Mr. MASON. I did not know that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I could call attention to how this proposal will be misunderstood at a time when we who desire to expel dangerous and revolutionary aliens from the country, but I can not take the time. I desire to call attention to the fact that the fee proposed here is $10, although it is divided into $9 for viséing and $1 for registering. It is a $10 fee on all who come to the United States. We have an $8 head tax, and Congress in its wisdom thought that was sufficient.

I presume the House will look to its Immigration Committee to straighten that out. We have no provision for rebate of any part of the fee in case an alien with a passport is denied admission. Suppose some Member dropped a bill in the basket proposing such an amendment. Where is it going to go? To the Committee on Foreign Affairs or the Committee on Immigration?

Mr. Speaker, I have looked up this morning the fees that are charged by other countries and I find no European countries' charge is in excess of $4, and that the average is $2. Certain countries require separate passports for man, wife, and children; others accept one passport for the family.

Certain Latin-American countries charge high fees, and do it as a matter of revenue pure and simple, and so announce it. No country makes any such charges for visés of passports as we here propose.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For a brief question.

Mr. RAKER. The provisions of this bill would not in any way militate against the provisions of the immigration law, would they? Both would have to be complied with.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certain of the immigration laws would have to be complied with, of course. But the conferees provide here that the visé of a passport of an alien, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, may be refused if the applicant should be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if he should present himself at a port of the United States. In the present law we have a provision that a man who is refused at the port of the United States has the right of appeal to the appeal board. Here we let a consular officer say that some man in Ireland or some other part of the world shall not even start to the United States for some reason that one agent thinks may not make him admissible. A consular officer might charge that he was a mendicant, or did not have enough money, or charge that he might in any one of a dozen ways transgress our immigration laws. I favor a great restriction of immigration. If it is the desire to put up the passport prices in order to restrict immigration, I am so much in favor of restriction that I would make the price $50 or even $100. But I think the whole proposal is in the wrong place, and considered in the wrong way.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Concerning the last point, only the other day I had a man from my home town wanting to go to Poland to bring his mother here, and both of the departments showed him where it would not be advisable for him to go because of typhus fever, and other things that should prevent his going there. Do you not think that is a discretion——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not object to the United States requiring its own citizens to have passports in order to go abroad. I do think we are usurping parts of the immigration laws, and that it will make all kinds of difficulties, to require passports for aliens coming to the United States at any such fee. I had the case Saturday of a stowaway who had escaped from a prison in Germany, who came to the United States, and was ordered sent back by the State Department for the want of a passport. He gets no right of appeal. That happens under the law that we extended for about a year as a war necessity. That young fellow claims that he is a political refugee seeking asylum in the United States, but for the want of a passport, which he could not get, he must go back. That is just a sample of the trouble we are bound to get into. I do not think we will get anywhere with the passage of this legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to know if this law or any other gives one of our consuls in any other country the right to pass on the qualifications of a proposed immigrant into this country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is exactly what it does, and I am calling the gentleman's attention to the very broad word that is used to give the authority.

Mr. SABATH. The word is "obviously."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; obviously. Here is what the paragraph says. Think of this, you gentlemen who have worked on immigration laws, and who have tried to make them fair. Think of what you are doing in a conference report, one that has never been debated in this House or in the other:

> The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety, or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission.

It fixes here a plan of appeal to the Secretary of State. How would the appeal be made? Nine times out of ten it will be made through Members of Congress, as it is right now, under the war passport extension act. We have a passport-extension provision, and all of us who come from districts where there are foreign-born people are engaged every day with one or more of these passport disputes. I have presented a good many of them down there, and have been refused only in case of two.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Secretary of State is to prescribe the rules and regulations under which these consuls are to act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose the consul is a bull-headed fellow and does not like anybody because he believes one thing or another?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is it exactly. As much as I favor the restriction of immigration, I think we are making a mistake here. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has under consideration a bill providing for visés and passports for those coming from other countries under the exemption clauses of the present immigration laws; that is, teachers, ministers, students, and the like, and a plan of probationary admission for others. Under the temporary extension of the war passport plan, we were given time to perfect such a measure. Now, we find a substitute for our work proposed here in 20 lines—20 poorly considered lines at that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am sorry I can not yield further. In conclusion, my opinion is that we are making a mistake if we adopt this report in its present shape.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman have a couple of minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. My time has expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield me five minutes?

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, opposition to this provision is difficult to understand.

The late war and our experience arising out of it demonstrated clearly the necessity for a real immigration policy. While we have from time to time passed some legislation pertaining to this question, taking it all in all we have paid altogether too little attention to a question which so vitally affects our country's welfare.

During the 10 years immediately preceding the outbreak of the Great War our immigration averaged about 1,000,000 annually. In late years, and especially after the disposition of the greater portion of our public lands, we have practically given the immigrant no consideration whatever after he has arrived in this country. We have permitted great industries and the men interested in the growth and development of those industries to not only encourage immigration but to import, so to speak, cheap labor. We then have permitted these workmen to be grossly exploited. We have permitted and encouraged the grouping and settlement of these immigrants so as to form their own special nationalistic units until we have in our own country large localities where the language of Washington and Lincoln is seldom spoken. We have done nothing to educate these people in our history, language, or ideals. The great majority of them came over here with the best of intentions and with a great vision of America, the land of freedom and equality. We then have permitted these great ideals to be destroyed. This has been due to our own neglect and also because we have permitted certain aliens who are more clever and able than the great majority of their fellow immigrants to sow the seeds of discontent and class consciousness in the field which we have made ready by our neglect.

No wonder some of them become converts to bolshevism, I. W. W.ism, and other forms of destructive radicalism.

We therefore need a comprehensive, constructive immigration program which will deal constructively with the immigrant within our country and prevent the undesirable immigrant from coming into our country.

We can best solve questions of deportation by not having any people to deport.

This provision which has been added to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill is a step in this direction. Furthermore, it provides the necessary revenue to make the work practically self-supporting.

Under our present immigration act an alien proceeds to America and lands at one of our ports—for example, at Ellis Island. Under our law if he is an undesirable he can be excluded. It is here that our immigration authorities first meet him. Undoubtedly it is the first time that any of them have ever heard of him. He applies for admission to our country. As an apparent evidence of his good faith he has paid his passage over and has a small amount of money in his pocket. The burden necessarily rests upon the Government to prove him an undesirable. The immigration authorities are 3,000 miles away from the immigrant's home. How can they under these circumstances—except in rare cases—assume this burden and prove the alien's undesirability? They can not. It is an impossibility. The result is inevitable. Few are rejected. It has been demonstrated time and again that many undesirables slip by our immigration authorities and remain with us to plague us and attempt to destroy our institutions. Such a system is wrong and should be changed. Sections 3 and 4 accomplish this. In effect it places the burden upon the immigrant to show that he is a desirable, but it affords him the opportunity of doing that in his own county, where he is known and acquainted. It affords the Government the opportunity of checking up and verifying the prospective immigrant's statements in his own country.

Section 3 provides for the visé of the passport of an immigrant before he leaves his own country by our consular officers in that country under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of State. It further provides that this visé may "be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety, or obviously be liable to exclusion, if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission." Certain gentlemen have objected to this provision. Should we permit our consular officers to grant a visé to those who "would be dangerous to public safety"? Should we permit them to grant a visé to those who are "obviously liable to exclusion" under our present immigration laws to come over and try it anyway? Our immigration laws already provide for the exclusion of this type of immigrant. Do gentlemen want them repealed? Do they want this type and class of immigrant to be increased?

It is claimed that our consuls may misjudge a man and deny him a visé, thereby doing him an injustice. To prevent the possibility of this very thing provision is made for an appeal from a refusal to the Secretary of State.

In this way, and this way only, can we properly and intelligently inquire into the question of desirability or undesirability of a prospective immigrant.

It has been claimed that if section 4 is enacted into law, which requires a passport and its visé by our consular officers, that this passport may be denied by the immigrant's Government, and that thereby some very worthy individual may be prevented from coming to our shores. This may be the case. We must remember, however, that it is our business to legislate for the general welfare of America. While continental Europe is in her present chaotic social and political condition we can not afford to take chances. If necessary this section can be amended to provide against an injustice to the man who is in all respects desirable, but can not obtain a passport from his Government, by providing for his filing of a petition and the approval of that petition by our consular officer under regulations to be prescribed by the State Department. Personally I would favor such a provision. The important thing is to provide for an approval by our own officials in the country of the immigrant's origin.

All of this will require time and labor. The additional expense is provided for by the increasing of the visé fee to $10. Is this sum unreasonable?

Sections 1 and 5 require a passport from American citizens who are about to travel in Europe and Asia, and prescribe a fee of $10. This is objected to as unnecessary and as an unwarranted expense to the traveler.

It will be noted that for travel on this continent and to Cuba, and so forth, no passport is required.

As to the question of the requirement, a considerable portion of continental Europe is in a state of political and social chaos.

As a result of this condition, American ministers and consuls will be called upon more than ever to give advice and afford protection to various travelers claiming to be American citizens. Practically all of continental Europe now requires a passport from a traveler. This will continue for several years, and certainly while this condition remains. In view of this fact, then, should we not as a Government require our own citizens to carry with them while traveling abroad the evidence of their American citizenship? To ask this question under these circumstances is to answer it.

Now, as to the expense: Is not this evidence of American citizenship and the right to the protection of our Government worth the sum of $10? I maintain that the traveler as such should be called upon to pay a portion of the expense of the Government in maintaining legations and consulates. Heretofore he has only been called upon to pay for the clerical work involved in the writing out of the passport.

We have heard much of late of economy. Here is an opportunity to add to our revenue from those who peculiarly enjoy the benefits of the services and protection of our representatives abroad.

Mr. Speaker, I hope these provisions will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If I have the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization at this very moment has an immigration bill pending, providing for the carrying of a proper viséed passport by every incoming alien. Here it is cut out by the roots in five lines in an appropriation bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do know that there is a need for a change, and that this supplies the need.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. PORTER. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 296 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be extended 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Illinois to make that one hour.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am sorry, but I can not do it; I am afraid some one will object to 30 minutes.

Mr. MASON. Reserving the right to object, I want five minutes. I am a member of the committee and I have not taken any time so far.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, how much more time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 8 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Illinois requests that he have 30 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that in this instance I can not agree with my colleague [Mr. CONNALLY], whose judgment in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred is good. But a passport in the pocket of an American citizen is a credential of American citizenship, safeguarding him while traveling in foreign lands, and is worth to any American citizen the $10 it costs anywhere in the world that he may travel. The provision in this conference report raising the fees to $10 merely extends what we call the luxury-tax provision of our revenue law, the provision which prescribes that the man who is able to afford and to enjoy the luxuries of life shall pay for them.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I regret that I can not. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois will have five minutes shortly, and I have only three. When the constituents of my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] go into a dry-goods store and buy a $15 silk shirt they must pay the luxury tax on it. His constituents, however, who buy $1.50 shirts do not have to pay that luxury tax. Is that not right, that the men who are able to travel in foreign lands should pay for the privilege that little, measly $10 tax? There is no tax provision on the relatives of our soldiers and sailors and marines who are buried in France. They have a right to go to the foreign country and visit the graves without any tax whatever.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON had leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, all of the propositions in this bill except section 4, as I remember it now, received the approval of our committee. I made no objection, but without any consultation with the committee so far as I know, and without any vote in the House or consideration in our committee, they have inserted section 4. The first time I had my attention called to it was within the last 10 minutes.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I have only five minutes.

Mr. PORTER. I will yield the gentleman sufficient time to answer the question.

Mr. MASON. Very well, I yield.

Mr. PORTER. I think the gentleman is confused in regard to the bill. The appropriation bill as it passed the House contained no provision for passport control. He is no doubt thinking of a bill which I introduced which was considered by the committee fixing the passport and visé fee. There was no legislation on this question at all in the appropriation bill as it left the House.

Mr. MASON. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's memory would be better than mine, but the fact remains that our committee never to my knowledge considered the question of putting up the bars against any man who sought an asylum and the protection of the American law and the American flag.

Section 4 would have kept Lafayette out of this country; section 4 would have kept Kossuth from coming here and pleading the cause of Hungary years ago; section 4 would keep out every man who came to this country when Cuba was in the control of Spain and who sought to come here; section 4 would keep out every man who comes from India, from Ireland, and South Africa, unless they could have a passport from Great Britain, the very country they are seeking to get away from. Perhaps some of these men are stowaways. Suppose a man escapes to-day from Lenin and Trotski because he is not a Bolshevist. He can not get a passport because Russia is not recognized. He can not get a passport from that country, so how can he get it viséd? It would have made our ancestors say that no man could land on American soil without a passport from some nation.

The world is unsettled; England to-day is governing a large part of the people seeking their independence. Suppose a man came from India, and there are a lot here now from that country that is being governed by England by force. They seek to tell the truth of their slavery to Great Britain. Suppose they come from South Africa, suppose they want to come for legitimate educational purposes, they must knock at the door of their masters and receive the approval of a passport from Great Britain, and then when they get that they must be viséd by some one representing the United States. The Pilgrim Fathers could not have landed under this law.

I say that you are going back a century, you are going a long, long way back to say that our fathers were wrong when they said this was to be an asylum of safety for political refugees wherever they came from. Do not close the door by the passage of this bill; do not say that no Irishman shall leave Ireland until he gets permission from the King of Great Britain. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it seems to me there is unnecessary excitement over this provision at this particular time. It seems to me there is unnecessary agitation from another committee because they did not happen to have jurisdiction or did not bring in this particular proposition.

Now, I do not believe that this House ought to exercise itself more about which committee has jurisdiction over a proposition than it does about the necessities and needs of the times. If we need this passport regulation for travel—and that is what I want to call to the attention of the committee, that this resolution, this conference report, does nothing more than to regulate travel, both of the people coming into this country and the people going into other countries.

I believe that the Government of the United States has the right to exercise control of the man, even though he be an American citizen, who wants to travel abroad, if in return the American citizen expects this Government to go to the ends of the earth and protect him, if he needs protection. It is not asking anything unfair. It is only asking that the Government say to him, "You shall meet certain requirements before you run promiscuously throughout all parts of the world."

I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who made an impassioned plea for the Irishman, that he is not any more a bona fide loyal lover of the honest Irish than I, and that his ancestors did not come from any closer to the old Emerald Isle than did mine, nor any more recently. I have all of the sympathy in the world for the honest foreigner, whether he be Irish, Scotch, or German. If he wants to come to America because conditions in his own country are not so good as he believes conditions are in this country, and to make his home here, and at the same time become an honest American, I think he should come. I do not believe that there is a single thing in this provision that will bar out the honest man. The honest citizen seeking to better his environment can still come into this country, and we welcome him, as the most of our ancestors did the same thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield. I want to say in my humble judgment that it will do one thing, and that is bar out such people as Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman and their kind who have come to this country. We are to-day spending hundreds of thousands of dollars, even millions of dollars, through the Departments of Justice and Commerce and Labor, trying to sort out the undesirable aliens and send them back to where they came from.

I submit to you that it would be better business policy and more humane if we could separate them on the other side rather than separate them after they come here and after they have done their most damnable and nefarious work in the congested foreign sections of our cities. I have all of the sympathy in the world with the foreigner, but we have imported them into this country by the hundreds of thousands for years and then have done nothing for them. We have not played fair with the foreigner. We have allowed him to come to this country and permitted him to form his little Ireland, his little Germany, his little Hungary, and his little Austria in our great cities. Those congested spots to-day are the breeding places of anarchy; they are the headquarters of socialism of the left wing; they are the hotbeds of the Bolsheviki, and if you will clean those out, those congested spots, I will say to you that you will not need to deport foreigners as undesirable citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCARTHUR). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, before the war passports to leave the country were not required, and passports to enter the country were not required. During the war there was reason for the change which was made, giving to the State Department arbitrary power which was arbitrarily exercised, in many instances without apparent justice, for the purpose of preventing American citizens going abroad, either to Europe, South America, the Orient, or anywhere else. I had hoped that Congress in its wisdom would put an end to some of the war-time activities of the departments of the Government when the war ceased. Yet we are met on every hand by the men holding jobs who want to keep them who desire to have these war activities extended and kept in operation. It is inevitably true that when you grant temporary power to human kind, the officials who exercise that power almost invariably want the power extended in length and increased in amount. That is the case with all of the departments of the Government. It is not a matter of partisanship, it is a matter of human nature. They see the matter from their selfish viewpoint. An official is not worth much who does not exaggerate the importance of his job, but it is time for us to stop it. [Applause.] We ought to end most of these things. Think of what it means! Here is a proposition which would prevent an Irishman fleeing from Ireland, from entering the United States—which would prevent some man from Central America, persecuted by the Government there, from fleeing to the United States—which would prevent any man from the Balkans who might be persecuted by his revolutionary government, temporary in character, from fleeing to the United States! Have we reached the point where we propose to uphold the autocratic power of any temporary government in the world and forbid the people who seek to flee from them entering our borders? They can not obtain a passport, it is impossible for them to receive a passport, from their home country. Under this bill they will not be permitted to enter the United States without a passport. Nor have I reached the point yet where I believe an American citizen, possibly hastily, called abroad, shall be required to go to the State Department and wait in misery upon their stately procession in order to get a passport to go, perhaps, to his dying mother. I am not in favor of so increasing and extending the activities of the State Department that every American citizen has to ko-tow to the State Department, which can let him go or keep him home arbitrarily, without reason, just as it pleases. I think it is time to end some of the war-time activities and war-time legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, there are two principal points urged against the wisdom of this conference report, one of which relates to section 3 and the other of which relates to section 5. Section 3 deals with the visé of the passports of aliens who seek to come to the United States. Without any heat or excitement I ask the House to consider exactly what section 3 does. It provides that the visé may be refused by our consular representative abroad if the applicant for that visé would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission, and then provides for an appeal to the Secretary of State of the United States in case the alien in question considers that he has been done an injustice in having his request for a visé denied.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield at present. It is quite possible, and I think we must in all candor admit, that in a very occasional instance an injustice may be done to a worthy refugee who seeks to flee from his own country. On the other hand, I think that in 10,000 cases to 1 this provision will save the United States from having an undesirable come to the United States as a stowaway or in some other surreptitious manner.

In other words, it seems to me that this is merely another illustration of the familiar rule of life and conduct that we can not get any great good in this world without an occasional individual injustice. For the protection of the United States as a whole this method will work out an exceedingly effective justice.

Mr. CONNALLY rose.

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield now. Now, take it from the standpoint of the alien himself. That alien oftentimes comes many hundreds or thousands of miles from his own home abroad to the seaboard and thence sails to the United States. His journey may take 4,000, 5,000, or 6,000 miles and involve an expenditure which he can by no means afford. We have consular officers, highly trained and skilled men, all over the world, most of them living within a comparatively few miles of any place from which an alien is likely to depart. We provide in this conference report that those consuls shall assist the intending immigrant to determine whether or not he is going to be excludable under our immigration laws when he reaches a port of the United States.

I honestly think, gentlemen, that this provision is in aid of the immigrant rather than an additional hardship or difficulty which the country seeks to impose upon him.

So much for the first of the two sections to which objection has been made. To my mind the protection of the country imperatively demands the adoption of some provision like section 3. I believe the administration of the section will be fair. I believe the enactment will be extremely salutary and to the best interests of the United States in these very difficult days, when the world is on fire and when all sorts of people seek to come to the United States whom we can not wisely permit to enter.

Then comes the other provision, the provision of section 5, which requires that every American citizen who seeks to leave the United States for trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific countries shall be obliged to equip himself with a passport before he sails. I am frank to say that I think there is a good deal of force in the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] on that point. I am frank to say it seems to me a rather doubtful question whether, permanently at least, we want to embark upon a policy of requiring every American citizen to take out a passport before he leaves the country. But there are two or three reasons that, in my judgment, make it a wise policy for us to undertake at this moment. We can not treat this foreign-travel question as if it were a domestic matter. Inherently and necessarily it is an international matter. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, before the war it was not the practice of the Nation, it was not the practice of the civilized world, to require passports for travelers to and from other countries. But during the war that practice has grown up. Whether we like it or not, it is here, and, gentlemen of the House, whether we like it or not, it is here to stay for a good many years. England, France, Italy, Germany, and the other countries, the lesser countries of Europe, are to-day requiring passports for incoming and outgoing travel.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I am sorry I can not yield just now. The then Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, in the course of the rather elaborate hearings which we had upon this general question, said that in his judgment this same condition would continue for some years, and he gave that as his opinion as the result of what was said to him by the representatives of other countries with whom he had been associated at Paris. That being so, the question may present itself why we need legislate it in our statute books. In one sense we do not need to do so, but it is exceedingly important that every American shall know before he starts forth that he must have a passport. He might find some countries to which a passport was not necessary. He might start from the United States for a country without a passport, but instantly when he got there and when he attempted to pass to other countries he would find himself all snarled up without the essential thing for his safety and comfort. With the world in the situation in which it is and with other countries almost universally requiring passports and likely to continue that requirement for some years, from the standpoint of the American citizen himself it is infinitely better to carry in our law, for a while at least, a provision that every forthgoing American citizen must have a passport.

It is not because we want to annoy the traveler. We want to help the legitimate traveler in every way, but we want to protect him when he goes to Europe or to Asia, and incidentally we want to enable our diplomatic representative or our consular representative——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PORTER. I extend the gentleman's time two minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. And incidentally we want to assist our diplomatic representative or consular representative abroad, to whom this very man may apply for assistance, in his determination of whether or not the individual is in fact one who is entitled to that assistance or whether he is a fraud who is trying to pass himself off as an American in order to get protection to which he is not entitled. As a matter of administration this compulsory requirement will be of enormous assistance. As a matter of safety to our American travelers it will be of exceeding advantage. I do not understand that there is very much objection made to the requirement that hereafter there shall be $10 charged for an American citizen leaving the country or for aliens coming to this country. As a matter of fact that suggestion has been made by several gentlemen who have been most earnest in opposing this conference report to-day. The question comes simply to this narrow issue, so far as I can determine—whether we shall make the taking out of the passport or visé compulsory in the respective cases. If we are going to raise the fees as a revenue matter, in order to make this service very much more nearly self-supporting, it is obvious that we shall need, as a matter of common sense, to have it compulsory that intending travelers shall take out passports or visés, because otherwise the increased charge will scare them off and they will refuse to take out the passport or the visé, as the case may be.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As a matter of fact, this is not a law that can not be amended hereafter?

Mr. ROGERS. Of course not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And if it is found unworkable after present conditions have passed, then the law can be amended so as to bring it back to the prewar condition if it is necessary to do so.

Mr. ROGERS. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PORTER. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. We think in these very trying days, when American citizens going to other countries may often get into a predicament which will require the assistance of our consular and diplomatic representatives, it is exceedingly important for the country as a whole, and for the individuals as well, that their exact right should be determinable at a moment's notice. We have similarly thought in these trying days, when the whole world is seeking to come to the United States, when the unworthy and undesirable are seeking to come as well as the worthy and desirable, that in every possible way we shall control and restrict the tide of undesirable immigration from Europe. And in this bill we are simply providing two sieves through which the intending immigrant should pass instead of the one that he has now. We do not in any way limit the provisions of the immigration law. We are trying to make it more universal and more adequately operative and enforceable.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. PORTER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is quite immaterial to my mind just the methods or committee through which this legislation comes. Primarily, it might be in the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, but it is here before us now in a concrete form, whereby we can pass upon it, and it simply provides in addition to the laws that are now upon the statute books as to immigration another provision that is wholesome and beneficial. And I am satisfied that every Member that has been in favor of our immigration laws is in favor of this, although they make some slight objection that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization did not have the opportunity to bring their bill in in place of the one that is here. The general provisions of the immigration law now in force and those that may hereafter be enacted will apply.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What does the gentleman think of a law that provides for the collection of $10 from an alien for an American visé and brings him to the door of the United States and then turns him back and keeps the $10?

Mr. RAKER. I think it is all right if you work it right. It is an additional safeguard. Under this bill, if he passes the visé of the officer abroad, and it turns out when he lands that he is not admissible, he knows what the law is—and most of them know it—and he ought to be sent back at the expense of the steamship company that brought him here under the provision of the immigration law as it now exists. And then, too, he has had that much experience.

Mr. MASON. How can he have a visé unless he has a passport?

Mr. RAKER. His passport is applied for in the foreign country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Is not this passport for an American going out already on the statute books and to run until the 1st of July, 1921?

Mr. PORTER. Until the 4th of March, 1921.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is to run until the 4th of March?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do you want to get this made a permanent law now for?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, two objections have been made to the provisions of this conference report. One is aimed at the requirement that an American citizen leaving for foreign ports shall obtain a passport and pay $10 for it. I think that any American who under present circumstances wants to go abroad can well afford to pay $10 for the privilege of being officially vouched for. I think that any American desiring to go abroad in the condition of things abroad had best arm himself with a passport before he goes if he values his comfort. Otherwise he should stay at home. [Applause.] If he goes without a passport, he is only going into trouble.

Now, the other objection made is that we are requiring that those coming to our shores should obtain passports before they sail. I do not know that I would favor that as a permanent law. But the world is in turmoil. We are now spending millions of dollars of the good money of the American people trying to get rid of folks who are here and who ought never to have been allowed to come. [Applause.] Some gentlemen seem to be fearful that some of our friends from the ever-green isle will not be able to come if we impose the condition. Well, unless I misjudge the attitude of the English Government, they will be entirely willing to issue a passport just at this time to any Irishman who wants to go beyond seas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. In my opinion there is absolutely nothing to that objection. You can scarcely conceive a situation under which Great Britain would deny a passport to an Irishman or a Welshman or a Scotchman desiring to come to America.

Mr. MASON. They do it now.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman states he is in favor of it only temporarily.

Mr. MONDELL. We can amend it at any time.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman will not let me ask the question. Is not the gentleman aware that we have already passed in this Congress a bill continuing until March 4, 1921, the war-time passport control? That meets the temporary situation.

Mr. MONDELL. I am talking about the matter now before us, and in my opinion, in the present condition of the world it is well for us to guard our ports, and in my opinion there is no honest, well-meaning person, no matter who he may be or where he may be, who desires to come to America for good reasons and who will make a good citizen when he comes but can obtain a passport and the opportunity to come. In these times, when we are fighting the red menace the country over, we should not quibble about matters of this kind. This provision will not, in my opinion, keep from our shores a single, solitary, honest, well-meaning person desiring to come, and no other class of persons should come. [Applause.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH and Mr. MASON demanded a division.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 97, nays 194, not voting 136, as follows:

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I was at the rear end of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to submit the formula. The gentleman can answer. Was the gentleman present when his name was called?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I can not say. I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must answer that affirmatively in order to qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. PORTER, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. FLOOD.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana submits a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14100) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this measure; and, pending that request, I desire to see if we can not agree upon time for consideration. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and ask that one hour be had for debate, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the other half by myself on this side, and that at the conclusion of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman what disposition the committee has made of the matter in controversy in regard to printing?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have stricken out section 8. I desire to modify my request, Mr. Speaker, by asking that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] control the time on that side.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to suggest 1 hour and 30 minutes to a side?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that so far as I know, whether the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] desires to discuss the matter or not, I wanted probably 10 minutes. I do not know that I shall take all of it.

Mr. SISSON. I shall be glad to give the gentleman 10 minutes if he desires it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] wanted about 35 minutes. I wanted to suggest that the gentleman increase the time so as to permit the gentleman from North Carolina to have the time he desires, and also permit me to have 10 minutes.

Mr. POU. Reserving the right to object, I would like to say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that we reported out four rules from the Committee on Rules on Saturday, and I did not ask for any time on any one of those rules. In view of that fact I thought it might be agreeable to the gentleman to extend the time so that I could get 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want to speak on this bill?

Mr. SISSON. Of course I have no objection to extending the time 30 minutes, so as to accommodate these gentlemen, making it 45 minutes to a side. I do not know that I shall consume any time myself. I would be very glad to accommodate these gentlemen if I could.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent, so far as the time is concerned, that the gentlemen on that side may have 45 minutes and that we on this side have 30 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman's unanimous-consent agreement includes the previous question. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] desires to offer an amendment to this bill in order to have legislation correcting what has been complained about.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This would authorize him to offer an amendment.

Mr. GARNER. If the previous question is applied, how could he offer an amendment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He will have the floor; he can offer the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. This does not preclude the offering of amendments, as I understand, at any time within the 45 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the request that was made for unanimous consent, would the bill be considered in the House or in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? That is inquiry first. Would the bill be ready for amendment before the discussion commences? Would an amendment be in order during this discussion, or would amendments be in order at any time before the final vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled once recently—and the Chair thinks that it would apply to this request—that when a request is made for unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill on the Union Calendar that dispenses with the consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and therefore the Chair——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I do not think the Chair has ever ruled on a bill of this sort.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it would simplify the matter if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] were allowed again to make his request and make it, as I understand he desires to make it, so that we can take the bill up. It must be read, of course——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why should it be read?

Mr. MONDELL. And after we have had 45 minutes of debate on each side, at the expiration of which time the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and all amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The President having vetoed this bill and sent it back, and it having been reconsidered by the committee——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is a new bill. It has not been vetoed by the President.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, if it is a new bill, I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that it occupies the same position as if it had never been passed, and therefore it would have to be read in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is the reason the gentleman asked unanimous consent to dispense with it; otherwise it is not required.

Mr. BLANTON. Can that be waived by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to modify my request. I wish to state first that the bill as presented by the committee is exactly the bill that was agreed to, except section 8, which has been eliminated.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. This matter could be very much simplified, and I think this side of the House, so far as I know, would be glad to go on and pass the bill, if you will give an opportunity to the gentleman from Tennessee to offer an amendment that is out of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That we will not do. The gentleman, of course, can offer an amendment that is in order, or he can offer one that is out of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I make the request that the legislative bill be taken up for immediate consideration; that it be considered in the House; that the time be divided, 45 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi and 30 minutes to be controlled by myself. And at the expiration of that time the previous question be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the legislative bill be taken up for consideration in the House, that debate be limited to one hour and a quarter, 45 minutes of which shall be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Indiana, and that at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. GARNER. And it will not be necessary to read the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We will make that request later.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In the event that I should be accorded time by the gentleman from Mississippi under this agreement, will I be permitted in that time to offer an amendment and have it pending?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly the gentleman would have the right to offer the amendment for the consideration of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. During general debate?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no general debate, the request is to consider the bill as though it was on the House Calendar in the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will yield, I suggest that he incorporate in that request that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from Indiana object to the Clerk reading this bill scientifically, if it has to be read, for he knows how to read it in that way and it takes only a few minutes?

The SPEAKER. The bill will have to be read unless there is further agreement.

Mr. SISSON. As I understand, the gentleman from Tennessee will have the right to offer his amendment at any time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. At any time when he has the floor.

Mr. SISSON. At any time during the 45 minutes on this side. The amendment, if in order, would be voted upon at the expiration of the time, and if it is not in order it would be ruled out of order.

The SPEAKER. That would be the effect. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if this bill as now reported is the identical bill that went to the President with section 8 which the President vetoed left out?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is exactly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill, under the circumstances, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi for 45 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the independence of America was achieved under the leadership of George Washington. The Union of the States was made everlasting under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln. Woodrow Wilson led the Nation to victory through a crisis without any parallel in the history of the world. [Applause.] It would seem that any President called to the leadership of the American people during a time so tragic ought to have received the undivided support of all Americans until his task was finished. Unfortunately, as I believe, for the future of America this undivided support was denied to Mr. Wilson. It is true that while the war was on, Congress, Democratic by a small majority, passed such legislation as the President deemed necessary for the winning of the war, but we all remember the complaints which came from the Republican side of this Chamber, the unsuppressed criticism of the committee room, and the silence with which his great appeals were received on one side of this Chamber.

In the closing chapters of the great tragedy now being written, no man should complain if the whole truth is told.

It was agreed that the peace treaty should be written at Versailles. The representatives of the nations, who met at Versailles, constituted the most powerful assembly of men ever called together to shape the future of mankind. The task which confronted them, in one way or another, affected the destiny of all nations, of all peoples. It was at once announced that the premiers of the allied countries would probably be their representatives. The most powerful man of France is not the President but the premier. The most powerful man of Great Britain is not her King but her premier. The same is true of Italy. Thus it was understood that the highest, most powerful, and influential officials of these nations would sit in the council of Versailles to represent them.

But when the announcement came that President Wilson would represent America a storm of Republican criticism at once appeared in the public print. Of course, we all know that, under our Constitution, the President is invested with most of the powers exercised by the premiers of other great democracies. We have no premier in America, unless the President himself is the premier. Just why anyone should wish to criticize the President because he decided to attend the conference at Versailles as one of America's representatives is hard to understand; yet almost immediately after the announcement was made all manner of criticism appeared. Republican politicians declared that if the President attended, the world must know in advance that he had been repudiated in the November election by the American people. It was even charged that he had no moral right to attend as our representative, because a Republican Congress had been elected. Notwithstanding his great work during the war, the charge was made that he had already been repudiated by his own people.

Think of that, if you please, Mr. Speaker. Here was the President of the United States, a man twice elected to that high office, charged with a solemn duty under the Constitution, and yet when he proposes to discharge that duty his political opponents immediately inaugurate a campaign to discredit him in the esteem of all the other nations of the world. There may be a parallel for this, but I believe no parallel exists. Even before the President stepped aboard the ship in New York Harbor to start his momentous journey the charge was made by certain Republican politicians that he had no right to speak for the American people. The truth of this can not be denied. No man will attempt to deny it; and yet, even now, when one looks back and considers some of the things that were said about the President before he sailed for Europe one wonders how any man calling himself an American could have been willing to so attempt to discount and weaken the power and influence of our own President.

The task confronting the President was so onerous, so solemn, so oppressive, so fraught with results affecting the destiny of the human race that it would seem any President placed in the position of Mr. Wilson ought in justice to have received the undivided support of his people. It was no time to play politics, and any attempt to even weaken the influence of the President ought to have been frowned upon with contempt by every decent American; but this support, which ought to have been united, this support which ought to have been generously given, was denied to Mr. Wilson. It is absolutely true that he was shot in the back by some of his own people as he was leaving America on the greatest mission abroad ever undertaken by an American. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, men do not do desperate things without strong reason, and I charge here and now that these contemptible attacks upon President Wilson before and during the Versailles conference were made for one purpose only, to wit, to promote the prospect of Republican success in the coming elections.

Surely there are times, Mr. Speaker, when the official head of a nation is in fairness entitled to the sincere, generous support of all the people of such nation. There are times when good men are glad to discard all political differences. There are times when every decent Democrat is proud to follow a Republican President, when every decent Republican is proud to follow a Democratic President. During every hour President Wilson spent in Europe he was entitled to such unstinted support, but it seemed that certain Republican politicians, even during that critical period, thought more of party success than they did of the great struggle to make war between nations less probable. Let us not forget this: Mr. Wilson was not only President, he was also the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and the war was still on. The attacks on him were just as unwarranted as the attack of a soldier on his commander during battle. [Applause.] I remember well the great message of the President to Congress in which he announced to the world the conditions upon which America would agree to end the war.

Suppose some Member of this body had then attempted to discredit the President by announcing that the President did not speak for America, that he did not in that message truly represent the sentiments of the American people; what do you suppose would have happened? How do you suppose such an announcement would have been received by this House and the American people? And yet Mr. Wilson was just as truly America's representative in Europe as he was on the day he delivered that message.

Let us go one step further, Mr. Speaker, in developing the plan to weaken the power and influence of this great man. What happened here? On June 9, 1919, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] introduced the following resolution:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 105) relating to the powers and duties of the office of President.

Resolved, etc., That any absence of the President from the limits of the United States for a period exceeding 24 hours is hereby declared to be inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office, and such inability shall terminate upon the actual return of the President to the seat of the government of the United States. During the period of said inability the Vice President shall act as President, with full power and authority to discharge the duties of said office.

And on July 9, 1919, I regret to say the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the genial, kind-hearted chairman of the Committee on Rules, felt constrained to introduce the following bill:

A bill (H. R. 7114) amending chapter 28, United States Statutes at Large, being "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of government of the United States," approved July 16, 1790.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for the President of the United States, during the term of his office, to absent himself from the territorial jurisdiction of the United States or to perform the duties of his office at any other place than at the seat of government established by the "Act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of government of the United States," approved July 16, 1790, to which this act is an amendment.

Perhaps the most charitable comment to be made upon the foregoing documents is that both died very early in the legislative process—died for lack of support. Be it said to the credit of the gentlemen who introduced these measures, apparently they did not expect favorable action, and, be it said to the credit of this House, neither received a favorable report from any committee. No member of the British Parliament introduced any such bill or resolution reflecting upon Mr. Lloyd-George. No Frenchman sought in this way or any similar way to weaken the influence of Mr. Clemenceau. No Italian sought in this way to lessen the influence of the Italian premier. But here in this body such measures were introduced, and, whether prepared for such purpose or not, the effect was to make the task of Mr. Wilson more difficult.

Mr. Speaker, the course of America during this war, under the guiding hand of President Wilson, had won the admiration of the entire world. By his wise, prudent course, by his great appeals, which will live forever, it is positively true he brought the war to an end sooner than the most hopeful American thought possible. His messages to Congress were really messages to the whole world. The influence for good of those messages was felt and acknowledged by men of all nations. They filled the American soldier—who in truth won the war—with enthusiasm, but they did more than this: The words of this great man so influenced the German soldier that he refused to fight. Mr. Speaker, who will deny this?

Against this man, who had led America to heights never attained before, the bill and resolution I have read were directed. While he was still striving for a just, righteous treaty one Republican leader would by resolution declare the presidential office vacated, and another Republican leader would by act of Congress declare unlawful even the necessary absence of the President from the United States. The bill meant nothing if it did not mean to rebuke the President for going to France.

Can you think of anything more unfair? Do you think the people of America approve such treatment of the President? Do you think the great body of independent American voters, who love fair play even in politics, will tolerate such treatment of the President?

But this is not all. After the President returned to America another Republican leader actually introduced a resolution to investigate the tokens of appreciation given to the President while in Europe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the efforts here and in other places to discredit the President may not have been a conspiracy wherein certain men agreed that one shall do one thing and another shall do another thing, with a common end in view, to wit, to weaken the influence of Mr. Wilson as the American President; but I charge here and now the whole scheme was in effect a conspiracy, because this is the only theory which will explain and square with the course pursued by certain Republican leaders through the long months during which the treaty was pending. The story is an oft-told tale of which every fair-minded American ought to be ashamed. I believe most of them are, whether they call themselves Republicans or Democrats. I make this charge also: The effort to foil and defeat and humiliate this great man had the support of every hyphenated, false American and every German sympathizer in this country to the last man.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I come to one phase of this conspiracy which I wish I could forget. All will agree, even his most bitter enemy, that the President made a noble fight for his ideals. Nor will any decent man deny that the ideals cherished by the President are the very highest. Suddenly the end came. The President was stricken down. He had declared that he was willing to die for those ideals, and his words were almost prophetic with truth. So far as the record shows, during the long months of his illness there was hardly a word of sympathy from the opposition. At first it was intimated that the President really was not sick, that he was simply shamming, that he had gotten cold feet, that he wanted to quit. The statement of his physicians was not accepted. And it is actually true that when one day in this House a Republican leader, summing up an attack upon the course of the President, used the words, "and that is when he got sick," to the everlasting shame of the Republican majority in this Chamber the RECORD shows the statement was applauded. There are men in this Chamber now who were present and know that the RECORD speaks the truth.

When it became certain that the President had been sorely stricken the conspirators changed tactics. The charge was made that the physicians of the President were concealing the truth. It was openly intimated that he did not have the capacity to attend to the public business. Then came the most brutal of all the many brutal acts leveled against this world leader. A representative of those who opposed the President must be sent to his bedside to ascertain just what the condition of the President was, with instructions to report within 48 hours. The doctors attending the President were posting a daily bulletin. They said his mind was clear as a bell. There was not even a suggestion in any bulletin that he was not competent to attend to the public business, but this did not satisfy.

The opposition demanded the right to send one of their number, of their own selection, into the sick room of the President with peremptory instructions to report within 48 hours. I pause here and now to say I do not believe there is any Member in this Chamber willing to stand up and approve such action. I believe it is safe to say that in all the history of American politics, during the hour of the highest passion, no President of the United States has ever been treated in so brutal a manner. It never seemed to have occurred to any Republican how decent it would have been to introduce and pass a resolution of sympathy, coupled with a declaration of intention, to support the President as far as consistent, disavowing any purpose to embarrass. Such a resolution would have been worthy of a generous opposition scorning any tactics which are not fair.

President Garfield was shot in the Pennsylvania Railroad Station. During the weeks he lingered no man can recall anything but consideration and sympathy from the opposition in Congress. The great, kind-hearted, noble McKinley was shot in Buffalo. When the news was flashed over the wires a Nation broke down in tears. I remember well how the news was received in the village where I live. The courthouse bell was rung, in a short while the court-room chamber was filled. Almost every person present politically differed from Mr. McKinley, but I can truthfully say I never, on any occasion, heard more sincere expressions of sympathy and regret. A telegram was sent to Mrs. McKinley immediately, and that telegram carried a prayer to God that the President would be permitted to live.

How different the treatment accorded to President Wilson, all for political reasons. No man will deny the high purpose of the President. Every act of his presidential career has been intended for the betterment of mankind, but when he led the Democratic Party to power he committed an unpardonable sin against certain Republican politicians who had come to believe that they, and they alone, were invested with a sort of divine right to shape the destiny of America. So when nothing else would accomplish the purpose, when every effort to break the influence of the President had failed, fearing another victory under his leadership a combination launched a campaign to ruin this great man in the White House. God forgive them, Mr. Speaker, they know not what they do. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] made a statement that the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] bore date of July 9, 1919, while the President was in France. The President addressed the Senate on the treaty July 10, so that he must have made a very rapid trip home.

Mr. TINCHER. If the gentleman will allow me, President Wilson arrived at the Union Station in Washington July 8 at 7.45 p. m., before the resolution of my colleague from Kansas was introduced.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last the esteemed Washington Post contained an editorial under the caption of "The failure to retrench," in which the Post proceeded to take Congress to task on the ground that it had not properly retrenched governmental expenditures. The Post insisted that the Congress had yielded to the importunities of departmental officials and retained unnecessary clerks in the departments.

Really the world do move. There is some hope when a Washington newspaper admits that there are unnecessary clerks in the departments in Washington. [Applause.] There is some hope when Washington newspapers begin to take us to task for not sufficiently reducing the unnecessarily large clerical force here. But we did a pretty fair job in that direction. We provided for the dismissal of some 20,000 clerks in connection with the passage of the legislative bill. We would have done better if the departments had allowed us to do so, for it is a fact that Congress does and must, to some extent at least, follow the recommendations of the heads of departments. We know, as the Post says, they have "no concern for economy." We have heard and believe that, as the Post says, "in certain offices the clerks are made to work fictitious correspondence in order to convince Congress that a public need is met"; but even in the face of as damaging an indictment of the responsible heads of government under this administration as that from a newspaper generally friendly to the administration the Congress can not wholly ignore the demands of the departments for clerks, backed by the strongest kind of statement that they are all needed. We have trimmed and cut the estimates as they never were cut before, nearly a billion in the first session, nearly a billion and a half in this—almost two and a half billions below the estimates so far in this Congress, and yet the Post is not happy. Well, I am not complaining, for I want the Post to help us economize right now.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Post is on the side of economy, because I want to give this great newspaper right now an opportunity to help retrench. So far every appropriation for the ordinary civil establishments of the Government and the ordinary peace operations of the Government has been cut to the bone, except that as the Post insists we may not have reduced clerical forces here in Washington as much as we should. We are, however, retrenching in every direction in those things that appertain to peace and peaceful development. If we have failed to fully realize a reduction, where have we failed? As the Army and Navy and fortifications bills passed this House they carried $819,000,000, and in another body those three bills were increased by more than $80,000,000, and that is the situation at this time. I call upon the Washington Post and all other agencies having to do with public opinion in the Capital and elsewhere to help us save this $80,000,000. The Post is disturbed because we have not reduced the number of clerks in Washington sufficiently. We have reduced them until the departments complain bitterly, but have not reduced them as much as we could have done without injury to the public service, in my opinion; but if we were to take every clerk out of every department in Washington that anybody has suggested is unnecessary, and then cut out every civil employee elsewhere that the Post or anyone else deems superfluous, we would not save more than four or five or six or, at the outside, ten million dollars. The very utmost that could be done in that direction, were every civil bureau and employment that may reasonably be questioned dispensed with, would effect a saving of less than $10,000,000; and were we to dispense only with those the Post probably has in mind the saving would be not over three or four million dollars. Here are expenditures I have referred to for war purposes, war services, running well toward a billion dollars, and the Senate increases the bills by nearly $100,000,000 more. Will the Post and will these other great newspapers use their mighty influence to help the House pare down those increases and prevent their being adopted?

For the first time in many years we have a Congress without a pork-barrel bill of any sort or kind. [Applause.] There is no public-building bill. The river and harbor bill was trimmed to the very bone, with no pork-barrel items.

The sums carried were sufficient as the bill passed the House to take care of all of the rivers and harbors that have commerce and water. It provided not a cent for the shallow runs or the dusty watercourses anywhere. That bill was doubled elsewhere. Will the Post and will these other great newspaper agencies help us to keep the river and harbor bill clean, porkless, down to a point where the interests of the country are cared for and yet without waste and extravagance?

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALLINGER). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. Here is a great opportunity to save $80,000,000 in the two war bills. The naval bill was $25,000,000 larger than it ought to have been when it passed the House. It was increased by over $40,000,000 in the Senate. We want public opinion back of us to save this extravagant waste of public money. The Army bill has just been reported with over $40,000,000 of increase. We want the white light of publicity, and we want the benefit of public opinion to help us head off that extravagance. We want to provide liberally for both of these services, but we think we have done so when we appropriate nearly three times as much as before the war.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I call on the Post and all others who have influence in molding public opinion to help us save right here and now $100,000,000 on the Army bill, on the naval bill, and on the river and harbor bill. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. Does the gentleman mean to say that when he is blocking the passage of a river and harbor bill he is not interfering with transportation which is so much needed in this country at this time?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows perfectly well that nobody is blocking the passage of the river and harbor bill, and when the gentleman interrupts me to make that statement, he does so to make a statement that is not warranted or justified.

Nobody is blocking the passage of the river and harbor bill. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has been ill, very ill, at his home in Iowa; he is either on his way here or he will have started for Washington within the next two or three days. The river and harbor bill will be in conference as soon as he gets here. I will say to the gentleman frankly that while I want a river and harbor bill to pass, and I am anxious to have it pass and hope and expect that it will be passed, I would rather not have any river and harbor bill at all than to have one carrying $24,000,000. If anyone has been getting in the way of the passage of a river and harbor bill, it is those who want to increase it out of all reason. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am invoking the aid of all those people who believe honestly in economy to help us economize.

Mr. LAZARO. Does the gentleman believe it is sound economy not to pay the Navy personnel more than they are being paid, when he knows we are losing our best men to-day, and that it is impossible to man the ships that we have already built?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman wants an answer to a question of that sort, he better ask it of the President. Has the gentleman failed to realize that the House and the Senate have both passed bills increasing the pay of the Navy and the Army personnel and that the bill is now before the President for his signature?

Mr. LAZARO. I admit that.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield further if the gentleman has no better information with regard to the business before the House than is indicated by that question. I can not yield to him any further.

Mr. LAZARO. But what was the gentleman's position upon that bill? I am aware of the status of the bill, but what was the gentleman's position on that bill? I heard the gentleman speak on that bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman now speaking made it possible to have that bill considered here. It was considered, and it passed both House and Senate, and it added in addition to these sums that I have mentioned about $50,000,000 per annum to the war-service burden of the Nation. In other words, our total war-purpose expenditure if the proposed increases are adopted will be approximately $1,000,000,000, a sum equal to the entire expense of the Government for all purposes annually prior to the European war, and this sum, great as it is, is over half a billion below the estimates for these services. We want the minority to join the majority in helping us keep down these expenditures. We appeal to the newspapers of the country to help. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Let no one who is honestly for economy excuse these proposed increases on the ground that we must in any event and at any cost have a good Army and a strong Navy. I freely admit all that, but people do not realize how these expenditures are growing. We proposed for the defense services as the bill passed the House sums that took care of every need of the services and almost three times our prewar expense; surely that ought to be enough. As for the river and harbor bill we should have a decent, porkless bill or none at all.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], with his usual force and eloquence, has taken the Washington Post to task on account of an editorial which appeared in that newspaper on Saturday last criticizing the Congress for its failure to retrench expenditures, as the public generally expected. I am not much surprised at the resentment shown by the gentleman from Wyoming, especially since this criticism comes from a newspaper which everyone knows ordinarily has been very partial to the majority side of the House. The trouble is that the gentleman from Wyoming and other distinguished gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber lost no opportunity during the extra session of Congress and also during this session of Congress, both in season and out of season, to proclaim to the public just what they were going to do toward reducing and retrenching the expenditures of the Government.

But I fancy, as time rolls on and as the public, which has been taught by those gentlemen to expect so much, ascertains that there has not been that great reduction, in comparison with the expenditures of the Government before the war, which they were led to believe would be made, that the gentleman will have a good many more editorials, and, possibly, many more from papers of his own political persuasion, to answer before the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to discuss for a few moments an amendment which I propose to offer to the pending legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which is before the House for the second time this session. It is well that we should stop and inquire just what the situation is going to be if this bill passes the Congress and becomes a law as it is presented. In March, 1919, a provision was adopted upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year which provided that no journals, periodicals, magazines, or other publications which were not authorized specifically by the Congress should be continued, except that during the time between the date of the passage of that law and the adjournment of the next regular session of the Congress the Joint Committee on Printing should, in its discretion, have the right to authorize the issuance of any publication not authorized by law. Now, it is perfectly clear from the terms of that provision that the Congress which adopted it expected that the Congress, before the adjournment of the next regular session of the Congress, which is the present session, would take up the matter and pass some legislation on the subject prescribing what publications should be issued. We have had an extra session of Congress since that time, beginning on May the 19th, 1919. We have now been in regular session of Congress for something like six months. We are now approaching, so some say, the close of this regular session; and if no legislation is enacted between now and the close of this session, if this bill becomes a law as it is written, the Government will be in the situation at the adjournment of this session of the Congress of not being able to issue any of the Government publications, periodicals, and documents which it has been issuing for some time past.

That includes a number of very valuable, important, and useful publications in the Agricultural Department, such as the Crop Reporter, such as the Experimental Station Reporter, such as the weather reports, and other publications to which I could refer. It includes a number of important publications of the Interior Department relating to the Geological Survey and Reclamation Service and other activities of that department. It includes a number of bulletins and publications issued by the Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Treasury, in fact, all the departments of this Government, because it so happens that there were being published under the authority of appropriations made by Congress, but not specifically authorized by law, a great number of Government documents. Now, certainly, it seems to me, we do not want to put ourselves in the position of failing to legislate on this matter so that bulletins and publications, such as I have referred to, will cease at the adjournment of this Congress. No one, I am sure, wants to stop the issuance of the Weather Bulletin, and I am sure there is no one who wishes to stop the issuance of the Crop Reporter and those valuable agricultural bulletins that are issued from the Department of Agriculture, and yet if this bill becomes a law as it is presented here that will be the result, unless additional legislation is passed later on. Some one has said if that be the case, the President is responsible, because he saw fit to veto the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill the other day. You will recall the reasons he gave for his veto. That bill undertook to amend the law to which I referred and to give to the Joint Committee on Printing the absolute and permanent authority to censor and to veto the right of any executive department to issue any form of publication, even though Congress has made an appropriation for it, unless it was specifically authorized by law. Now, it seems to me that if we fail to adopt an amendment to this bill, if this Congress adjourns without adopting some legislation authorizing the publication of these important documents, that Congress can not escape the responsibility. It does not lie at the door of the administration, but it lies at the door of this Congress, because we have been in session since May 19, 1919, and failed to function on the matter. We are in session now and we can easily pass legislation upon this bill, or, failing in that, a bill can be brought in which will remedy this matter and take care of what ought to be taken care of. Now, I want to say this: No member of the executive branch of this Government questions the right of the Congress for one moment to limit the executive departments in the publication of bulletins or denies that it has the clear right to limit them. We have the clear right to say what bulletins shall be issued. That we can do either expressly by law or we can do so by withholding appropriations for that purpose, and no member of the administration will raise any question as to the right of the Congress to do that, but I seriously question the right of Congress to make an appropriation for publications and then delegate to a joint committee, if you please, the right to say whether or not the appropriation shall be used in the publication of documents, bulletins, magazines, and periodicals which the executive heads think are important and of interest to the country.

Now, the amendment which I propose to offer to this bill some say is subject to a point of order; but if it is I hope that no one will make it. I think I can absolutely guarantee that no one will make the point of order upon this side of the Chamber, and I hope no one upon that side of the Chamber will make a point of order against it, but that the House will be allowed to pass upon it and say whether or not we should include it in this bill. It provides simply for a commission on printing, to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is at the head of our fiscal affairs, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Give me three minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. I will yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That commission is given authority, and it is made its duty, to devise measures to prevent duplication and to prevent delay in the issuance of Government publications. In addition to that, the commission is given the authority and the power when a publication is not authorized specifically by the Congress to prohibit any executive head or any administrative branch of this Government from the issuing of such document, periodical, or magazine if in their judgment it should not be done.

Now, some say that that will not cut out all of this waste and extravagance of which we hear so much; but certainly, gentlemen, it goes further than we have gone in the past, and I believe that it will result in cutting out a great deal of duplication and will result in the prevention of the publication of a great many unnecessary documents. In other words, the commission on printing under the amendment I offer will be given exactly the same authority that the amendment which was proposed in the Senate sought to confer on the Committee on Printing; and I submit that if we pass this amendment we can not be held open to the charge, which I think was justly laid at the door of Congress, that it is seeking to encroach upon the executive function and the constitutional rights of the executive branch of our Government.

And, Mr. Speaker, in my time I wish to have this amendment read, and that it may be considered as pending.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You will have to offer it before the discussion is over, because then the previous question will be ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding a new section, as follows: "That section 11 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 11. That there is hereby created a commission on printing composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, who shall have power to adopt and employ such measures as in their discretion may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect, delay, duplication, or waste in the public printing and binding and in the distribution of Government publications: Provided, That hereafter no journal, magazine, periodical, or other similar publication not specifically authorized by law, shall be printed and issued by any branch or officer of the Government service unless the same shall be authorized by the commission on printing: Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1919, all printing, binding, and blank-book work for Congress, the Executive office, the judiciary, and every executive department, independent office, and establishment of the Government, shall be done at the Government Printing Office, except such classes of work as shall be deemed by the said commission on printing to be urgent or necessary to have done elsewhere than in the District of Columbia for the exclusive use of any field service of the executive branch of the Government outside of said district.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing four short letters concerning my record in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing four letters. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, the votes of Congressmen are oftentimes misrepresented, and I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting four letters written upon my record as a Member of Congress, as follows:

CUYAHOGA COUNTY DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Cleveland, Ohio, September 12, 1918.

MY DEAR SIR: The Democratic organization of Cuyahoga County in this campaign proposes to do its utmost in support of the President and his war program. It is a great deal more important that the hands of the Government be upheld than that anyone should be elected to office because he happens to be a member of any political party. At the same time it is only fair to assume that the President can count more strongly upon help of the kind he needs from members of his own party than any other.

* * * We did not present a candidate against Congressman EMERSON, Republican, in the twenty-second district, because his record has been one of loyalty.

* * * * * * *

Yours, sincerely,

THE DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
W. A. GREENLUND, Acting Chairman.

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION,
May 22, 1919.

Hon. HENRY I. EMERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. EMERSON: On behalf of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, with branches in every State of the American Union, we are writing to express, in a measure, the deep gratitude which all members of our organization feel toward you for standing loyally by the cause of political equality and the principles of true democracy in giving your support to the Federal amendment for woman suffrage when it was voted upon in the House of Representatives on the 21st day of May.

Very truly, yours,

CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT,
President.
ANNA HOWARD SHAW,
Honorary President.
HELEN H. GARDENER,
Fifth Vice President.
MAUD WOOD PARK,
Chairman Congressional Committee.

OHIO ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE,
July 30, 1919.

Hon. HENRY I. EMERSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I note from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD your vote recorded against recommitting H. R. 6810, the prohibition-enforcement bill, and your vote favorable to its passage.

In behalf of the people of your district and of the State of Ohio, I desire to thank you for your stand on this question. Your district recorded a dry majority at the election in Ohio last year, as also did the State, by 25,759. Notwithstanding this fact, some Members from Ohio voted against the enforcement code and, in my opinion, wholly disregarded the mandate of the people of the State.

I would personally appreciate it if you would bring influence to bear on the Senators from this State to promptly act in the matter.

Thanking you for your assistance and your vote, I am,

Respectfully,

J. A. WHITE, Superintendent.

OHIO ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE,
December 20, 1917.

Hon. HENRY I. EMERSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. EMERSON: I sat in the gallery of the National House of Representatives on last Monday and listened to the debate and heard the recording of the votes of the Members to submit the national amendment. I was very much pleased to hear your name recorded in favor of submitting the amendment, thereby giving the people an opportunity to amend their Constitution, if they so desire.

On behalf of the organization that I represent in this State, I thank you for voting affirmatively on the resolution. Your vote is an expression that you are willing to trust the people on this proposition. As you know, the Senate has concurred in the House amendments, and the resolution will now be submitted in the respective legislatures of the States.

Thanking you for responding to this enlightened public sentiment, I am,

Very respectfully, J. A. WHITE, Superintendent.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, of course, I accept the correction of the gentleman from Kansas that at the time the resolution of the gentleman from Kansas was introduced the President was here in this city, but the unfair effect there is nevertheless the same, because the work on the treaty had not been completed. And I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the time has come when we ought to quit camouflaging on the question of surplus and unnecessary idle clerks in the Government. Not a single clerk has gone home from Washington yet, unless they were tired of the work and voluntarily quit. There have been some separations from some departments, but immediately they have been transferred to some other department and are still on the pay roll.

The distinguished leader of the Republican Party [Mr. MONDELL] said a moment ago, in congratulating the Sixty-sixth Congress and the Republican majority, that about 20,000 clerks were separated from the roll by this bill, which has not yet passed and not yet become a law. This bill nowhere, not by a single line or word in it, separates a single clerk from the pay roll. It is true it has reduced some appropriations, but the departments find a way to keep the clerks and then come in and ask deficiency appropriation measures later, which always pass without question by this Congress. If you want to separate these 40,000 useless, idle, unnecessary parasites from the pay roll, you have got to pass some kind of directive legislation to the departments of this Government, compelling them to send these idle clerks home, and you must quit camouflaging, because I am not going to let you mislead the people.

Here are great big sheets issued by the Civil Service Commission reciting job after job that they are holding examinations for in the next month, jobs with salaries up to $2,500 a year and $240 bonus additional.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not yet. I regret that I can not, just now. Here is one issued under the date of May, 1920, and you can read the headline, "Wanted," almost half a block away, advertising for people to take the civil-service examination and come into the service. Here is another one advertising examinations for May 7 and June 14, 1920. Here is another one advertising examinations as late as June 9, 1920. Here is another one advertising examinations for May 5, 6, 7, and June 9, 10, and 11, 1920, for jobs up to $2,500, with $240 bonus. Here is another one advertising examinations for May 19, 1920. That is the date you Republicans came into power in this House. You ought to celebrate that date by stopping these examinations advertised by the Civil Service Commission, and direct these departments to send these 40,000 idle, unnecessary, useless clerks to their homes and put them back into useful production of the country, instead of being parasites here in the Nation's Capital.

Here is another one advertising examinations for June 23 and August 18 and October 20, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I have some others here, but I did not get to them, all issued by the Civil Service Commission of this Government.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I believe there is but one more speech on this side.

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe I have anyone else who wishes to speak. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five and one-half minutes remaining.

Mr. SISSON. I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] if he desires it. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] desires to ask him a question.

Mr. McKEOWN. I wanted to say to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with his proposition to reduce the number of clerks here in Washington; but the gentleman should remember that these examinations are held in order that other States may supply their quota. The quota of my State, Oklahoma, for instance, is very much less than that of any other State in the Union, and if the examinations that the gentleman refers to are not permitted to continue we will not be able to fill our quota.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to take the balance of my time, two minutes, and tell you Republican colleagues why you will not separate these idle clerks from the Government pay roll. It is because officials of the American Federation of Labor come here day after day and sit up there in the gallery and have us card indexed, and when you do not obey their commands they execute their threats by going into our districts and putting out of Congress men voting against their demands. They will not let you separate these clerks from the Government pay roll. They have already threatened that if we do it they will separate us from our jobs, and it is your jobs and the love of your positions that prevent you from sending these idle people back to where they belong. How will you answer your people when you go home? [Applause.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KING. I wanted to make a poll of the gallery up there to see if there are any Members of the American Federation of Labor sitting up there.

Mr. BLANTON. There are some of them up there. They are always there.

Mr. KING. No; those are Baptists. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. There are some Baptists up there, thank God, and I wish there were more of them. But they are different kind of people from these gallery watchers of the American Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to confine my remarks as nearly as I can to the matter immediately before us. I think it is important on the part of the Members of this House to know the present situation and the provision of the law that was in control and operation before the President vetoed this measure, and I want to point out, if I can briefly, what change was made by this proposed legislation, objection to which has been made by the President and upon which he based his veto.

The law existing in the past, if you please, approved in March, 1919, was presented by the legislative, executive, and judicial subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and it was carried on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and, if I mistake not, it was presented to the House by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It came by way of a conference report as a Senate amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But it was agreed to. The gentleman from Tennessee was on the conference, and he knew then what the law is, and what it has been ever since. The President of the United States knew then what it was, and certainly he should have been cognizant of it ever since.

The proposed amendment was just simply an extension made necessary, if you please, by the abuses practiced by the very men whom the gentleman now by his amendment would have appointed as a commission to take control and have charge of this matter. But the jurisdiction was given to the Joint Committee on Printing, composed of Members of this House and of the Senate, in order that they might have control over the publications asked for by these various bureaus. They eliminated 111 from the 266 that were being printed at the expense of the Government.

What happened? Immediately these gentlemen got a lot of multigraphing machines and manifolding machines, and they proceeded to get out on their machines the same stuff that they were prohibited from getting out by the action of this joint committee, and they got it out at an increased cost over what it had been before.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order that this subterfuge should not be pursued further, we have put in the last proviso making it apply to these multigraphing and manifolding processes as to documents that are not official. It had nothing whatever to do with the things that were official. What happened? The President had for the first time called our attention to the fact that this was an encroachment upon his prerogatives as an Executive, and for the first time questioned the constitutionality of the provision. No one who is posted on the legislation of this country, no one who prides himself on his knowledge as to what is constitutional and what is unconstitutional legislation can for one moment contend that this was an infringement upon the President's prerogatives under the Constitution.

No one can question the constitutionality or the advisability of such a proceeding, because if it were unconstitutional this Congress would be powerless to put a limitation upon any appropriation that it makes. There is scarcely any appropriation bill that does not contain some limitation upon it. We have found it necessary to impose limitations in these days, especially since the beginning of the war, and to put on limitations on appropriations to the effect that salaries shall not be beyond a certain figure. With equal propriety the President of the United States could say to this Congress that it is our business, and our business solely, to appropriate money for the payment of these salaries, but that we have no right to say to the executive departments that they shall be limited in that expenditure. We have put limitations on the purchase of ground, to the effect that purchases shall not exceed a certain amount. Yet we put the purchasing power in the hands of some one of these executive departments. With the same propriety the executive department might say that, although we have the right to appropriate the money, we have no right to place a limitation upon the expenditure thereof. If there were no limitations placed on legislation by the Congress of the United States, we would be groaning under greater debts than we are groaning under to-day, and taxes consequently would be even more onerous than they are.

It was contended, if you please, and wisely so, by the gentlemen who have referred to this provision that it should be continuous, not that it should cease with the bill or with the law to which it was attached. It has this limiting clause in it, the words—

> But such publications as are now being printed without specific authority from Congress may, in the discretion of the Joint Committee on Printing, be continued until the close of the next regular session of Congress, when, if authority for their continuance is not granted by Congress, they shall not thereafter be printed.

In other words, these publications shall not thereafter be printed if authority for their continuance is not granted by Congress. They put that language in there because of the abuse that was being constantly practiced, which was a continually growing abuse.

Now, then, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was wise in accepting this provision; and I want to congratulate the gentlemen who suggested it, by reason of their experience, on the fact that they found out that there were 111 of these useless publications that every Member of this Congress throws into the wastebasket every morning, and which the printing establishments all over this country receive and never even open, but chuck into the wastebasket. I say it was wise then, and it is wise now; and yet it can be, and will be, entirely subverted, if you please, if you should adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee. Why? Because he suggests the creation of a commission composed of these very same executive heads who had been guilty of these abuses, every one of them. No; I hope, and I believe every man here hopes, that the Joint Committee on Printing will never give up or relinquish to an executive department that which is theirs, that which belongs to the Congress of the United States, and in the application of which saves millions of dollars to the taxpayers each year.

The Congress of the United States first established this printing business and for a long time it was limited to the printing of Congress, but afterwards in the interest of economy the executive heads were authorized to have their printing done by the Congressional Printer. Before this they had been having it done here, there, and yonder, and it resulted in a great loss and added expenditure. But the Congress of the United States never surrendered any jurisdiction over printing when they consented to bureau printing. The Government Printing Office was created by the Congress, equipped with all the necessary machinery to do the printing of this country. But there was a limitation upon that. That was an executive function; there was no objection coming from the President of the United States at that time and there should be none now. I can not help but believe that the President of the United States was illy advised, if he was advised at all, about this thing. Some of those people who have only a selfish interest imposed upon him if they saw him with reference to this thing. If we can not be charitable and grant that as his excuse, then the only other reason that we can imagine for his extraordinary action is that he is obsessed with the idea that the only function of Congress is to pass appropriations, and that it is the right of the executive branch to expend without let or hindrance the appropriations that are made.

But I wish to say to the Congress of the United States, and I wish to say to the people of the United States, that if they would have their best interests guarded they will never consent to surrender the jurisdiction of the Congress not only over the publications pertaining to Congress but publications that pertain to all other printing bureaus. By reason of the action of the Joint Committee on Printing, by reason of their eliminating 111 publications, they have saved the taxpayers of the country $1,200,000 annually, and there is more that may be done in this direction. It was not the purpose, and is not now the purpose, of the Joint Committee on Printing to cripple any of these publications that are essential and that are useful. But they propose, knowing as they do the abuses that have been and are now being practiced, to put an end to those abuses if permitted to do so, and if the President persists in vetoing this purpose he must also assume the responsibility for the waste that will follow.

If I had my way about it, in order that the President might know the situation, in order that if he has been imposed upon he may have an opportunity to correct his mistake, that he has certainly made, I would send the bill back to him exactly as it was when he vetoed it.

Now, what is the situation? This measure will pass with section 8 eliminated, and unless some provision is made, unless there is some affirmative legislation passed between now and the 1st of July, all these publications, the good as well as the bad, will cease under the provision of the law passed by Congress and reported by the committee of which the gentleman from Tennessee was chairman. I hope and believe that in the wisdom of this body and those upon the other side some affirmative legislation will be had. It must be had in order that these good publications may be continued, and that provision will be made for the continuous supervision and jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States over their publication. It is this body that is saving the money that is being saved in this country. There is not a single bureau of this Government as it is administered to-day that is showing any inclination to save a dollar. As has been suggested by one who has observed legislation as a Member of this House [Mr. MANN of Illinois] for more than a quarter of a century, if you create one of these bureaus, you will find that they are constantly desiring to expand in numbers employed and in expenditures. All of these many emergency bureaus created during the war, and which were supposed to cease when the armistice was signed, come before us and are continuing to come and try to convince us of the absolute necessity of continuing them as peace-time bureaus. Some of them go so far as to ask increased appropriations for an increased force. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that if the committee that has this legislation in charge has its way about it, and if the law written in the bill is carried out whereby no other legislation can be had granting further appropriations for the employment of clerks, there will be more than 20,000 go away on the 1st of July.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the departments just keep them on expecting a deficiency law, will the gentleman vote with me to send the direct mandatory to them to send them home?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will vote against any deficiency that is designed to keep one clerk here more than is absolutely essential to prosecute the public business. There are now 21,000 employees in the clerical office in the War Department in this city. When this bill goes into effect after the 1st of July, unless by some subterfuge the purpose of the law is defeated, there can not be more than 3,750. Instead of there being 20,000 relieved from the pay roll there will be 40,000, and unless some amendments that are now attached to bills that are coming over from the other body at the other end of the Capitol are approved of by the House they will have to walk the plank and go into some useful occupations.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I remember when we passed the general printing bill, and I would like to ask the gentleman if there was any provision in that that any way touched the matter referred to in section 8.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think not. So I wish this House to know that this is an endeavor on the part of this Congress to retrench and reform. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee becomes a part of the bill, instead of $1,200,000 now being saved by cutting off these useless publications they will all be reinstated and more added, because they have been demanding more. If there ever is a commission appointed, we should appoint a commission as far away from these bureaus and their influence as it is possible to have one.

You can not have a better commission than the Joint Committee on Printing, whose business it is to inquire into matters of this kind. That committee is charged with responsibility to the respective bodies of Congress and to the people. Its members are men who can be charged with responsibility. What responsibility has the head of one of these bureaus to the people of this country? Not a bit. They never stop to count the cost; they have their eyes solely on the building up of their bureaus. The Congress of the United States is immediately responsible to the people. The Congress knows what the people of the United States are now expecting—yes, demanding—that there be retrenchment of public expenditures. The Congress should and must respond to that demand of the people. Go out over this country and there is no mistaking the sense of the people. They are groaning under their taxation. They are cognizant of the fact that this war expenditure of necessity is going to keep the taxes high for years and years to come; but when they are advised of the fact that there are thousands and thousands of useless clerks here in Washington, not only here but all over the United States, connected with these bureaus that have sprung up like mushrooms over night, still being maintained, they become impatient and they demand that we see to it that these useless clerks are dispensed with and these bureaus discontinued. Will we obey the will of the people or will we yield to the demand of the bureau chiefs? This is the question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

The SPEAKER. Under the order previously adopted, the previous question is ordered. There is pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] relative to the appointment of a commission on printing, on which a point of order is reserved. Does the gentleman desire to argue the point of order?

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No, Mr. Speaker, except to say that the current law has a provision upon that subject. True, it came in by way of a Senate amendment. I think the amendment is subject to the point of order, though I had hoped that no one would see fit to make it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 53, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WOOD of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STEVENSON, for one week, on account of attendance on meeting of State Democratic executive committee and State convention.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio renews the point. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-five Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The doors were closed.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 13329.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13329) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer certain surplus material, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Department of Agriculture, under the provisions of section 7 of the act approved February 28, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1920, and for other purposes," for use in the improvement of highways and roads as therein provided, the following war materials, machinery, and equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment as are or may hereafter be found to be surplus and not required for military purposes, to wit: Five hundred 10-ton caterpillar tractors complete with spare parts; 200 mobile machine-shop units complete with spare parts; shop machinery and machine tools and equipment suitable for repair and rebuilding shops for motor-propelled vehicles.

SEC. 2. That freight charges incurred in the transfer of the property provided for in this act shall not be defrayed by the War Department, and if the War Department shall load any of the said property for shipment the expense of said loading shall be reimbursed the War Department by the Department of Agriculture by an adjustment of the appropriations of the two departments: Provided, however, That any State receiving any of said property for use in connection with the improvement of public highways shall, as to the property it receives, pay to the Department of Agriculture the amount of 20 per cent of the estimated value of said property as fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture or under his direction, against which sum the said State may set off all freight charges paid by it on the shipment of said property, not to exceed, however, 20 per cent.

SEC. 3. That any State highway department to which is assigned such materials, machinery, and equipment transferred herein to the Department of Agriculture may, in its discretion, arrange for the use of such materials, machinery, and equipment for the purpose of constructing or maintaining public highways, with any State agency or municipal corporation at a fair rental, which shall not be less than the cost of maintenance and repair of said materials, machinery, and equipment. The title to said materials, machinery, and equipment shall be and remain vested in the State for use in the improvement of the public highways, and no such materials, machinery, and equipment in serviceable condition shall be sold or the title to same transferred to any individual, company, copartnership, or corporation.

SEC. 4. That the Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to procure or provide suitable and adequate storage facilities for the proper storage and care of all road-building materials, equipment, and supplies transferred to it by the War Department for use in the improvement of highways and roads under the provisions of section 7 of the act approved February 28, 1919, and that the cost of procuring or providing such storage facilities may be paid from any funds available from appropriations heretofore made for the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands a second.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska for the passage of the bill include the committee amendment on page 3? I did not know whether it included that or not?

Mr. REAVIS. That was intended, and I thought the motion comprehended the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk read the bill as amended. The gentleman from Nebraska is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio to 20 minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I trust and believe that this bill will not require the attention of the House very long, and so far as I am concerned I shall attempt at least to explain its purpose in as few words as possible. Following the armistice the War Department found itself in possession of approximately 6,800 tractors of 5 and 10 ton capacity. Many of those tractors were in France, and the matter was taken up with the War Department by the Federal Highway Commission looking to a transfer of some of these tractors to the highway commissions which were active in the construction of good roads built in whole or in part by Federal aid. Those in control of the division of the War Department having charge of this equipment advised the highway commission by letter that there would be no difficulty with reference to the matter, that a very large number of those tractors were surplus, and they would be turned over to the highway commission to the extent of its necessity. The highway commission estimated at that time that they would require some 1,200 of the 10-ton tractors, and their requirements of the 10-ton tractors were based upon information given by the War Department that all of the 10-ton tractors would be declared surplus for the reason they were not serviceable to the department, the 5-ton tractors being more efficient in the artillery movement required. After informing the highway department that many of these tractors were in France and they would have them removed to America for the purpose of turning them over to the highway commission, they proceeded to bring all of them, or practically all of them, back to America. They were returned to this country shortly after hostilities ceased in November, 1918. Since their return they have been standing in the open, scattered widespread across the United States, without protection from that day to this.

Every effort to get them turned over to the highway commission has met with utter failure. There is a sort of an agreement—I am unable to tell you exactly its terms, because I have never seen it, though the matter has been brought to my attention several times by those who claim to know of its existence—whereby the Holt Manufacturing Co., which sold those tractors to the Government in the first instance, were to be protected in some way from the competition that the disposition and sale of the tractors would create against their product. For that reason, known to many men on both sides of the aisle, from New Orleans to the Canadian border, since November of 1918 these tractors have been in the open, unused, unserviceable to the department, with no reason existing why they should be further retained. We applied to the Committee on Military Affairs in an effort to get these tractors, or at least some of them, distributed to the highway commission, and this bill is the result of such application. The bill should have been enacted before this. There is hardly a State in the Union that does not require these tractors at this very moment, and the sooner we pass the legislation the better it will be for all parties concerned; first, because the good roads of the country will be constructed by them, and, next, a deterioration that has been going on for more than two years will in large measure cease. My personal opinion is that more than 500 should be turned over, but Mr. McDonald, the chief of the highway commission, stated that they would be satisfied if that number was given to them without delay. A charge is put in the bill of 20 per cent of the appraised value of the machines. The reason for that is not with the idea that such charge will be compensatory, because it will not be, but in the distribution of the automobiles, or the few that were distributed, those States close to the camps got their motor trucks for nothing. They merely sent their employees to the camps and ran them out to their highways on their own power, but the States which were far removed from the camps where the vehicles were stored had to pay freight.

In some instances the freight charge was very large, and it resulted in a discrimination, for one State would get tractors and motor vehicles without expense while another State would pay heavy freight charges. Hence the provision was put in this bill that a 20 per cent charge should be made against the State highway commissions for all of these tractors, from which payment should be deducted the freight; so the State adjacent to the camps will pay 20 per cent and the State far removed will pay 20 per cent less the freight, thus putting all the States on the same basis. There are certain other things provided in this bill of a minor character. In section 4 there is a provision that the Agricultural Department shall be authorized to utilize out of the money already appropriated enough to provide storage for these machines.

The reason for that is that the Comptroller of the Treasury recently rendered an opinion that there was no authority on the part of the Agricultural Department to make any such expenditure. This will provide closed storage for the machines and will protect them from the elements.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REAVIS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. How many tractors will there be left after we have distributed the 500 which this bill provides for?

Mr. REAVIS. Approximately 6,300.

Mr. SNELL. Do they need them for any purpose whatever?

Mr. REAVIS. I can only give the gentleman my personal views about that. My judgment is that the War Department has no use for these machines at all. The only way I can justify and excuse the fact that they have not been used since November, 1918, is the fact that they have no use for them.

Mr. SNELL. Where are those tractors at the present time?

Mr. REAVIS. I was told by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] the other day that there are many hundreds in New Orleans, and I understand that they are scattered from one coast to the other.

Mr. SNELL. And all out of doors?

Mr. REAVIS. All exposed to the elements, without protection, and they have been in that condition since November, 1918.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I will.

Mr. HICKS. Do I understand from the gentleman that in the distribution of these tractors they can only be distributed and used on roads that receive in whole or in part Federal aid?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes, sir. The purpose of the legislation, and I have no doubt the purpose will be fully followed by the State Highway Commission, is to utilize these tractors that are very essential in the construction of good roads. They are all caterpillar tractors, and are very serviceable where they are constructing dirt roads.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I fully agree with the gentleman that there ought to be legislation of this character. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has satisfied himself that only 500 of these machines can be used on the public highways now?

Mr. REAVIS. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia I am not, but the Highway Commission has been trying so long to get these tractors to be used on these roads that they became discouraged at the repeated failure. This long delay has resulted, notwithstanding there was legislation authorizing it in February of 1919, and there never has been an hour when the department lacked legislative authority to do this thing. This, however, is the first mandatory legislation. I am sorry this bill does not contain a provision that not only makes it mandatory for the War Department to turn these machines over when once declared surplus, but I regret it does not contain a provision making it mandatory that they shall declare them as surplus.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I suggest to my friend that this might be desirable, in view of the fact that we have several thousands of these machines that are not only not being used, but are becoming impaired in value: Give the Agricultural Department authority to call for as many as can properly be used on the highways.

Mr. REAVIS. The only question, I will say, about that is this: Of course, if these machines are, in fact, serviceable, if the War Department can use any of them, the War Department ought to be protected in that use. I think the War Department ought to be required by legislation not only as to tractors and automobiles, but with reference to all other supplies that they have which they can not use, to declare them surplus, and to dispose of them and cover the money into the Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. This is legislation, so to speak, of a de minimis character. There ought to be some provision which will not injure any Government interest, but will be executed so as to give the States the use of any of these tractors that are not otherwise used by the Government.

Mr. REAVIS. Surely. If there were a provision offered that these machines for which the War Department had no use should be surplus, I would favor legislation requiring the transfer of all of them.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. For a question.

Mr. RAKER. How many of the 5 and 10 ton caterpillar tractors are there?

Mr. REAVIS. Sixty-eight hundred.

Mr. RAKER. Have they any 5-ton tractors?

Mr. REAVIS. The highway department thought the 10-ton tractors would be more serviceable than the 5-ton. I am unable to tell the gentleman how many 10-ton tractors there are, but many more than are called for in this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I will, but I do not like to use so much time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Nebraska referred to this as mandatory legislation. As I read it, it still leaves it in the discretion of the War Department to declare it surplus?

Mr. REAVIS. That is the point I had in mind, and I regret it was not possible to present to the House a bill requiring the War Department to declare a surplus.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is the gentleman aware that the manufacturers of these tractors claim to have a contract with the War Department which forbids the War Department from disposing of them?

Mr. REAVIS. I know they claim such a contract, but if such a contract is in existence it is against public policy. The manufacturers obtained their profit out of these when the Government first purchased them. They got their profit out of the Government of the United States; and contract or no contract, it does not lie in the mouths of these contractors who have received their profit to tell us what we can or can not do with our own property.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] desire to use some time?

Mr. GARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in my time will the gentleman from Nebraska yield for a question? Will he explain to the House what sort of a contract the department has with the Holt Manufacturing Co. to the end that these machines can not be turned over to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. REAVIS. I stated at the beginning of my remarks that all I could tell was the statements that were made to me. I do not know of my own knowledge whether or not there is such a contract in existence. I have heard repeatedly from reliable sources that there is such a contract.

Mr. RAKER. Did the gentleman inquire of the War Department if they had such a contract?

Mr. REAVIS. I have not made any such inquiry, but I have been told by members of the Highway Commission that the reason given by the War Department for not turning these things over was the existence of such a contract.

Mr. RAKER. What was the nature of that contract, as they told you?

Mr. REAVIS. The contract reported to me was this, that if these things were sold or if there was any disposition on the part of the Government to dispose of these tractors the opportunity should be given to the Holt Manufacturing Co. to purchase them. Now, we can not give to the Holt Manufacturing Co. the option of purchasing these things for 20 per cent of their value. They are the property of the United States Government. We paid a high price for them. The companies made their profit out of them, and a contract that would restrict the Government in the use of its own property is, in my judgment, legally void.

Mr. RAKER. That being the case, when there are so many of these machines, and they are the best machine that is made to-day—the caterpillar-tractor engine, you know, can go anywhere and do any work, a thing that you can not do with some of the others.

Mr. REAVIS. Within the past few weeks—I can not be accurate as to the time, but certainly not longer than the last three months—the War Department has purchased $600,000 worth of these vehicles of a new type, because those of other types were unserviceable. Now, if these enumerated in this bill were not serviceable, why have they been leaving these unserviceable machines exposed to the elements, without declaring them to be surplus and getting rid of them and putting the money into the Treasury?

Mr. RAKER. Then why not put a provision into the bill turning these $600,000 worth of tractors over?

Mr. REAVIS. The only difficulty is that under the rule you can not amend this bill.

Mr. RAKER. You can by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAVIS. Then the gentleman has my best wishes to amend it along that line.

Mr. RAKER. Let us make it $600,000 worth.

Mr. REAVIS. I would be reluctant to do that until I knew of my own knowledge that they are surplus.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has made a very important statement, that they have purchased $600,000 worth of these caterpillar tractors. You can use this engine, but the War Department is not using them. Why not pick up these engines and turn them over to the Department of Agriculture and obtain some use from them?

Mr. REAVIS. I think 2,500 will fully answer all the purposes of the Highway Department.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman will agree to do that?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes; I shall be glad to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the Committee on Military Affairs there were representatives of the Highway Commission and of the Department of Agriculture before it, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] was there. There were present a number of other people who were conversant with the subject. The question was raised that if there was a surplus of this material, why not put it all in the bill in order that this material may be distributed among the highway commissions of the United States and thereby enable us to get all the good roads that America wants. I remember that it was distinctly stated there that they were sure only that this amount was surplus, and they were sure that this amount, if authorized for distribution, would take care of the present needs as outlined by the Highway Commission.

Under these circumstances the Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with the amount so specified, and in view of the fact that there was every opportunity in the world afforded to people who wanted to criticize the War Department to bring in all the evidence in their possession before that committee or all that they wanted to, I for one would not consent to the amendment of this bill in the fashion indicated unless there is some showing that there was a greater quantity than was stated before the committee. The contracts criticized here were not spoken of, as I recall, and it seems to me to be pretty late to question them now.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second for the purpose of obtaining a fuller understanding of the bill and its contents, and therefore what I am about to say in my effort to secure further information I may necessarily trespass upon the time of gentlemen who have heretofore spoken. Under the rule we are working under, under the suspension of the rules, of course it is impossible to amend this bill, so that I can only call attention to the matters which seem to me to be pertinent for our consideration.

In the light of what I expect is the unanimous desire to not alone clear up these unnecessary accumulations in all the departments, but to do all that we can to afford proper transfers of property that we now have, and which it is not necessary to use in the department where it now is, to transfer it to the divisions of the Nation or States where they can be of public benefit. Therefore I am in very hearty accord with the purpose of the bill in providing the aid of unnecessary and unused governmental facilities in the building of public highways within the States, because I am one of those who believe that the construction of highways is among the very essential things of our modern life to-day and should be encouraged.

What I particularly desired to call attention to is that these 10-ton caterpillar tractors are transferred only in the discretion of the Secretary of War. Do I understand the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] to claim that this is a directory transfer, or is there still a discretion vested in the Secretary of War to make the transfer of those things which are included in lines 3 to 7 of section 1?

Mr. REAVIS. It is a mandatory transfer, predicated upon the proposition that they shall be declared surplus. There is no mandatory provision here requiring the department to declare them surplus.

Mr. GARD. In other words, the Secretary of War must first determine that these things are surplus?

Mr. REAVIS. That they are not needed by the department.

Mr. GARD. That they are not needed by the department. Then it becomes mandatory that this transfer shall be made.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. GARD. So that I assume from that that the authority of supervision over these tractors still rests in the Secretary of War.

Now, in addition to that there are 200 mobile machine-shop units, complete with spare parts, shop machinery, and machine tools and equipment suitable for repair and rebuilding shops or motor-propelled vehicles. I advert to this because the report from the Committee on Military Affairs has no recommendation, has no record even, as to whether the tractors and machine units and other property is unnecessary governmental property at this time. I have referred to section 4, where, it seems to me, there may be a possibility; I do not know whether it is intended in the minds of the gentlemen or not, and therefore I ask the gentleman from Nebraska again is it the purpose of section 4, which provides for suitable and adequate storage facilities for the storage and care of these things—is it the purpose to provide from existing appropriations storage facilities within the States?

Mr. REAVIS. That is the purpose.

Mr. GARD. In other words, not only do we afford the States the right to purchase the tractors and machine units from the Federal revenues, but there is an appropriation to provide storage facilities and sheds for their protection when transferred to the States.

Mr. REAVIS. If the gentleman will permit me, there are some States which by reason of lack of funds have been and are unable to provide storage for this property. So far as my own State is concerned, they will provide ample storage and will not ask the Government for any of these funds. I think the same is true of the gentleman's State. The provision calls for the utilization of appropriations not otherwise expended on the part of the Agricultural Department to provide storage for these machines.

Mr. GARD. It seems to me that when we pass the tractor resolution, inasmuch as this gives the States the right and privilege to purchase at a reduced price the tractors essential on road building, we are going pretty far in road building when we provide that eixsting funds appropriated may be used for the purpose of building shelters and sheds in Nebraska or Ohio or other States where the property is desired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the provision of the bill refers more particularly to the forest reserves; that the construction of temporary buildings for the housing of the machinery in forest reserves does not apply to the construction of housing facilities in the States.

Mr. GARD. There is no reservation as to the use of the money under section 4, and the States of Illinois, Ohio, Nebraska, or elsewhere, if the property is taken under the provision of section 2, could, under section 4, build a shed or shelter for the tractors or machine shops and things at the public expense.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the rules of the House the gentleman knows that we have either got to vote for this bill exactly as it is or vote against it.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the bill fails in giving any direction whatever to the War Department except in their discretion, which they have not seen fit to exercise heretofore, does not the gentleman believe that we ought to stop the proceedings right here on this bill, send it back to the committee, and have that committee properly draft a bill that will do some good?

Mr. GARD. As far as I am concerned, I prefer to have the bill brought in in a way that would be suitable for amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes had it and that the Doorkeeper would close the doors.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late. The Chair had announced the result and ordered the Doorkeeper to close the doors.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair was very fast in announcing it. [Laughter.]

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of section 4 it seems to me that the Department of Agriculture is being sent into the States to build storehouses for property which by this act is transferred to the States. On page 3 of the bill the title to this property is compelled to remain in the States. They can not do anything with it. It simply stands there and rots and rusts. I call attention to these matters because I do not believe that the consideration of this bill under suspension of the rules is the proper way for its consideration.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is much to be regretted that this bill must be considered in this way—not open to amendment—because there are respects in which amendments should be made. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has spoken of the matter of which I wished to speak. Section 3 says the title to all this material is to vest in the States, but section 4 requires the Department of Agriculture to "procure and provide suitable and adequate storage facilities." The department has no money for that purpose. Section 4 would authorize the use of "available funds from appropriations heretofore made for the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I can not yield in the very short time I have. What does this mean? Does it mean that any money which happens to be left over from any purpose for which it was appropriated for the department may be used for building "adequate storage facilities" for sheltering this property in the States or does it authorize the Department of Agriculture to use for this purpose money which was appropriated for other purposes? The bill is indefinite, and in my judgment it is improper. The purpose to be reached is good; we all approve of it and wish to vote for it, but it should be amended. I regret very much that it comes up in such a way that it must be passed as it is or defeated.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is unfortunately framed. Taking the facts admitted, I think we ought to have legislation directing the War Department to turn over to the Agriculture Department all of the tractors and equipment that are found to be surplus and not used for military purposes or otherwise disposed of. I think it ought to be provided that the machinery so transferred shall be allotted by the Agricultural Department, on some fair basis, to the States for use on the public highways of the country. After delaying for months and months and knowing from the State highway commissions the need or the demand, we are now about to enact legislation that amounts to simply giving a stone where bread had been asked. The States should be allowed to become the owners of this property, which it is declared is in process of being wasted, and without the expense to which this bill would subject them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. There is a committee amendment——

The SPEAKER. That was incorporated in the bill, and the Clerk read it as a part of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit what I consider a serious matter concerning the bill. No action whatever was taken upon the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated when the bill was first read that the bill was read with the committee amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. And no action is necessary?

The SPEAKER. No separate action is necessary in respect to it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn in honor of the memory of Levi P. Morton, one time a Member of this House, representative of his Government in France, governor of the State of New York, Vice President of the United States, scholar, statesman, and patriot, who passed to his reward yesterday, aged 96 years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 18, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 18, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, all praise is due to Thy name for the marvelous way in which Thou hast led us and established us and blessed us, for the resources Thou hast put at our command, and for the spirit Thou hast given to the leadership of this great Nation. We thank Thee that we are seeking to found the nations more firmly upon the changeless principles of Thy holy word, and that at the beginning of our daily session we are still lifting our hearts to Thee for Thy guidance and blessing. Endow us with Thy grace; lead us by Thy spirit; and conduct us into the realm of all truth, that essential truth which abides in Thyself, and give us success as Christian statesmen to carry forward the work of this Nation. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. JONES of Washington and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. PORTER, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. FLOOD managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13329. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer certain surplus material, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 14100. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey, and of Hon. CARL C. VAN DYKE, late a Representative from the State of Minnesota.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 13555) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

FARM-LOAN BONDS.

Mr. GRONNA. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 196) extending the provisions of an act amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916, to June 30, 1921, and I submit a report (No. 593) thereon. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution to-morrow morning for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

A bill (S. 4408) granting a pension to Henry Hardy; and

A bill (S. 4409) granting a pension to William G. Phelps; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4410) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment relative to the salaries of clerks and stenographers at the Atlanta Penitentiary, Ga., from and including July 1, 1920, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 13329. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer certain surplus material, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 14100. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was read wtice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to make a statement in regard to the position of this bill and what is involved.

The Committee on Foreign Relations, with the approval and suggestion of the department, added an amendment to the bill continuing the present act which charges the State Department with the supervision of passports, and continuing the war legislation on that subject which was included in the act of May 22, 1918, an act which was subsequently continued and extended to 1921 on the 29th of October, 1919.

The amendment put on by the Senate was designed for the very simple purpose of securing revenue from the passports issued here and the visés placed on the passports of immigrants coming to this country, the passports being required under the war legislation as an obvious protection against the coming of unsuitable persons to the United States. We increased the fee for passports, thinking that for the service rendered by the State Department there ought to be a reasonable fee and that persons who were able to go abroad, either on business or pleasure, could fairly pay an additional tax and help in the suppport of the State Department which rendered them the service. We also increased the fee for the visé given by our consuls abroad and necessary to the passports of immigrants coming to this country.

We had no thought beyond the economic side of the question. It did not occur to me, though I have been interested in immigration for many years, that adding these fees to the visés of passports of immigrants would have any real effect on the restriction of immigration, but there has been a widespread fear in this country about the immigration that would pour into the country with the closing of the war, and there has been a great deal of feeling about the persons who have come in as immigrants and who have been conspicuous, as all the world knows, in strikes and agitations in this country, leading to the attempted deportation of some of them.

However, the object of restricting or interfering with immigration was not in the mind of the committee. We found that by a reasonable fee for passports and visés we shall be able to pay a large part of the expenses of the department which ran the service. In these days, when we are supposed to be pursuing economy, it seemed to the committee a wholly reasonable action. We brought the amendment before the Senate. It was agreed to without any objection. The Senate as a whole approved it. I do not remember the slightest opposition.

The bill, with the Senate amendments, then went to conference, and for one reason or another, absence from town, and so forth, the action of the conferees was long delayed. The report had to be taken up first by the House. When it was taken up by the House a point of order was made on another, a wholly different, item. That, of course, brought the bill back into conference. The Senate at once accepted the conference. We struck out the amendment against which the point of order had been made, and the report of the conference committee, which was a unanimous report signed by all the members of the conference, went back again to the House. The House has again taken up the report of the conference committee and voted down the amendment in regard to passports and visés.

I have not had time to read the debate with any thoroughness, but I gather that the vote against the amendment put on by the Senate and accepted by the House conferees went largely on the ground that we must not tax incoming immigrants and that we must do nothing, as I understand it, which would restrict or interfere with immigration.

The bill has come back, and the action of the House has just been laid before the Senate with that amendment disagreed to by the House. I wished to make this statement to the Senate because I think the question involved is of some importance, and I wished the Senate to know the reason why the bill has come back a second time.

I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and agree to the request of the House for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. POMERENE conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I wish to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that one of the additional reasons for the action of the House arose out of the fact that the Committee on Immigration is considering the question as a sort of probationary law which will deal in part with immigrants; but I think the prospect of getting that law is very remote—at any rate it will not be enacted for some time yet—and I feel that the action of the Senate was entirely proper, and that we should stand by the Senate conferees.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me say something which I omitted. The amendment of the Senate, which was asked for by the State Department, continues the law in regard to passports that was put on, and most properly put on, during the war. If this amendment is stricken out, there will be no passport restrictions on immigrants coming in or people going from America. In the action of the House that principle is involved, and that is to my mind a very serious question, indeed, and one that I think will require the attention of the Senate.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, from day to day I have refrained from calling up the conference report on House bill 3184, the water-power bill, because various Senators either had to be out of the city or were engaged in committee work, and asked me to do so. In consideration of those requests I have stated to Senators that I would not call it up until after Thursday of this week.

I wish to announce that I shall not, so far as I am concerned, consent to a further postponement of the consideration of the conference report after Thursday, but that I shall then call it up at the very first opportunity for disposition.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I would move this morning to take up House bill 12530, but I ascertained afterwards that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] had previously given notice of his desire to speak this morning at the close of the morning business. I therefore defer calling up the pension bill until after the Senator from Massachusetts has completed his address, when I shall ask permission to make a motion to take up the bill.

CAUSES OF SPREAD OF RADICALISM AND SOME REMEDIES THEREFOR.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, is there danger, as many allege, of the collapse of our political and parliamentary institutions and the substitution therefor of the industrial state? That there is to-day, for the first time in America, public agitaion in favor of this proposition can not be disputed. If there is danger, or even a remote possibility, of a serious movement in this direction, the time has come for us to find out what are the causes that are giving support and strength to this agitation, and what, if any, remedies can be applied to restore public confidence in our political institutions. We can not continue indifferent to this propaganda, or feel that we have performed our duty merely by prosecuting its leaders or denouncing their constantly increasing following as Bolshevists, socialists, and anarchists.

Personally, I do not believe there is any real danger of the majority of our people accepting such doctrines, but I do believe from evidence which is constantly appearing in the newspaper and periodical press of the country, from information which has come to me from my constituents in Massachusetts, and from evidence to which I have listened before a committee of the United States Senate, that the widespread discontent in this country, reflected in the constant clashes between capital and labor and the growth of socialism, is due to an increasing belief that our Government has failed to make any visible and appreciable progress in dealing with present grievous evils that have crept into the body politic. In a word, altogether too many are coming to believe that our political institutions do not meet the needs of the present situation.

There are some among our people who maintain and would have us believe that only a fundamental revision of the economic system—a system that has contributed largely to the high state of civilization we are enjoying to-day—will protect millions of our people from the criminal extortions of a comparatively few individuals and groups of individuals whose illegal practices go unchallenged and unchecked because of their ability to control the channels of public opinion and their power to prevent a frank exposure of real economic conditions. And what is more serious, large numbers who still have undiminished faith in our institutions are beginning for the first time to doubt whether or not our Government, as it is organically constituted to-day, has the means to grapple successfully with such a novel and abnormal contingency. This undercurrent of feeling, in my opinion, is the basis of the undefined unrest.

INADEQUACY OF OUR AMERICANIZATION PROGRAM.

We have talked very much of late about Americanism and the adoption of legislation providing for the education of our foreign population according to American ideals. We have noted with alarm that hundreds of thousands of recent arrivals in this country from foreign lands have become associated with radical movements, and seem to follow complacently and willingly the leadership of the most radical elements of our population. The ease with which this radical leadership gains such a loyal following among the new arrivals in this country is said by some to be a mere transitory state in the minds of the immigrants. These optimists say that as soon as the newcomers become better acquainted with our institutions and the life of the older sections of this country all bitter feeling and rancor will disappear. It is true that practically all of the new arrivals actually become as loyal as any element in the country, as their record in the recent war proves beyond doubt, and even if they retain their radical views, they do not consider them to be inconsistent with a true and loyal devotion to their new and adopted country. Some foolishly maintain that it will be enough to teach the yet unassimilated elements of our population the American language in order to make them thoroughly American; but even if this were true, a major part of the problem would still remain unsolved.

DISCONTENT NOT CONFINED TO FOREIGN ELEMENTS.

Only superficial observers believe that sympathy with radical doctrines is confined merely to foreign elements in America. Were this so, we might feel no special alarm over the security of our institutions and the future of our country. However, our daily experiences show clearly that the American people, native and foreign alike, are seething with discontent and dissatisfaction with the existing social order. This spirit of unrest, discontent, and dissatisfaction, this growing conviction of the alleged incompetency of our institutions to eradicate the notorious abuses that have grown up under the cover of the doctrine of equality of opportunity, exists in the ranks of all classes. He who has eyes sees and he who has ears hears to-day that the great middle class, the salaried employees in and out of the Government employ, the preachers in the pulpit, the teachers in the classroom, are inclining more and more to espouse the cause of radical ideas. The country press is feeling its touch. In a communication to one of the Members of this body a few days ago a publisher of a country newspaper said:

> Radicalism is creeping into the hearts of a great many newspaper publishers these days, for few men can sit calmly by and see their business destroyed without feeling a deep resentment that such a condition should be permitted to exist.

Even a retiring executive connected intimately with the affairs of government and possessing an unequaled perspective for analyzing its greatest requirements has come to realize, to quote the words of ex-Secretary Lane—> that there are in Washington statesmen who are politicians, and politicians who are not statesmen. It is rich in brains and character—honest beyond commercial standards—but it is poorly organized for the task that belongs to it. Ability pressed to the point of paralysis because of an infinitude of details and an unwillingness on the part of the great body of public servants to take the responsibility. The self-protective sense develops abnormally; the creative sense atrophies. Trust, confidence, enthusiasm, three simple virtues of all great business, are the ones most lacking—our progress does not keep pace with the Nation's requirements.

PRESENT DISSATISFACTION UNDERMINING GENUINE AMERICANISM.

Some of the dissatisfaction of our day is not confined to mere verbal protest. It is beginning to assume in some quarters a form of active opposition to the Government and its agencies. This is a very alarming symptom, for our people have always been trained and have been accustomed to feel that imperfect or mistaken laws must be obeyed until they are changed through the means provided by our Constitution. We have always preached and taught in our schools and advised the laboring class, both native and foreign, that the American ideal is this: When America speaks through its constituted authorities in the regularly established form the citizens of America obey, even though they feel the bitter injustice and partiality of a law either as passed or as interpreted by the judicial authorities. Americans have been inclined to direct their protest and show their indignation against officials or an administration or a political party responsible for the alleged injustice, but never against the form of our Government, as such. This spirit may be said to be the quintessence of true and genuine Americanism. It always has been the bulwark and the mainstay of American institutions. We must preserve this spirit if the development of our institutions is to progress along orderly, evolutionary lines. The time, however, is here now when our people, unnerved, excited to the extreme, and pressed by economic conditions almost beyond endurance, are threatened with the loss of this spirit of loyal and unshakable faith in our institutions. Chaos and class war must inevitably pursue the disappearance of these sentiments—the foundations of our Republic. Immediate and effective action directed toward constructive improvements is imperative in order to safeguard and fully revive the faith of the American people in the ability of their governmental agencies to act as neutral factors without prejudice or bias, with full power and determination to protect the interests of the whole people without the least favoritism toward the capitalist or the laborer or any other class but with equal justice for all.

The time has come for our Government to show to the people that this is true—that it has the power and the inclination to right their wrongs and that it possesses public servants courageous, intelligent, and patriotic enough to seek a remedy and find a solution. I repeat, the most dangerous condition in America to-day is that arising out of the thought and belief that our Government has broken down; that we have not the form of government or the instrumentalities within the Government to grapple speedily, definitely, and adequately with a great public abuse such as now confronts us.

THE DOCTRINES OF THE RADICALS.

What is the doctrine that the radicals are preaching to our people? They point out, again and again, tremendous and astonishing profiteering on the part of those whose function in the industrial life of the community is the providing of the necessaries of life. They assert that no definite, positive, successful steps have been taken by the Government to stop it. The allegation is made that the reason why it is not stopped and why, as they say, no attempt is made to stop it, is because our political institutions are incapable; that our public officials are indifferent, and, as it is altogether too frequently claimed, many of them are controlled by these same selfish forces. They argue that our Government has grown too cumbersome, that the new industrial order of large and powerful trusts and combinations of producers has resulted in overwhelming all governmental means of effectively stopping the profiteering abuse. In a word, they say that the institutions of our Government have broken down; that there is no remedy for present evils in our present political form of organization. They allege, however, that there is a remedy, and the culmination of their contention suggests that the only remedy lies not in political but industrial reorganization.

The number of their followers increases; their organizations multiply; their sympathizers, not yet openly associated with them, are found in nearly every walk of life; and while all this is going on in the body politic throughout the country we sit here either unconscious of the seriousness of it all or indifferent to the necessity of stopping its progress.

THE RADICALS' REMEDY UNSOUND.

There is an answer to this outcry, and there is a remedy, and our Government is not impotent. To give this answer is the best Americanism that can be preached; to apply the remedy is the best Americanism that can be practiced.

Our splendid form of government has been so organized that under it every wrong, every abuse, can ultimately be remedied, for even if there is not existing at present the means for any particular task, the people themselves, through the ballot, through the instrumentalities which party government and the political machinery of the country amply provide, can confer the powers, enact the laws, and secure the constitutional changes necessary to effect their purpose.

I protest, therefore, Mr. President, against the belief that the only salvation of the people lies in the overthrow of the present order, and I refuse to admit that there is not the means vested in the chosen forms of our Government to deal with and remove any evils or abuses which exist, however deeply rooted they may have become.

THE RADICALS' CHARGES NOT WHOLLY UNFOUNDED.

But is there any sound basis for these complaints? Or what are the reasons for the loud and wrathful assertions, coming from almost every class in America, that our Government has outlived the noble purposes for which it was founded? Is it now incapable, because of great confusion and disagreement among its organized parts, of functioning for the greatest good of the greatest number, and does it now operate to enhance the privileges and increase the fortunes of a selected few who are permitted to enrich themselves amid the economic distress and threatened upheaval in the Nation at large? Is it high and absolutely artificial prices, is it the excessive profit making and exploiting of the working people, that has brought about this state of discontent? Is this the responsible cause of the feeling spread abroad that we have ceased to serve the interests of our people?

Let us see what evidence on the case, if any, the history of the rise in price levels and the cost of living during the war will reveal. Let us see if some of the facts on which the radical bases his arguments for radical reforms are not absolutely true, even though we do not agree with his conclusions as to the Government's inability to remedy them.

THE CAUSES OF HIGH PRICES ANALYZED.

A brief and cursory review of the movement and of the causes of the present high prices, of the high cost of living, and of the unprecedented, scandalous continuation of profiteering will assist us in appreciating the Government's responsibilities for these baneful results and the insistent demand of the Nation for governmental assistance.

The greatest advance in prices in America has been caused by our own Government's policy during the World War—a policy to which I refer not for purposes of criticism but to uncover, so far as possible, the causes of the abnormal living conditions under which we are suffering.

The beginning of the tremendous upward trend in the costs of living was the natural consequence of the Government's policy of throwing open our markets to the enormous new demands by belligerent countries in the World War for munitions and other war materials, food supplies, and necessaries in general in unheard-of volume. Coming so suddenly, this tremendous drainage of our markets caused a rapid increase in prices which have since gone steadily upward and never backward, and started the era of Jumbo profit making that still is rampant. The entrance of our own country into the war intensified and made more serious this unhealthy condition, with the result that our home markets were depleted and drained of the very articles that constitute the prime needs of life. The Government became even a greater customer than the people themselves, and by its peremptory requirements caused a still further rise in prices. The business interests having tasted the honey that flowed from European war contracts now found a new and more lavish customer at home, and a new orgy of profiteering commenced, at the expense of both the Government and the people, which has continued unchecked to this hour.

I repeat this brief survey of the recent rise of prices, of the outrageous increase in the cost of living and the scandalous profit making, simply to bring out the fact that the Government itself, through its own choice among possible policies, is primarily responsible for the rise in living costs. All the greater is the duty, therefore, of the Government to lay bare the causes of excessive prices and restore profit making to normal proportions.

PUBLIC LOSING HOPE OF GOVERNMENT ACTION.

By far the most difficult question for the American people to answer to-day is: "Now that the war is over, why is the cost of living still increasing, and why is profiteering daily growing worse?" The public learns daily from the press of the distribution of huge dividends accumulated by business during the war and down through the year 1919, and sees that many of our great corporations are still accumulating even greater profits year by year. This conviction accounts for the natural resentment of a plundered Nation and of the classes who suffer the results of this vicious rise of prices, outstripping the advance of wages and causing them to bend under a load far beyond their strength and patience to bear. Those who suffer—and they are many, I am grieved to assert—have borne these burdens thus far, I repeat, out of loyalty to their country, out of faith in the traditions and purposes which gave it birth, knowing full well that they were victims of the wrongs of special interests, but relying with the devotion of patriots that their Government, recovering from war influences and war aftermaths, would prescribe remedies and help to restore normal living conditions.

But as the hopes which the promise of a world league, based on truth and trust and consecrated to all the goodness and idealism in mankind, raised in the hearts of peoples struggling for freedom the world over faded and died before the onslaughts of selfish nations greedy for gold and power, are we to believe that the hopes must die also of the American people who have placed their faith in their Congress as the instrument to interpret and enforce the justice of their Constitution?

Conditions have grown worse, and it seems that a band of robbers infest the land. Combines and trusts, by tacit if not by actual agreement, hold up their products for constantly increasing gain and ruthlessly exploit the buyers. As this atrocious materialism increases the Government, outside of a few weak and insignificant threats, has not even attempted a solution.

ACTUAL EXTENT OF PROFITEERING CONCEALED.

Let us briefly review some of the facts which are matters of common knowledge—if, indeed, they have not already been forgotten—about the four fundamental industries which supply us with food, fuel, clothing, and the iron and steel upon which all our industries so largely depend. It is to be noted and remembered that the disclosures of war-time profiteering to which I am about to refer, astounding and incredible as they seem, are in all probability understatements rather than overstatements of the undeniable facts. The profiteering corporations have resorted to many successful devices to conceal from the public the true relation between their net earnings and the actual investment on which the percentage of profit should justly be computed.

The payment of excessive salaries, amounting in the case of one corporation dealing in metals to the astonishing aggregate of $1,198,600 to its president, two vice presidents, the chairman of its board of directors, and two office managers—six alleged executives paid on the average $200,000 apiece—is one favorite method of concealing real profits, a method grossly unfair, of course, to the minority shareholders as well as to the public, and practiced with impunity only because the officials receiving these preposterous amounts are, in fact, owners of a controlling interest in the corporation. Another favorite form of camouflage is the setting aside of greatly excessive depreciation funds, the greater part of which not being needed for their ostensible purpose go later to swell the corporation's surplus and justify untaxable stock dividends. And most common and important of all is the issue of watered stocks, representing at the outset nothing but the right to share in the unjust exactions of a monopolized industry, and later on representing the capitalization of excess profits that never should have been allowed to be made. Meanwhile all of these shady transactions are encouraged and screened from public reprobation by the un-American and unjustifiable veil of secrecy which we have allowed to be drawn around corporation income-tax returns to such an extent that, as Basil M. Manly, of the Federal Trade Commission, declares in an article in the April issue of the Searchlight on "War Profits of the Patriot-eers," that:

So far as the income and excess-profits taxes are concerned the Treasury Department is an impenetrable veil through which no citizen is permitted to see.

In spite of the partial shelter which this "impenetrable veil" affords to individual offenders, it has been possible for the investigators employed by the Brotherhoods of Railroad Employees to submit to the Railroad Labor Board certain general conclusions that are supported by so many bits of corroborative evidence from independent sources that I believe them to be true. Among them are the following:

That the combined corporations of the country earned in net profits approximately $4,800,000,000 more per year during the three war years, 1916, 1917, and 1918, than during the three years prewar period;

That in two industries alone, namely, iron and steel and coal, $2,000,000,000 of net profit in excess of the prewar average were exacted during the three war years, constituting virtually a levy of $20 upon every man, woman, and child in the United States;

That 2,030 corporations earned in net profits over 100 per cent per year on their capital stock during the three war years; that 5,724 showed net profits of more than 50 per cent and that 20,000 earned from 20 to 50 per cent;

That the average profits during the three war years of all the corporations in the United States with net incomes of $1,000,000 or more approximated 24 per cent per year on their capital stock; and

That since the cessation of the demand for war supplies, industries engaged in the production of clothing, food, household supplies, and other staple necessaries of life have exploited the public to an extent even greater than during the years 1916, 1917, and 1918, so that the added toll of profiteering in absolute necessities since the armistice, reckoned in terms of net profits over and above the extortionate profits exacted in the war years, has amounted to at least 20 per cent in those industries for which profit figures for 1919 are now available.

DANGEROUS INFLUENCE OF PARTIAL DISCLOSURES OF PROFITS.

Whether these conclusions are sound or not, their effect for good or ill will not be limited to their influence upon the wage decisions of the Railroad Labor Board. Published under the auspices and with the sanction of the American Federation of Labor, they will be read and believed by every member of the unions, and also, unless speedily confuted by an impartial investigation, such as I now propose, will be accepted as facts by millions of unorganized sufferers from the high cost of living throughout the United States. If these statements and the alleged disclosures of profiteering constantly appearing in the press are not true, the corporations themselves should demand the investigation in self-defense. If they are true, Congress can not afford to lose a moment in verifying them and devising a remedy.

FOOD PROFITEERS.

Turning from the general to the particular, we find such examples as these of conscienceless profiteering in food products.

According to the Federal Trade Commission the Armour Grain Co., a large factor in the cereal and breakfast-food business, reported in 1917 net earnings of 290 per cent on the capital stock, or 67 per cent on the net worth of the company, including capital, surplus, and undivided profits.

The "Big Five" meat packers, who within the memory of men of middle age, while enriching their controlling owners beyond the dreams of nineteenth century avarice, have swelled their invested capital to the half billion mark almost solely by the capitalization of excess profits, made, according to the Federal Trade Commission, a total profit of $95,639,000 in 1917, as compared with a total profit of $22,108,000 in 1914.

The Christian Science Monitor recently published a table of financial returns of corporations which corroborates this report by showing that, owing to the unexampled prosperity of industrial concerns in the United States during the last five years, three of the "Big Five" have been enabled to accumulate surpluses available for "melon slicing" as follows: Morris & Co., $52,823,864, or $1,760 per share of common stock; Swift & Co., $84,575,179, or $56 per share; and Wilson & Co., $19,789,232, or $98 per share.

Is there any plausible explanation why the price of sugar has jumped to six times its prewar price, long after the war is over and without any proportionate shortage in the world's supply?

Figures gathered by the National City Bank of New York conclude that the amount of sugar brought into the United States will exceed by 1,250,000,000 pounds the imports of any other year in our history. In view of these facts, is it hard to imagine why newspapers say that "sugar profiteers have a strangle hold on the American public"? A brokerage firm recently stated that there are some sugar concerns paying 100 per cent and over on their stock, and that even these present dividends are no criterion of actual profits since stockholders are sure to receive large cash or stock dividends in the near future.

CLOTHING PROFITEERS.

A conspicuous factor in bringing about the recent unprecedented high prices of clothing is the American Woolen Co. This combination, which for more than 20 years has controlled the market for all fabrics of which wool, new or reworked, forms a part, has derived its plant, its working capital, its accumulated surplus, and all other assets almost entirely from the capitalization of excessive profits.

At its organization it was capitalized at $70,000,000, of which the thirty millions of common was unquestionably water and the forty millions of 7 per cent preferred was represented by mill properties whose combined market value at the time probably did not exceed four or five millions. The company, while every year paying this nominally 7 per cent, but more probably 50 per cent, on the actual investment, remodeled its old mills and built new mills of much greater capacity entirely from the proceeds of short-time notes which were redeemed out of surplus earnings. A few years later ten millions of the common stock was "retired" at 31; in other words, $3,100,000 of surplus earnings were diverted into the pockets of certain shareholders whose identity was carefully concealed, leaving, however, little doubt that by this one transaction all the money actually ventured by those in control of the combine was replaced in full. This prewar record of profiteering was in the war period entirely cast in the shade. Its profits, as disclosed by the company's annual report for 1919, rose from $2,788,602 in 1914 to $15,513,414 in 1919, this after all taxes had been paid. Meanwhile the working capital of the company has been raised through its earnings from $21,843,636 in 1914 to $64,086,943 in 1919, and its "surplus reserves" from $8,024,435 to $39,004,426, while $13,193,549 has been written off for depreciation of plant and machinery which cost the company nothing, though its book value was originally $63,642,911.

The actual earnings for the common stock, as computed from the company's report by the Christian Science Monitor, were $41.87 a share in 1917, $93.86 in 1918, and $76.14 in 1919, or a total in three years of $211.87 per share of common stock, every dollar of which is undeniably water. The common stock, according to this showing, has now behind each share a value of $320 in quick assets alone, or not less than $520 per share when we estimate the company's plants at a fair replacement value. The financial editor of the Christian Science Monitor is clearly well within the mark in characterizing this 1919 report as "the most brilliant in the series of extraordinary statements issued by the company since 1916."

But the American Woolen Co., if the chief, is not the only clothing profiteer. The cotton mills have also exacted and are still exacting extraordinary profits. Eight of the leading textile companies taken together made net incomes in the war years 1916, 1917, and 1918 five times as large as in the prewar years 1912, 1913, and 1914.

If these figures and estimates are misleading, why, I ask, did the common stock of the American Woolen Co., quoted at $16 a share in 1915, sell for $169 a share last year? Why has the Amoskeag Mills, makers of ginghams, women's worsted goods, bed ticks, and other household goods, in addition to distributing its usual dividends on common and preferred stocks, recently announced its purpose to declare out of surplus earnings a stock dividend of 100 per cent? Why, according to the textile manufacturers' organ, Fibre and Fabric, have the Fitchburg Yarn Co. and the Grant Yarn Co., after paying dividends of 12 and 24 per cent, respectively, just declared stock dividends of 100 per cent and 300 per cent? Why, according to the same manufacturers' publication, are Parker & Hargraves, of Fall River, in a position to declare a stock dividend of 100 per cent, and the Fall Yarn Mill, of Woonsocket, R. I., a stock dividend of 300 per cent?

FUEL PROFITEERS.

The income-tax data compiled for the Senate by the Treasury Department showed huge profits for the bituminous mine operators out of all proportion to the increased wages of miners. Of the 392 bituminous coal companies cited, 334 showed net profits, after every possible deduction, of over 25 per cent. More than half the companies—218 to be exact—showed earnings of over 50 per cent on capital stock. And 118, or nearly one-third of all, showed net profits of over 100 per cent. The financial manuals show that the net incomes of 17 of these companies increased from $13,000,000 in 1914 to $48,000,000 in 1917, and their average net profit per ton from 20 to 60 cents. If the average profit per ton of these companies was representative of the whole industry, then the bituminous mine operators of the United States, during the four years 1916, 1917, 1918, and 1919, gathered a total profit of more than $1,000,000,000, of which more than two-thirds was excess.

The anthracite coal operators show still larger percentages of net profits. The average annual prewar incomes of four of the larger companies were $7,000,000, which was 15 per cent on the capital stock. In 1917 this average had risen to $16,000,000, or over 34 per cent on the capital stock. The income-tax returns show that the net income of six smaller companies, which was already 57 per cent in 1916, increased to 94½ per cent in 1917.

The statistics presented to the Railroad Labor Board by the railroad brotherhoods tend to show how these huge profits were obtained.

In 1914 the average cost of anthracite coal at the mine was $2.28 per ton, of which $1.59 was paid for labor. Transportation to New York cost $1.80 per ton, and the retail price was $7.54, leaving margins totaling $3.46 for the operator, the sales corporation, and the retail dealer. In December, 1918, the cost at the mine was $4.22, of which $2.97 went to labor. Transportation had risen to $2.30, and the retail price to $11.82, leaving $4.80 for the distributor's margin. Thus the retail price increased three times as much as the increase in miners' wages.

NEWSPRINT PROFITEERS.

Another instance of the extent to which profiteering is being carried on is the evidence which has recently been presented before the Senate committee investigating the shortage of newsprint paper. This evidence tends to show that there are manufacturers producing newsprint paper at a reasonable profit for about 3 cents per pound, yet the lowest price that a large publisher can contract for newsprint paper to-day is approximately 6 cents per pound; and the smaller publishers of country papers, who can not make a contract because of their small requirements, have to deal through brokers and jobbers, who are charging anywhere from 15 cents to 20 cents per pound. This unmistakably proves that there is a profit divided between the manufacturer and the jobber, largely the latter, ranging from 400 to 800 per cent. Even the largest publishers, according to the evidence presented, are compelled to pay some manufacturers of newsprint paper about 200 per cent profit over and above all costs of production, including labor and overhead expenses.

One broker who handles newsprint and other kinds of paper appeared before this committee and testified that his company in the year 1919 paid dividends of 120 per cent. His company does not handle paper at all, but simply acts as a broker. And all these disclosures appear in spite of an agreement entered into by the Department of Justice of the United States Government and newsprint manufacturers, which is still in force, permitting the Federal Trade Commission to fix the price of newsprint paper, and the last price fixed by this commission was 3.75 cents per pound.

In the face of uncontradicted testimony that 50 per cent of the publishers of small daily and weekly newspapers will be driven out of business if present prices continue, how can we longer remain indifferent? The imminent success of the profiteers in destroying one of the safeguards of liberty—the means of enlightening and educating our masses—should arouse us to action.

It is fortunate, indeed, to be able to point out that during this mad rush for excessive profits there still exist businesses whose integrity and fair dealing can not be questioned. I refer to concerns of the type of the Great Northern Paper Co. This concern, as it was shown before the Senate committee, has fully maintained the traditional reputation of American business for fair dealing. I firmly believe—and we may congratulate ourselves upon the fact—that there still are many concerns of this kind in the country who would gladly cooperate with the Government in its efforts to cleanse business of the stigma of profiteering.

RISE IN STOCKS REVEALS PROFITEERING.

Why continue? It is a story, to use the language of a Government employee familiar with the real situation, dazzling and unbelievable. But if the figures from Government reports and the returns of the companies themselves are not convincing proof of profiteering, what is the explanation of the sudden rise of stock prices in such typical instances as these: Selling price of the stock of the Endicott-Johnson Co., shoe manufacturers, was $37.50 in April, 1919, and rose to $150 per share in December, 1919; selling price of the Corn Products Refining Co., the largest producers of corn products in the world, rose from $15 in 1916 to $105 in the early part of 1920; of the Central Leather Co., dealers in hides and leather, from $13 in 1914 to $116 in 1919; the American Hide & Leather Co., also dealers in hides and leather, from $20 in 1915 to $140 in 1919; Peunta-Alegra Sugar Co., from $50 in 1919 to $118 in 1920; Cuban-American Sugar Co., from $38 in 1915 to $150 in 1919 and to $480 in 1920.

PROFITEERING AND NOT WAGE INCREASES CAUSING DISCONTENT.

There are many writers and speakers, Mr. President, who are attempting to divert public attention from the manufacturing and commercial profiteers and place the responsibility for the high cost of living upon the inflation of currency and credit, upon the restricted production, and upon the advancing wages of labor.

I do not deny or minimize the fact that all these elements do enter into the problem and contribute to a greater or less extent to the high prices. What I do contend is that the very existence of these contributory causes, all of them more or less inevitable and necessary, instead of diverting our attention from profiteering ought to make it appear all the more inexcusable and base.

Inflation was unavoidable under the urgent needs of the World War. The stinted production of raw materials and of food was inevitable also. The demand of labor for a living wage can not be refused unless we disregard all considerations of justice and humanity and sacrifice the true welfare of the Nation now and for the generations to come. These factors in the rising cost of living are not the real cause of the popular discontent. The American people realize that in view of existing circumstances they must pay enough for the necessaries of life to make up for the shrunken value of the dollar and for increased costs of production due to the scarcity of materials and transportation facilities, until such time as these difficulties can be gradually overcome. They are willing also to award to labor a living wage and to capital a moderate and a reasonable profit. They are not willing, and they will not much longer endure, that the price of necessaries should be still further inflated beyond measure in order that corporations may pile up unprecedented surpluses and that enormous dividends may flow into the coffers of thousands of newly-made American millionaires.

I pause here to call attention to an advertisement appearing in the New York Times of this morning. The barbers of the city of New York have gone on strike. The Brotherhood of Employees of the Terminal Barber Shops have refused to go on strike because, as they say, it will only mean increased wages which means increase in the cost of living. They say in that remarkable advertisement that they sympathize with their brother barbers who think thus to meet the present cost of living that they are relying on the public and the Government to help improve the present situation, and that they will tolerate and continue to work for reduced wages until such time as the Government may act.

I wish to read the advertisement. It is so expressive of the thought that I have tried to express here that I read it:

TERMINAL BARBERS STAND BY THE PUBLIC.

The Brotherhood of Employees of the Terminal Barber Shops, having carefully considered the demands of the barbers for higher wages and higher prices and the strike now called to enforce them, hereby in full meeting assembled declares its position as follows:

We have observed with deep concern the constantly increasing cost of living. It is plain to us that, as wages have increased, prices have correspondingly raised, soon resulting in the necessity for forther increase of wages; that this process is continuous, so that no increase in wages is of substantial or permanent benefit, because quickly absorbed in the higher cost of living, with the result that the worker is no better off than before.

We are in hearty accord and sympathy with the public in its battle to reduce the cost of living.

Think of it, barbers refusing to go on strike to increase their wages because they are in sympathy with the public battle against the increased cost of living! I continue the reading:

We consider it vital to the whole Nation that prices shall not be further increased. The vicious circle of increasing wages and rising prices must be broken. A practical stand for the effective accomplishment of this purpose must be taken: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we are determined to do our share, at whatever present sacrifice, in the public's fight against high prices, and we believe it to be to the interest of all wage earners to do likewise.

We are, therefore, opposed to the demands for higher wages and higher prices. We shall not participate in or support the strike. We shall remain at our jobs, prepared to serve the public at our present wages and at present prices, believing that in this way we shall perform our public duty as well as serve our own best interests.

Our position, our wages, and the prices charged in barber shops may have no great public importance. But it is of vital importance, if the public's campaign against high costs is to be successful, that wage earners and employers alike should realize that in this world crisis relief will come only through moderation in demands for wages as well as for profits—and act accordingly.

If we are the first labor organization to take this position publicly, we are glad and proud to assume the leadership, in the hope that this may prove to be the beginning of an effective movement to advance a great public cause.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF EMPLOYEES OF TERMINAL BARBER SHOPS,

INACTIVITY OF CONGRESS.

While the story of profiteering is being recited from pulpit and soap box prices continue to rise unhindered and unchecked and the whole Nation is seething with a growing resentment and alarm. The inactivity of Congress presents a spectacle of indifference that has seldom been surpassed since the courtiers of Louis XIV reveled while the French peasants were eating grass. Since last October, when we amended the Lever Act in order to bring clothing, fertilizer, and a few other articles within its provisions and under the extraordinary war-time powers of the administration, what have we done to reduce the cost of living or curb the extortions of the profiteers? One solitary measure—public act 167—I recall, which, in a sense, was intended and adapted to reduce the cost of subsistence of a certain class of consumers; but what consumers? The act authorizes the sale of 5,000,000 barrels of flour, a part, I believe, of the Army reserve stores which were made unnecessary by the cessation of hostilities, to European peoples. This was, no doubt, a serious interference with the plans and an interference with the unjust exactions of food profiteers across the water; but here in America, unfortunately—I would not be understood to intimate that this fact had anything to do with the bill's early passage—here in America the effect undoubtedly was to relieve our own food profiteers of a dreaded Government competition, to sustain the American flour market, and to prevent a reduction in the price of bread.

SPECIFIC EVIDENCE OF CONGRESSIONAL INACTIVITY.

It is not amiss to pause here and point to the positively wanton indifference and irresponsiveness of Congress to the proposals made thus far to alleviate the suffering of our people. Why have we not taken action on the various "blue-sky laws" that have come up before us; on the Kenyon-Kendrick and Gronna bills, which followed out the suggestions of Mr. Hoover and of the Federal Trade Commission in regard to independent abattoirs and a separation of packing houses and stockyards as a means of lowering meat prices? Why must we still answer, "Nothing done," on the punitive measures against profiteers urged by the public and the press; on the McNary bill, intended to make compulsory the stamping of costs of manufacture and distribution on articles en route from maker to consumer; and on the several other such bills and resolutions coming up before us? It remains the lamentable truth, Mr. President, that we have limited our efforts in behalf of our imposed-upon classes to a pitiful and totally cumbrous and unworkable extension of the Lever Act and the organization of a Sugar Board, which, so far as it appears, by the very action of the profiteers themselves has been rendered incapable of functioning.

On the 8th day of August, 1919, President Wilson, in his address to Congress on the high cost of living, made six separate recommendations for legislation to check profiteering. Two of these recommendations—the first for extending the life of the Food Control Commission and including fuel and clothing under its authority, and the second for providing a penalty for profiteering, have since been carried into effect. With the exception of the cold-storage bill which passed the Senate yesterday, having previously passed the House, no final action on the other four—as to regulating cold storage, marking stored articles with the date of their receipt, and stamping all articles in interstate commerce with the price realized by the producer, licensing corporations engaged in interstate commerce on conditions preventing exorbitant profits, and Federal control of security issues to prevent stock watering, and so forth, has been taken in the nine months that have elapsed since the recommendations were made.

Many months ago, Mr. President, the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I am a member, made by order of the Senate a careful and thorough investigation of the causes of the steel strike, and submitted to this body on the 8th of November a report stating, among other conclusions, that the laborers in the steel mills had just complaints in regard to the conditions of employment, and had also a right to be heard on those complaints by representatives of their own choice, which right had been denied to them. We found—and I quote from their report in substance—that a majority of the men were working in the mills 10 and 12 hours a day; that there was evidence that one day's rest in seven was not the uniform rule of the mills; that the conduct of public officials, and in some instances of the courts, had given color to the claim of the strikers that they had been denied the rights of peaceable assembly and free speech; that unoffending men and women had been arrested without reason, thrown into jail, and in some instances fined by magistrates without reason or justification; that, in short, "the action in many cases was such as to lead the employees to believe that the officers of the law were acting on the side of the Steel Corporation."

It was not the duty of this committee to recommend congressional action, but we did suggest the creation of a board somewhat similar to the War Labor Board with large powers of compulsory investigation, mediation, and conciliation, and we suggested also, in view of the deplorable housing conditions under which some of the employees were found to be living, and in view also of the real antidote for industrial unrest that comes with home ownership, that the Government should seriously consider extending Federal aid to home builders in some such way as the farmer has been aided under the Federal loan act, and that the Steel Corporation "should use some of its large profits in extending the work of home building."

Congress has not acted upon these suggestions, nor has Congress attempted to remove any of the causes of unrest which we pointed out. In the meantime a commission of inquiry organized by the interchurch world movement, after a long and patient investigation of the steel industry, with the aim of applying Christian principles to the settlement of the long-standing controversy between the steel company and large masses of its employees, not only fully indorsed the committee's findings, to which I have referred, but it went still further and reported that the cause of the controversy lay in grievances which gave the workers just cause for complaint and for action, and that these unredressed grievances still exist in the steel industry. This report was made within a week. To those who believe that labor has no grievances and who have been denouncing strikes in general and this strike in particular as unjustifiable, I make bold to suggest a perusal of the report prepared at great expense and sacrifice of time by a body of disinterested and public-spirited Christian gentlemen, who were actuated by no interest other than the welfare of humanity.

Who can read the report of the Senate committee and the nonpolitical report of the interchurch world movement committee and be able to explain to the working people in these industries and their fellow sympathizers throughout the country the neglect of Congress to deal with admitted labor abuses? What answer can be made to the radical agitator when he quotes these reports and asserts that the Government has not and will not act?

What satisfactory excuse can be made to the Government postal employees, the justice of whose claims to wage increases is everywhere agreed to, for the failure of a committee of this body to make a report on the investigation in progress for over a year on the matter of salary readjustment? What Senator here can tell these employees when this report will be made and when action will be taken? Let us hope it will be before the whole Postal System is crippled by wholesale resignations or before it will be time for another readjustment of wages.

What a shameful and disgraceful neglect of the obligations of our office and what a breach of our covenant with the American people!

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I have no intention whatever of defending profiteering, but the Senator referred to the cotton-mill industry. I do not know that he mentioned any mill in my section of the country; but I desire to say to him that the industry down there is a new one, and possibly the Senator does not know that a great many mills there have been built up with a very small capital.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It so happens that I have not mentioned the cotton industry as conducted in the section of the country from which the Senator comes; I have confined myself to New England.

Mr. DIAL. But, in order that no misapprehension may arise, I desire to say that a great many of the mills in my section have operated from 1 to 10 years and have never declared a dividend.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am not given to partisan charges or recriminations, but it is self-evident where the main burden of responsibility rests. The Republican majorities in this Chamber and in the lower branch have had the power, and it was their duty, to devise and enact effectual remedies. It is vain for the Republican steering committees to attempt to shift the blame upon the President and his Attorney General. If the administration has not accomplished all that was expected of it, whether because of the illness of the President or because, as I believe, the penal laws which Congress has enacted were totally insufficient of themselves to achieve the desired result, this very fact should have led Congress to intervene with promptness and vigor.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to dissent, Mr. President, in one particular from the statement which the Senator from Massachusetts has just made as to the responsibility for certain conditions which he has outlined, particularly where he has singled out, with his well-known emphasis, the work of the Joint Postal Commission.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I only cited that as an illustration of the unrest rampant in the country, as indicated by the clamor of Government employees for action and the inability after a year's delay of the Government or any Senator to be able to tell when there will be a report or when action will be taken.

Mr. MOSES. Inasmuch as the Senator from Massachusetts has challenged any Senator to make an announcement, if he will permit me I will say that the Joint Postal Commission is at work daily and nightly upon material which is very voluminous, and that it expects to complete its report shortly, I hope within a week. Some members of the commission certainly will press the matter closely upon the attention of Congress.

In this connection, Mr. President, it is probably pertinent to point out that this particular commission, although provided for within a few weeks of the time when it was known that the Republican Party was about to take possession of both branches of Congress, was constituted with a Democratic majority, and there still exists a tie between Democrats and Republicans, and that that personnel has existed only for a few weeks; so that if the majority on the commission are to take the onus for any delay that has occurred, it must rest with the six Democratic members of the commission and not with the four Republican members who were the minority of the commission until a few weeks ago.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am not attempting to defend the Democratic Party or any commission of the Democratic Congress appointed when the Congress was Democratic. I am pointing out facts, and I am pointing out who now is in control. The purpose of the reference to the Postal Commission was to show that unrest and discontent to-day exist in the belief among many people, which we must arrest; that we can not speedily and effectively bring about a remedy for well-known grievances. I do not think there is any branch of the service of the Government that has suffered more than the Postal Department. Every Senator here has received telegrams and letters on the subject day after day; postmasters have written to me; the postmaster at Boston informed me that the whole postal system there would be crippled if something were not done. I simply refer to this matter in the hope that we may realize the necessity of speedy action upon matters of this importance before the adjournment of this Congress.

Two years ago the Democratic Party, the party of the administration, was defeated at the polls. The control of both branches of Congress was wrested from the then majority party and Republican Senators and Representatives, coming with a fresh mandate from the people, were intrusted with the legislative control of the Nation's affairs. Theirs is the duty, theirs the responsibility, theirs the party that will reap the chief credit for achievements if Congress even now rouses to energetic action. Theirs, too, will be the just condemnation of the people if the present session ends, as it has so far continued, without any attempt to relieve the Nation's growing distress.

The Congress can not shift the responsibility for present evils to any other department in Washington. The welfare of the people is the first fundamental principle of government, and the public servants neglecting it or willfully refusing to recognize a violation of it cease to be worthy of the confidence of the citizens. Profiteering, merciless, relentless, indiscriminate of man or child, intrinsically in conflict with the spirit of humanity, constitutes the gravest living peril to our existence as a free nation. It is no respecter of ideals or of the enduring laws of God, but, resting upon a base of the most ignoble elements of man, is provocative of the worst instincts within him. He who crushes the poor and helpless defies the wrath of God as well as nations.

Mr. President, Congress has been culpably inactive. A national election is approaching and our people will soon begin to ask, How and where is the blame for our inactivity to be apportioned?

WILL THE PARTY CONVENTIONS MEET THE NATION'S DEMAND?

The eyes of the Nation, almost despairing of any governmental relief, are turning to the political party conventions soon to be held. There is a strong and vigorous demand by the people that the political parties and candidates shall definitely and unequivocally commit themselves to specific policy on this great issue. This insistent demand is echoed and reechoed by men and women of all shades of political opinion. It appears in the tentative platforms and appeals of all the minority political groups. Among the replies to the questionnaires of the Republican Party managers for platform suggestions the largest number deal with the cost of living, profiteering, and regulation of big business.

If there is no action necessary by Congress, why, I ask the Republican Members of this body, are the people asking for planks of this kind in your political platform? If no blame attaches to the dominant party in Congress for its failure to act, why has a conservative Republican like Murray Butler listed as two of his important policies the cost of living and the problem of big business?

It is not a time for one-man leadership. No single individual has the vision or the superintelligence to undertake this work alone. It is time for teamwork. It is time for a well-disposed, whole-hearted crew pulling and working together to keep the ship from foundering. The people are looking for the captain and the crew.

The political conventions have the opportunity to select the leader and organize the crew. Are the Democratic and Republican Parties to fail the voters? Shall they be forced to enroll in the Socialist Party, or to organize a third party which shall offer a candidate whose public record typifies opposition to profiteering and a platform which promises specific measures of relief? It is no time for honeyed words or mere generalities. Neither does the occasion call for noncommittal candidates who are accepting for campaign expenses a portion of the ill-gotten profits of the profiteers on an implied understanding that they will be "safe." I do not hesitate to say that, league or no league of nations issue, the party and candidate who honestly and courageously espouse this issue will sweep the country.

The party to which I have the honor to be a member is said to be divided. Its chances of success to-day are rated as doubtful. Democrats, with all our divergent views on the league, our party is not dead. It is not and will not be defeated if we have the courage to give the people a platform and a candidate clearly and courageously standing out against profiteering. The call from every station in life and every quarter of the United States is for a leader to unite the exploited people of America. Shall we answer it and obtain victory, or shall we turn away from the people, who with outstretched hands are pleading for protection, and go down to deserved and ignoble defeat?

REMEDIES.

I have attempted to show that unrest and radical thought are more prevalent in America to-day than ever before; that the high cost of living is the fundamental cause of the present disturbed condition of the public mind. I have spoken of the heavy burdens placed upon our people by the excessive cost of living, and I have denounced the unpatriotic conduct of the class of people in America who have been taking advantage of unusual and abnormal conditions to make grossly unfair and excessive profits from the helpless millions. I have sought to point out that there is a serious responsibility resting upon Congress to do something to protect the overwhelming majority of our people against the few strongly intrenched and powerful combinations that are responsible for the just outcry against profiteering.

Now, I come to the question which I think must be uppermost in your mind: What are the remedies?

Before making a direct answer to that question let us analyze, if possible, the public attitude of mind in America on this subject. One influential group, the beneficiaries of the present condition and their followers and sympathizers, assert that nothing can or should be done; that the high prices of which we complain are merely the natural result of the operations of the laws of supply and demand; and that only time and an increase in production will satisfactorily alleviate the present distress.

Another group, while admitting the prevalence of wholesale profiteering, takes the position that nothing can be done by the Government, because the only effective action that can be employed would be an interference with the individual's right to carry on and conduct his business independent of Government regulation or control.

Any such governmental interference in times of peace they bitterly oppose, because they regard it as the entering wedge of a general policy of State socialism. These two groups are doing more, in my opinion, to strengthen the grip of the radical element upon our body politic than they realize, because their attitude lends support to the claim of the agitator that our political institutions are powerless and that only a fundamental reorganization of our economic and industrial system will settle the problem.

Need I remind these groups that there is little distinction in moral culpability between the man who steals my purse and the man who, having undertaken to supply his fellow men with the necessities of life, takes advantage of their helplessness to extort unfair, unreasonable, and illegal profits out of the expenditures they must undergo in order to feed and clothe themselves and their children. Larceny, in the main, is a wrong only against the individual, yet it is one which society undertakes to prevent and to punish. Profiteering is an offense against the whole structure of society, and one which, if allowed to continue unchecked, will result in the demoralization of patriotic sentiment and good citizenship, by means of which the Government exercises its authority and on which its security depends. To extort unjustifiable, unreasonable profits is an offense in the sight of God, an infringement of that moral law which is intrenched in the consciences of all mankind. It is an offense which we can not condone or permit to go longer unpunished.

Aside from these groups, there is also the large general public, who, recognizing the gravity of this offense, demand that the criminal and civil codes deal with this evil. This gives proof that our people consider our political institutions to be broad and efficient enough to protect the people in each generation against new abuses that grow out of changes in economic and industrial order. The radical agitator's claim that only a revolution which will destroy the very basis upon which our Government is founded will meet the social, industrial, and economic needs of to-day is thus proved fallacious.

I have contended heretofore, and I again invite attention to the fact, that our institutions are of such a flexible and elastic character as to meet the needs of every emergency. There never will be any need of resorting to force to eliminate abuses or to secure the people in the enjoyment of the rights which are their birthrights as Americans.

PUBLICITY THE STRONGEST WEAPON.

My first suggestion is that a thorough examination of the income-tax returns be undertaken by a committee of this Senate, so that the real extent of profiteering may be disclosed and the chief offenders pointed out. Such an inquiry, even if it accomplishes nothing more, will give indisputable proof that our Government does not intend to keep a veil of secrecy over any facts pertaining to profiteering. This revolving searchlight of publicity will concentrate public denunciation upon the intrigues, political, financial, or industrial, that can not bear the light of day.

I am not alone, Mr. President, in demanding that the facts disclosed by the income-tax returns in regard to profiteering should be given to Congress and the public. The former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, in his telegram of protest to Dr. Garfield against permitting the mine operators to increase further the price of coal to cover the proposed increase in miners' wages, urged that the income-tax returns of 1918 and 1919 be made public in order to ascertain whether the operators were still exacting the enormous profits, ranging, as he stated, from 100 per cent even as high as 2,000 per cent on the invested capital, which his knowledge of the income-tax returns of 1917 satisfied him had then been extorted from the public.

The New York World, commenting upon Mr. McAdoo's statement, inquired why, if income-tax returns may serve as a basis for the estimation of the exactions of the coal profiteers, can not the same income-tax test be applied wherever profiteering exists or is suspected? It also suggested that no better use could possibly be made of these returns than to make them public as an aid in protecting American consumers against profiteering in any of the necessaries of life. The suggestion that it is the duty of Congress to make use of these returns to expose and check profiteering has been generally approved by the press throughout the country.

I also recommend immediate action by this body on the long-pending antiprofiteering measures to which I have referred in the early part of my address and which are still pending before Congress.

I further recommend that Congress give proof to the country that it stands ready, that it is willing, and that it is determined promptly to inaugurate public trading on a large scale unless exorbitant profits are voluntarily and materially reduced at once. In a word, I recommend Government competition as an available remedy.

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION AS A REMEDY.

Big business must not think that the elimination of competition makes the public powerless to stop profiteering simply because public sentiment stands against interfering with the individual's right to do business. It must be remembered there still remains the right of the people to set up Government competition, and I believe that if the Government would only demonstrate—as it did in the armor-plate case—that it is willing to deal in public necessaries whenever the profits of concerns handling them become extortionate, we would soon discover a willingness on their part to be satisfied with fair profits. The war has ushered in a new way of thinking about the relation between those who toil and those who gain, and we are seeking a way to smooth out the difficulties of the parties at conflict. But so long as men shall be permitted by this Government to insist upon excessively large returns at the expense of the greater number, there never can be any stability in theory or substance to our social and industrial orders. It is for us to superimpose methods of altruism upon the injurious machinations of self-interest, and if we are unable to do so by mere regulative measures, then in the name of fair play we must take the matter in our own hands and substitute Government for private distribution of the necessary commodities of our people.

The armor-plate story will here bear repetition. In 1916 it was suspected by naval officials in the market for armor plate that the rates offered the Government were exorbitant. A Senate committee was organized to investigate the matter, and the facts it uncovered showed that American steel corporations were selling plate to Russia and Japan almost $200 cheaper per ton than the prices specified by the competitive bids for the same material submitted to the Navy Department by these companies.

The steel interests stood defiant for a period, during which a bill was reported in the Senate appropriating $11,000,000 for the establishment of a Government armor-plate manufactory.

It is a significant fact, however, that shortly afterwards the Government received new bids at a figure considerably below the first, as well as below the figure given foreign nations.

This incident is indicative of only one thing—that it still remains within the power of Congress to create means of supplying public or national necessities out of the resources of the Government when the private forces supplying these necessities have abused the privileges delegated to them by that Government by combining among themselves, either by limiting the quantity or agreeing upon the price, to extort unjustified returns from the sale of their products.

In conclusion, I again ask, How can this Congress expect the approval of the record made by it since March 4, 1919, in solving or attempting to solve the problem of profiteering, which is such an important factor in the high cost of living? Why has there been no successful attempt made to check the profiteer? To be sure, much of the statesmanship in Congress has been absorbed in the admittedly important task of adjusting our international problems. It is a pity, however, that Congress has not formulated a policy of reconstruction at home. We surely can not point with pride to the fact that of all the nations of the world America is the only country which up to the present time has adopted no policy of reconstruction since the cessation of hostilities in November, 1918.

It is not yet too late. We still have an opportunity in the few remaining months of the session to do some effective Americanization work, and I do not hesitate to say that the Americanization work most urgently needed to-day is the Americanization of the greedy and selfish profiteers.

Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I offer, and which I ask to have printed and lie on the table until to-morrow.

The resolution (S. Res. 366) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a select committee of five Senators, three from the majority and two from the minority, to investigate and report to the Senate the relation between high prices for necessaries and the concentration of wealth, and for this purpose the President is hereby requested to permit such committee to inspect the tax returns of any corporation, association, or partnership in accordance with section 257 of the revenue act of 1913.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps it would be just as well at this time to call attention to the fact that a certain statement made by Mr. McAdoo, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, and just referred to by Senator WALSH, has a tendency to inflame the minds of the people, and if the whole story were told it might appear in altogether a different light. I paid little attention to the statement at the time it was made, but I see that it is being repeated over and over again upon the floor of the Senate and of the House of Representatives that a certain coal mining company had made over 2,000 per cent profits during the year 1917 as shown by income tax return.

Mr. President, I have before me Senate Document No. 259, and under the head of mining coal is found the report of profits of coal companies referred to by Secretary McAdoo. I find the following facts: The code number is given and not the name and no one outside of the Treasury Department can give the name. The capital stock of the company referred to was $10,000, while its invested capital was $427,173.

It is true, Mr. President, that upon the $10,000 of capital stock this concern made over 2,000 per cent, but on the amount it had invested in the business including capital stock and invested capital it made 34.79 per cent.

I know that 34.79 per cent is too large a profit to make; but why try to make the people of the United States believe that there was made upon the money invested in an institution producing coal in this country 2,000 per cent? It is not true.

I wonder why he did not refer to code numbered 162, for that company made on its capital stock 7,856 per cent, but it had an invested capital over and above its capital stock of $1,274,364, and the percentage made upon its invested capital and capital stock was 34.13 per cent, instead of 7,856 per cent. There is quite a difference between 34 per cent and 7,856 per cent, and whenever a question is presented to the American people it seems to me it ought to be presented covering all the facts. A half truth is worse than a falsehold many, many times.

I am not saying the company should have been allowed to make 34 per cent upon their capital invested. That is a question I am not discussing to-day. I will say, however, I do not believe they ought to have made that percentage. But why try to make the American people believe that this company made 7,856 per cent or the other company 2,000 per cent upon its investment when it is not true?

No doubt the company referred to organized with $10,000 capital stock, and perhaps all of their improvements, all of their extensions, and all of their future purchases made after the original organization were made from invested capital. That invested capital took just as many good dollars to make improvements as if paid for by capital stock, and there is not a law ever passed by Congress, or which ever will be passed—there is not a law anywhere in the world—which does not recognize the fact that if there is capital invested the returns upon that capital invested should be considered exactly the same as upon capital stock. The money in both cases is used for the same purpose, it is taxed in the same way, and has to be reported as a company liability, and in every report that is made to the Government showing the amount invested both are included. I thought at this time it was proper to call attention to the oft-repeated report, because of the fact that it is being heralded all over the United States, and in this Chamber, as a fact coming from the ex-Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator favor the tremendous profiteering dividends and so-called earnings which have been declared and distributed?

Mr. SMOOT. No. If the Senator had listened he would have known that I have already said I did not. But I want the people to understand that the facts do not justify the statement made by Mr. McAdoo in the case referred to when capital stock and invested capital are considered, as they are considered in all laws of Congress and in all income-tax returns.

Mr. OWEN. When the Senator so vigorously assails a lack of accuracy in one item, when the abundance of the evidence is so complete otherwise, I might have drawn an erroneous inference.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not understand what the Senator means.

Mr. OWEN. What I meant was that I would have drawn the inference that the Senator was defending these high profits.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not even defend the 34 per cent which these companies made, let alone the 2,000 per cent as reported. I simply called attention to the fact that the report that was made by Mr. McAdoo that there was a coal-producing company in this country which made over 2,000 per cent on the money invested was not true. From the books of the Treasury Department, as shown in the document referred to, any citizen of the United States can turn and learn the truth. I can not give the name of the company, but the code number is given, and it shows exactly what the capital stock for 1917 was, what the invested capital for that year was; the net income for that year; the tax for 1917, both income tax, excess-profits tax, and the total tax; it shows the percentage of total taxes to net income for 1917; it shows the net income after deducting taxes for 1917; it shows percentage of net income on capital stock for 1917; it shows the percentage of net income to invested capital for 1917; it shows percentage of net income, after deducting taxes, to capital stock for 1917, and the percentage of the net income, after deducting taxes, to invested capital for 1917; it shows the capital stock for 1916, the net income for 1916, and so forth.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if Mr. McAdoo has ever explained to what company he referred?

Mr. SMOOT. He has not named the company, but named the per cent of profits of the company, and that will identify it in Public Document 259.

Mr. KENYON. As showing that company?

Mr. SMOOT. Showing that company, and the ones I have referred to are the ones in the report which show a profit of 2,000 per cent or more on capital stock, but not including invested capital. The company making 7,856 per cent has a capital stock of $10,000 and an invested capital of $1,274,364.

Mr. KENYON. What percentage did they make on the invested capital?

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-four per cent, instead of 7,856 per cent.

Mr. KENYON. The profits were high enough at 34 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I have already so stated.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has rendered a public service of a high order in his description of the extraordinary extent to which profiteering has been going on in this country. I profoundly believe that unless the Democrats and the Republicans alike join in the control of the unrestrained private monopolies and profiteering going on in this country, we will have a reversal which will do away with both these old parties——

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). The Senator from Oklahoma will please suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, House bill 10378, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the distribution, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. On yesterday, when the Senate adjourned, the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill was before the Senate. The merchant marine bill is, I understand, the unfinished business. I was proceeding and had not finished my remarks on yesterday. I wish to address myself to the conference report when it is again taken up. What is the pleasure of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] touching the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has the floor. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OWEN. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to make an inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the Senator from Oklahoma had yielded. Does the Senator from North Dakota intend to call up the conference report?

Mr. GRONNA. I had hoped to be able to dispose of the conference report without very much further debate. Of course, I do not want to attempt to take the Senator from Mississippi off the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Washington was very kind yesterday in the matter. How much more time does the Senator from Mississippi think he will require?

Mr. HARRISON. There are just a few more items in the conference report that I desire to discuss. I do not think it will take over half an hour, although I do not know. When there are interruptions the Senator realizes how time flies.

Mr. GRONNA. When the Senator from Oklahoma has finished I shall be glad to have the conference report laid before the Senate and disposed of if it is agreeable to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I feel that I should keep the unfinished business before the Senate. I do not like to interfere, of course, with the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I yielded yesterday with the idea that it would not take so much time. I know how 15 or 20 minutes draw out to an hour or two hours, and how time is practically beyond the control of the Senator who is speaking. Interruptions are made, and when the Senator gets through some one desires to answer.

I feel this way about it. I know the Senator from Mississippi could talk on the conference report when the shipping bill is before the Senate, but I would not feel like consenting to having the unfinished business laid aside unless there could be some pretty definite assurance as to the time the conference report would take. At the present time I do not feel like consenting to lay the shipping bill aside.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Washington if he would be willing to give us an hour?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not really like to do that. That is considerable time. The shipping bill is going to take considerable time in conference. It is a very important measure and, as I say, it will take considerable time in conference. So we ought to get it through the Senate as quickly as possible in order to get it into conference. The Senator's bill, I think, is already disposed of, except two or three items.

Mr. GRONNA. But it has been in conference more than two months. All I ask is that the Senate shall insist on three items and let it go again to conference, and I think we can agree and dispose of it very quickly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I think. When the Senator gets it into conference it will not take very long to dispose of it. So he can get it into conference very soon after we get the shipping bill through. At any rate, the Senator from Oklahoma has the floor and he can proceed.

Mr. OWEN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for a few minutes,

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I think this question is of sufficient importance to have more Senators here. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Harris	Nelson	Simmons
Borah	Harrison	New	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smoot
Capper	Kellogg	Nugent	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Overman	Sterling
Colt	Kenyon	Owen	Thomas
Curtis	Keyes	Page	Underwood
Dial	King	Phelan	Warren
Fernald	Lodge	Ransdell	Williams
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard
Hale	McNary	Sherman

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are absent on public business.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are absent on public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. Call the roll of absentees.

The names of absent Senators were called, and Mr. HARDING, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to their names when called.

Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JOHNSON of California, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. BALL, Mr. McCUMBER, and Mr. McLEAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

Mr. OWEN resumed and concluded his speech, which is entire, as follows:

Mr. President, I was just saying that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in my judgment has rendered an important service in calling the attention of the Senate and of the country to the duty of the Congress to deal resolutely with the question of profiteering and of private monopoly. The violation of the tenth commandment, forbidding men "to covet their neighbors' goods," has become a universal sin. I urged a Senate resolution at the beginning of this Congress to organize a committee on reconstruction, but the conservative Republicans who control the Senate were unwilling to take any real action.

A year ago last winter, in December, 1918, I spent some time in London gathering together there what they were doing in England with a view to reconstruction. They had over 80 great committees, consisting of the most learned business men in the Kingdom of Great Britain, merchants, practical manufacturers, men who were expert in transportation, men who were expert in different materials and substances required for the manufacturing industry of Great Britain. Those reports were printed by the British Government, and I sent them to the Department of Commerce of the United States in the hope that they might be of some service to this country, but no action has been taken by the Congress or by our Government.

It will be recalled that when this Congress met there were various resolutions introduced looking to some action by Congress along reconstruction lines, but all the time has been taken up apparently with ordinary routine and discussing the League of Nations, which has been before the Senate and kept under debate for month after month, to the practical exclusion of the problems affecting the high cost of living, such as increased production, and so forth.

In considering the question of the profiteer I have been rather appalled to see the attitude of the member banks and of the Federal reserve banks. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the earnings of some of the banks of the country.

[At this point Mr. OWEN yielded to Mr. KENYON, who raised the question of a quorum, and the roll was called.]

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have for some time been trying to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of the action taken by the Federal Reserve Board in raising the rates of interest. It looks as if the very high reserve-bank rates, together with the high rate being charged by the member banks of the country on commercial loans and by the banks on call loans on the New York Stock Exchange, will bring about the conviction that it is impossible to get the necessary credits in order to carry on the business of the country. I deny that there should be any insuperable difficulty in getting the credits which are necessary for manufacture and commerce for productive and distributive purposes.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the high interest rates proposed by the Federal Reserve Board are not necessary for the real interest or encouragement of the banks.

The Federal reserve banks, on a capital of $87,000,000 last year—and I believe that includes 90 per cent of the earnings which Congress permitted them to have out of the previous year's earnings—earned $102,000,000 in 1919, a net earning of $82,000,000, or approximately 100 per cent, on an average for all the reserve banks, while the New York Federal reserve bank earned 110 per cent. They are assuredly not in need of earning any more than that. They earned that on a 4 per cent basis. Now that the Reserve Board has raised the rate to 6 per cent it would mean a 50 per cent increase, and they, therefore, ought to earn on that basis 150 per cent if this rate is persisted in.

We talk about profiteering. If the Government's own instrumentalities are permitted to make such unfair earnings without objection, what right have we to complain of the ordinary citizen making 100 per cent? I have here the report of the 10 leading banks of New York City showing their earnings on their capital. The National City Bank earned at the rate of 4 per cent, 33 per cent per annum at that rate of interest on the basis of its earnings for the first half of 1919; the Chase National Bank, 93 per cent; the First National Bank, 100 per cent; the Mechanics and Metals National Bank, 63 per cent; the American Exchange National Bank, 40 per cent; the National Park Bank, 60 per cent; the Irving National Bank, 60 per cent; the Chatham & Phoenix, 55 per cent; and the Hanover National Bank, 121 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Were those earnings on their capital stock and reserves?

Mr. OWEN. They were on their capital stock. I ask to put into the RECORD, without reading, a table showing their capital stock, net earnings, percentage of earnings to capital, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

New York City.	Net earnings 6 months ended June 30, 1919.	Capital June 30, 1919.	Percentage of net earnings to capital, 6 months.	Rate per cent per annum for 6 months ended June 30, 1919.	Net earnings, 6 months ended Dec. 31, 1919.	Total year ended Dec. 31, 1919.	Capital Dec. 31, 1919.	Percentage of net earnings on capital, 12 months.	Capital and surplus, Dec. 31, 1919.	Percentage net earnings to capital and surplus, year ended Dec. 31, 1919.

Mr. OWEN. I will only pause to make the comment that when they earn such enormous sums and in a very short time create such surplus the earnings might as well be counted as against capital, for the earnings are against deposits and exchange and not really on their capital, which is merely a marginal security against their liabilities to depositors.

Mr. President, the Federal Reserve Board is taking its advice from those who think there ought to be a deflation of credit in this country. Certainly I am not in favor of inflation; I am not in favor of speculation; but I want to say to the Senate that if this policy is pursued of broadly deflating the credits of this country there can be only one result, that of depression and ruin to many.

There are two ways open for lowering prices. The best way is to increase commodities by stimulating both production and saving and letting credits for such purposes. That is the best way; that is the true way—to work and to save and to give men credit who need to have credit for the purpose of working, for the purpose of creating value. If credit is broadly denied them, as in the case of the State of the Senator from North Carolina, where they have a 6 per cent fixed rate and the Federal reserve charge is 6 per cent on money, how can the banks get any accommodation from Government reserve banks? They are limited to 6 per cent; they would have no margin; and it is necessary to allow some margin to member banks in order to enable them to function properly.

The worst way to lower prices is to raise interest rates, to deny credits, break up business, cause a panic, have an industrial depression, and have bankrupt sales, and cheap goods temporarily. This latter course may easily result if the banks all combine to raise rates and deny credits for productive and distributive purposes; but if that is done it is going to be done over my resolute protest, both in this Chamber and elsewhere. I have not hesitated to express myself about it in Detroit, in Cleveland, in Pittsburgh, in Baltimore and in other places, and I shall do so all over the country.

The Federal Reserve Board in raising rates broadly are striking manufacturers, wholesalers, merchants, retailers, stockmen, and farmers who are not speculating and who do not deserve to be punished as speculators. The reserve board is justified in encouraging a denial of credit for purely speculative purposes and is justified in urging the gradual liquidation of bank resources engaged in speculative enterprises or for mere investment purposes. I regard it as very hazardous to deny credit to the so-called nonessentials, among which my friend, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] classes "phonographs and silk stockings." Both of those commodities are more or less essential. Nothing is of greater educational value than the phonograph, and I do not think the phonograph business ought to be broken up. In time of war the pleasures of the people may be interfered with, but not in times of peace. We fought for liberty, and the liberty to ride in a pleasure automobile or to hear a phonograph, or even to wear or look at silk stockings, ought not to be denied by the Federal Reserve Board by driving such manufacturers out of business.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not about time that the people of the United States and the people of the world should realize that there is only one way that normal conditions can be brought about, and that is for the people of the world to produce what the world consumes? Unless they do that normal conditions never will return.

Mr. OWEN. Of course; that is what I said when I started out. The resolution of the Senator from Illinois, however, offers a hook and an invitation from the Senate to the Federal Reserve Board to declare a policy of "deflation." It carries the suggestion of deflation. The policy of deflation set by the Wall Street stock exchange control, which broke the stock market by high-interest rates, meets the approval of the same class of financial experts domiciled in Chicago, who might naturally advise the Senator from Illinois; but I warn the Federal Reserve Board and I warn the country that if a panic in this country results from their policy they are liable to have a North Dakota reaction, where a State bank was established to furnish money at fair and stable rates, using the credit of the State and the taxing power of the people of the State for that purpose. You can go too far in the matter of taxing the people of this country by high-interest rates and the "deflation" of credit. If the Reserve Board leads the procession of banks in fixing high rates on the people; that is, on their own depositors, and a great industrial depression follows, why should they wonder if the people of this country should demand as a remedy that the reserve banks be made banks of deposit and discount? I warn the Federal Reserve Board that this country is not going to submit to any depression brought about by the banks of the country or under the policy of the board or under the advice of financiers domiciled either in New York or Chicago.

Mr. MCLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MCLEAN. Inasmuch as the Senator seems to be addressing his remarks to this side of the Chamber, I simply wish to call his attention to the fact that the Federal Reserve Board is composed of seven members, all of whom are good, strong Democrats in regular standing. So I think the responsibility for the administration of the Federal Reserve System is more on his side of the Chamber than on this side.

Mr. OWEN. I will deal with that, Mr. President, at the proper time and in a few moments.

Mr. MCLEAN. The Senator will remember that when the act was framed the propriety of limiting party representation on the board was seriously discussed, but it was hardly believed that any President would fail sufficiently to recognize both the great parties, and for that reason no limitation was put in the law; but the present Chief Executive has constituted that board entirely of Democrats.

Mr. OWEN. I will deal with that, Mr. President, in due time, but I will tell the Senator that the difference between a Democrat and a Republican on the Federal Reserve Board should be considered in the light of whether a man is progressive in his views or whether he is a reactionary or a conservative. That is the difference between men when it comes to dealing with banking matters.

Mr. McLEAN. I quite agree to that and I am not criticizing any member of the board, but inasmuch as——

Mr. OWEN. I am criticizing the policy; I am not dealing with men, nor do I care about men.

Mr. McLEAN. But as the Senator is addressing his remarks to this side of the Chamber, I thought I would call his attention to the fact I have brought out.

Mr. OWEN. I am addressing my remarks to where the power of the Chamber lies.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator should address the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator from Oklahoma probably has more knowledge on this subject than any other man. He is the real father of the Federal Reserve System. Was it intended that these Federal reserve banks should be institutions for making money?

Mr. OWEN. It was not.

Mr. KENYON. Or, rather, was it intended that they should be institutions for the stabilization of conditions in the country?

Mr. OWEN. They were intended to stabilize credits and to give stability to credits and stability to business in the United States.

Mr. KENYON. But, notwithstanding that, whoever may be responsible, it seems from the Senator's statement to be the policy of the board now to have the Federal reserve banks making money, as in the one instance the Senator cites to the extent of over 100 per cent last year.

Mr. OWEN. They averaged nearly 100 per cent on their earnings, and the earnings included, as I understand, 90 per cent which we turned over to them. In other words, if you had not added in that 90 per vent, their earnings would have been nearly 200 per cent this year.

Mr. KENYON. Then the fundamental difficulty is that the officers or directors of the Federal Reserve System do not have the same comprehension of what was intended in the creation of that system as the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. They do not have the same point of view, Mr. President. Of course, it was perfectly natural that the gentlemen in charge of these Federal reserve banks should regard them, as bankers always regard banks, as a means of making money for the stockholders. The banks of the country, who are the stockholders in those banks, thought at the beginning that the banks would not earn anything. They thought there would be no earnings on the stock, and the Federal reserve bank officers were naturally anxious to overcome that impression and to make money. When the war came on, the demand for accommodations became so great that these banks suddenly became great money-making banks. No objection was raised, as far as I was concerned, to their making money for the first year, until they could get a reserve on hand that enabled them to go forward; nor did I raise any objection so long as the rate was 4 per cent, or approximately 4 per cent; but when it began to go up to 4½ and 5 and 5½ and 6 and 7 per cent, I thought the Federal Reserve Board was taking the point of view that it was the chief business of the reserve banks to make money.

The board in raising the rates thought that they would by that means—raising the rates—discourage speculation. The trouble with the remedy is that it operates upon those who speculate and those who do not speculate; it does not restrain speculation; it has the effect of interfering with production. Now, these banks making 100 per cent on a 4 per cent rate ought not to be encouraged to make 50 per cent more than they made last year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. What suggestion has the Senator to make from his knowledge and experience in these matters as to how the banks could prevent speculation without raising the rate?

Mr. OWEN. It is the simplest thing in the world. All that a bank has to do is to tell the man who comes to it and wants a loan for speculative purposes that he can not have the money for that purpose; that is all. There is no difficulty about it. If I do not want to let the Senator have money for speculation, I do not have to do it. There is no occult means by which he can abstract money from me for speculative purposes against my will.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will permit me right in that connection, in a letter I have from Iowa yesterday, there is this statement with reference to this very matter:

> There are millions of dollars loaned on automobiles in warehouses, which is another practice that tends to inflate the currency, and could be easily stopped by proper action on the part of the Federal reserve bank in refusing to accept this paper, secured on automobiles in warehouses, as collateral security.

So it is up to the Reserve Board to stop these speculative practices.

Mr. OWEN. The Reserve Board can use its influence with the member banks to have them discontinue the practice of extending loans for mere speculative purposes, whether it be speculation in stocks or bonds, or speculation in real estate, or speculation in commodities for hoarding.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, as I understand the Senator's suggestion, it is that if the Reserve Board would simply pass a rule or regulation providing that for at least a certain period money should not be loaned by member banks for speculative purposes, it would have the desired effect?

Mr. OWEN. The Federal Reserve Board say that they have used their good offices in that way, and that these admonitions have not been adequately observed; that they have been giving that advice since last summer.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator knows that paper secured by stocks and bonds is not eligible for rediscount in the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, certainly I know that, excepting Government bonds; but I also know that the same banks that use money for that purpose—covering speculative loans—have a large amount of Liberty bonds, and they walk in with the Liberty bonds and get this money to cover speculative purposes; and I take it the Senator knows that, too.

Mr. McLEAN. That is true.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is quite true. Therefore, the observation of the Senator is hardly in point.

Mr. McLEAN. But the Senator said that the stocks and bonds that he referred to, as I understood him, were general, commercial stocks and bonds. He knows that they are not eligible for rediscount.

Mr. OWEN. They are not eligible for rediscount, and I made no such suggestion.

Mr. McLEAN. And there is no law that would prevent a member bank, and the Federal Reserve Board has no power to prevent a member bank, from discounting any paper that it sees fit, or loaning money upon any rate that it sees fit to charge.

Mr. OWEN. It can exercise its good offices and say to member banks that come and ask accommodation from the reserve banks, when other banks desiring money for commercial purposes are being denied: "You are using the funds that you employ in an improper way, and you are not entitled to preferential treatment."

Mr. McLEAN. Yes, Mr. President. I am holding no brief for the Federal Reserve Board, but my impression is that they are trying now to limit the accommodations that have been extended for speculative purposes——

Mr. OWEN. They have my approval in that.

Mr. McLEAN. That is, by men who, for instance, have held large quantities of the basic commodities, such as lumber or grain, possibly, and have held these commodities for higher prices. They are admonishing the banks, and insisting that the banks insist on calling in percentages of that paper.

Mr. OWEN. I agree that they are right about that.

Mr. McLEAN. So that the people who are holding these large quantities of products will be compelled to dispose of some of them and shorten up their accounts.

Mr. OWEN. I think that is all right. I am not criticizing that. I approve that. What I am criticizing is a wholesale raising of the rates in this country, first on the stock exchange, where these rates are doing great damage to the credit of the country, where they are jumping from 8 per cent to 30 per cent, and the high commercial rates being charged by the banks, 8 and 10 per cent, with commissions on the side running them up to 12 and 13 and 14 per cent.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator knows that the Federal reserve banks are not doing that.

Mr. OWEN. I am not talking about the Federal reserve banks alone. I am talking about the Federal Reserve System. I am talking about the member banks as well as the reserve banks and the reserve board. I am talking about all of them combined. There is no question about what I mean.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the difficulty is with the application of the Senator's remedy. It seems to me that the practical difficulties would be enormous.

Under the bill which was passed by the Senate recently they have the power to graduate the rate after the accommodation has reached a certain percentage of the borrowing capacity of the bank, and they asked for that power for the express purpose of discouraging speculative accounts.

Mr. OWEN. That was a judicious arrangement for other reasons, in my opinion.

Mr. McLEAN. And my opinion is that they are endeavoring to do it. The difficulties are tremendous, as the Senator must realize; and my information is that their only purpose is to discourage the banks that are carrying men who are holding large quantities of basic commodities for higher prices and to compel them to unload and shorten up their accounts.

Mr. OWEN. As I have already said a number of times on the floor, that meets my approval. What I am objecting to is a 6 or 7 per cent rate to the commercial and manufacturing interests of this country by the Federal Reserve Board. I say that that is not a reasonable rate, because it means a 7, 8, or 10 per cent rate by the member banks and general credit stringency.

Mr. McLEAN. Of course, credit should not be limited where it is needed to finance production and distribution. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. OWEN. Then the Senator agrees with my view.

Mr. McLEAN. It should be extended and conserved; but the Senator can readily see that unless these speculative accounts are shortened the reserves of the Federal reserve banks may become exhausted and legitimate accommodation may be refused. I should like to have the Senator state, if he can, some specific instance where the Federal Reserve Board has countenanced and encouraged the evil of which he complains.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the evil of which I complain is a 6 and 7 per cent rate by the Federal Reserve Board, when on a 4 per cent rate the Federal reserve banks made 100 per cent. That is the first evil I complain of. That is specific enough.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not care to continue this discussion. The Senator knows it is easy enough to call attention to the fact that interest rates are high—too high. So are the prices of corn and wheat and sugar and shoes. They are all too high, and the cause is the war. Now, the inflation of the currency is one of the effects of this condition, and not the cause.

Mr. OWEN. Inflation of credits, I think the Senator should say.

Mr. McLEAN. Well, inflation of credits and currency. The Senator knows that when the war came on the nations that were engaged in it were compelled to bid against each other for war supplies; and not only that, the manufacturers were compelled to bid against each other for materials and labor. Meanwhile the Governments were withdrawing millions of men from productive activities, and prices doubled overnight. Now, as values doubled, credits were necessarily increased. It takes more money to finance a crop of wheat at $2 a bushel than it does to finance a crop of wheat that is worth but $1 a bushel, and consequently the inflation of credits was the effect of the demand caused by the war.

It is the same effect, probably, that would result if we discovered a mountain of gold. The quantity theory of money is all right, other things being equal; but, as Prof. Taussig says, other things are never equal, and the cause of the present high prices is the abnormal demand which came with the war and the shortage in supply. Now, it would not be an easy matter for the Senator to devise a scheme that would arbitrarily bring down the price of potatoes and satisfy everybody, especially the potato raisers.

Mr. OWEN. What I am objecting to is a policy that will bring down prices by creating a depression instead of bringing down prices by creating a new volume of commodities. That is the objection.

Mr. McLEAN. It is as difficult to devise a means to bring down the price of credits as it is to devise a means to bring down the price of sugar or potatoes.

Mr. OWEN. I do not agree with the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. McLEAN. The normal way is to raise the discount rate.

Mr. OWEN. That is not the way to put credits up and not down, and in either case it is done by the dictation of some competent authority.

Mr. McLEAN. Well, then, if you put your rate at 4 per cent, who is to have the preference? Who is to get the money? It would not last 24 hours.

Mr. OWEN. Those who are engaged in productive enterprises are first entitled to credit at the member banks, and member banks are entitled in proportion to their right of accommodation at the Federal reserve banks, along the lines which were adopted recently in the amendment referred to by the Senator a moment ago.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; but the Federal Reserve Board can not go out into the country——

Mr. OWEN. I have already answered the Senator completely.

Mr. McLEAN (continuing). And regulate the prices which State banks and member banks should charge for their accommodations and investigate their acts. It has many practical difficulties, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I understand the practical difficulties and they are not insuperable.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to ask the Senator whether the object in increasing the rate was not to discourage the borrowing of money for speculative purposes, rather than to make money?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, it was; theoretically, at least.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not also true that the member banks are not compelled to go to the Federal reserve bank for money, but they can borrow from their correspondents?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; they can borrow from their correspondents.

Mr. DIAL. As I understand it, before we adopted the Federal Reserve System the law was that a bank could not borrow an amount more than its capital stock and surplus, and that if it borrowed that much that is all the United States law allowed?

Mr. OWEN. There is a limitation fixed by law.

Mr. DIAL. Under this system there is no limit, and is it not a fact that a great many banks have borrowed many times what they were allowed to borrow before?

Mr. OWEN. A number of them have borrowed several times in excess of their deposits with the reserve banks, that is true.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; and many times what they were ever allowed to borrow before. Is it not the object of the Federal reserve law to get them back on a normal basis, and how are you ever going to do that except by increasing the rates?

Mr. OWEN. The increasing of the rate does not keep people from speculating. It would not keep a bank from borrowing money if they could pass it on to somebody else at a higher rate. A bank would not mind paying 8 per cent for money if it could lend it out at 12. The plan as adopted by the Congress in the amendment referred to a moment ago was that these banks should be limited in proportion to their deposits with the reserve bank, and as the accommodation desired rose above a certain part of their reserve with the reserve bank, they should pay a higher and higher rate of interest, so as to prevent the very thing the Senator speaks of. That is a progressive charge for a progressive accommodation, which is asked by an aggressive bank at the expense of every other bank entitled to like accommodation.

Mr. DIAL. Would it not be better to do that than to cut off the loan altogether?

Mr. OWEN. I do not think the Federal reserve bank or the member banks have any desire to suddenly cut off their customers, but they are pursuing a policy—and I think it is a wise policy—of gradually liquidating these speculative loans, and I think it is right; I think that is the best policy for the banks of this country now. I am not talking against that policy; I am in favor of that policy. What I am talking against is the fixing an artificially high rate of interest by the reserve banks and a consequentially higher rate of interest by the member banks and the extortionate rates of interest which are charged on the New York Stock Exchange, which is bringing about a strong depression in the country. That is what I am discussing and objecting to.

Mr. COLT. Does not the Bank of England always regulate speculation and overcredits by raising the rate of discount? Is not that the practice?

Mr. OWEN. No; I do not think so. What they do is to raise the rates when they want to have gold moved to London from the Continent, and they only do this when other remedies fail.

Mr. COLT. The Senator referred to the New York Stock Exchange. Does not the raising of the rate of interest on the New York Stock Exchange tend to retard speculation?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it does, of a bull kind, and it promotes a bear speculation.

Mr. COLT. Does not the raising of the rate of interest tend to check credit, whether done by the Federal reserve bank or otherwise?

Mr. OWEN. To be sure.

Mr. COLT. Is there not a practical difficulty in the Senator's proposition—and I would not undertake to say that I have any such knowledge as he has—in attempting to distinguish between a credit for speculative purposes and a credit for legitimate business purposes, when you seek to extend the proposition through the whole range of the Federal reserve banks and the member banks?

Mr. OWEN. When you extend it—the interest rate—broadly you punish the good and the bad alike.

Mr. COLT. Is not the fundamental remedy for overspeculation an extension of credit, the raising of the rate of discount? And is there any other remedy?

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to raising the rate of interest on the speculator, but I object to raising the rate on a man who is not a speculator on the theory of protecting the country from the speculator, and there are other harmless remedies which I have pointed out many times.

Mr. COLT. And the Senator believes it is practical to carry out that distinction which he makes?

Mr. OWEN. Absolutely, because every single loan which comes to a bank comes with a man with his paper in his hand, and he offers it to the president of the bank or the cashier, and says, "I want to borrow so much money." There is no reason why the bank should not say, "What are you going to use it for? If you are going to use it for speculation, you can not have it. We are advised by the Federal Reserve Board not to extend any new credits for speculative purposes." Is not that easy enough? Why should the merchants and the manufacturers of New England, and why should the stock raisers of the West and the cotton raisers of the South, be subjected to a broad, sweeping penalty because somebody is demanding excess credits for speculating in stocks in New York?

Mr. COLT. I want to say that the Senator is discussing what I regard as one of the most important questions now before the country—a question which affects profiteering and the whole business situation—and whatever light he can throw upon it will certainly be deeply interesting and most instructive.

Mr. OWEN. I am trying to throw light on it, because I regard it as a matter of great importance. I am not doing it because I want to criticize the Federal Reserve Board. I am personally friendly with every man on the Reserve Board. I think they are doing the best they can. But I differ with them in policy. I disagree with their policy. I disagree with the advice they are getting. I do not know who is giving the advice, but, whoever it is, I do not agree with the advice. I do not agree with the policy, and I am protesting against this because I believe it is going to lead to an industrial depression.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] smiles at these suggestions and must either think it is an improbability, or perhaps he welcomes it——

Mr. McLEAN. No, Mr. President; I have not much use for prophets of evil and hope the industrial depression will not come. I do not think there is any need for it.

Mr. OWEN. It will not come with my consent.

Mr. McLEAN. But the reason for an industrial depression will not be the one which the Senator has assigned, in my opinion. The industrial depression will be due to the fact that the supply of the necessities of life will not equal the demand and that we will come to a period of underconsumption, which is an unhealthy and unfortunate way to bring a country back to normal conditions. It would be much better if we could adjust things by the process which the Senator is suggesting—by an increase in production.

But the trouble is, Mr. President, that the American people, and no other people, will sustain the same standard of effort in time of peace that they will in time of war. When the country's life was at stake we all did our bit. Those of us who were at home did everything we could to sustain the fighting strength of the men who were at the front, but the minute the war was over the American people drifted right back into the old, apathetic lives. I think class antagonisms were accentuated rather than otherwise by the war, wages have been high, and men in business have made enormous profits. The going has been good, and everybody has been trotting to beat his record. The victories of peace are won precisely as the victories of war are won, by every man doing his bit; but the trouble in this country is that every man has been doing his neighbor instead. We have been good-natured about it, because everybody has been in it who has had an opportunity of making easy money. Labor has been asking as high wages as they could get. You can not blame labor, because they know the producers have been profiteering.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator think that making it difficult to get the money with which to produce aids production?

Mr. McLEAN. The trouble is that we have a monetary system based upon gold, and we have to have a certain amount of gold back of our paper. The Senator knows that. We do not want to abandon the gold standard and print a lot of inconvertible paper money. The reserves of the Federal reserve banks have their limits. The Senator understands that.

Mr. OWEN. I understand it perfectly, and know there is a large margin available against the gold. The reserve against deposits is not actually needed, and the security is otherwise abundant.

Mr. McLEAN. As you have increased the prices of products, the necessity for credits has increased to meet increase in values. The demand for credits has increased tremendously because of the increase in prices. If you fixed your rate at 4 per cent, the reserves of the Federal reserve banks would soon be exhausted.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will say that the Senator's idea of opening the doors of the reserve banks and letting people come in and walk out with their reserves, without any consideration and without any discrimination, is not my idea; it is his own.

Mr. McLEAN. The trouble with the Senator's idea, as it seems to me, is that if you fix a 4 per cent rate——

Mr. OWEN. I would fix it at 3 per cent, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McLEAN. If you fix a 3 per cent rate, who is to have the accommodation? Who is to be preferred? The Senator says the men who want this accommodation for financing legitimate production would be preferred. Very well and good.

Mr. OWEN. That was not all the Senator from Oklahoma said. He said that the loans should be extended in accordance with the relative deposits of the member banks with the reserve banks, imposing a penalty progressively as they made demands upon that reserve.

Mr. McLEAN. Very well. The Senator would find inside of 48 hours he would not have half enough money to go around unless the discount was raised.

Mr. OWEN. I do not agree with the Senator; the discount rate does not make the loan; that is done by the cashier and the discount board. The reserve bank directors have sufficient intelligence to administer the affairs of the banks and not to let out more resources than they have and to make their loans wisely.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator knows that we have over three billions of currency out now.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; and I will say to the Senator that the reserve banks have nearly two billions of gold and $1,200,000,000 of loans and bonds in excess of deposits, covering every note by more than 100 per cent security. We have $3,160,000,000 of gold in the United States, nearly half the gold in the whole world, and the world owes the United States, from Europe, $10,000,000,000 now. That debt will take twice and more than twice the amount of the gold in the entire world, if we should require liquidation in terms of gold. We have, moreover, an income of four billions per annum from our excess commodity shipments that would absorb all the gold in the world annually if we chose to take it. We are in no danger of losing gold or needing gold, and this idea that we are to go into an industrial depression because we have no credits and can not get any credits because we have not a gold reserve supply sufficient, I say, has no foundation whatever. It is as utterly fallacious as that high interest rates are desirable when credits are urgently needed and when credits ought to be extended.

Mr. McLEAN. We have facts which must be considered when we are discussing this question. We have a little more than three billions of Federal reserve currency out now, and it is pretty close to the low limit of the reserves, not more than 2 per cent above the legal requirements. The railroads of the country want a billion and a half; they have security, and I think the Senator will agree with me that the transportation interests of the country are legitimate and ought to be sustained.

Mr. OWEN. I have urged that as one of the reasons——

Mr. McLEAN. If I am not mistaken, the production of food to-day depends more upon the transportation facilities of the country than it does upon any other one item. The railroads want at least a billion and a half. They can not get it.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have them get it at a decent rate. But the Senator is wrong about the gold reserve being only 2 per cent above the legal requirement. The gold against reserve notes is $1,939,141,000 of gold against $3,083,234,000 of notes—about 60 per cent.

The reserve board has put the reserves against deposits and notes together, and thus confuses the matter. The reserve against deposits is inelastic, unnecessary, and confusing. It ought to be repealed, as it wastes the earning power of gold and has no adequate value economically.

Mr. McLEAN. I would like to know where the Senator expects to get not only the billion and a half but at least five or six billions of dollars which are needed to finance the legitimate credits of this country at this time. I repeat, if you put the rate at 4 per cent who is to be preferred?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I will say that the annual earning power of the United States for 1919, measured by the best economists of the country, has shown a productive power of approximately $65,000,000,000 on one turnover, and that this country is abundantly able to absorb any reasonable amount of offerings of securities.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems to me that only aggravates the situation instead of helping it, because the more credits you need, of course the more the banks must furnish. The reserves of the Federal Reserve System are limited, and the only way I know of——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator observed yesterday that they were limited, but he did not make the statement that they are elastic and could be carried very much further than they have been carried thus far.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator in his opening remarks took the position that our credits had been expanded and that our currency had been expanded; and it is the general belief to-day that the expansion ought to stop.

Mr. OWEN. The currency has not been greatly expanded, except $12 in gold and about $8 in paper, but credits have been expanded very greatly—in United States bonds and bank deposits.

Mr. McLEAN. I fail to see how they can be deflated unless the discount rate is so raised that certain lines of investments and accommodations can be discouraged.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator if he thinks we can deflate United States bonds outstanding now?

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know what he means by deflating United States bonds.

Mr. OWEN. There is only one way to deflate them, and that is to pay them.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes. I did not know but the Senator meant to repudiate them.

Mr. OWEN. Well, hardly. The Senator is facetious.

Mr. McLEAN. There is no way that United States bonds can be deflated except by raising taxes enough to liquidate them.

Mr. OWEN. That is quite right. The only other great inflation of credit has been bank deposits, and you can, of course, deflate bank deposits by actually compelling men who owe their notes, and whose notes are held in the portfolios of banks, to pay them, and, by compelling them to do that, to compel them to sell their property to others who have accounts at the bank, and in that way you can deflate to that extent the deposits in the bank. I am quite in accord with the idea that it is all right to impose gradual liquidation on those who are using their funds for speculative purposes, but I am opposed to imposing the rule of deflation upon those who are engaged in productive purposes, because that will prevent the creation of commodities and prevent bringing the dollar down in its purchasing power in the only proper way available.

If you increase commodities, you increase the exchange or purchasing power of dollars.

If you decrease commodities by depression, you decrease the purchasing power of dollars.

If you create panic, destroy credits, you destroy the value of commodities by forcing men to sell on a falling market and benefit the rich and rob the poor.

Mr. McLEAN. So I would like to see the supply equal the demand, but as the supply of credits is limited, precisely as the supply of other necessities is limited, it seems to me that the one way to regulate it is to raise the price and so curtail consumption.

Mr. OWEN. You can raise the price of sugar in the same way, by putting an artificial restriction on the price of sugar and charging 25 cents a pound; but I am objecting to undue profits by reserve banks, undue profits by member banks, setting a bad example to the country in the question of interest rates, and they have no more right to profiteer by raising rates artificially 50 per cent or 100 per cent than the sugar dealer, who gets a monopoly and profiteers by false prices.

Mr. McLEAN. I entirely agree with the Senator in regard to that. At the same time I think it would be unwise for the Government, say, to fix the price of wheat at 50 cents a bushel or the price of sugar at 2 cents a pound.

Mr. OWEN. It is, of course, unwise to do a foolish thing. I understand the Senator is opposed to a usury law.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator says he thinks the Federal Reserve Board ought to fix a rate of 3 per cent. That is the same thing precisely in principle.

Mr. OWEN. The country has proceeded upon the theory of a usury law. In North Carolina, for example, they have a strict usury law at 6 per cent. The bankers of North Carolina probably pay 2 or 3 or 4 per cent for deposits, and the margin of profit which the banks of North Carolina probably have would be about 3 per cent, which is the normal rate of increase in the handling of the money of depositors when loaned out.

The rate of interest at 3 per cent has been the rate on Government bonds before the war, and 3 per cent United States bonds went above par. The rate of interest in Belgium for 50 years before the war was 3 per cent. The rate of interest in France for 50 years before the war was 3 per cent. The rate in Holland, Belgium, and Denmark was likewise 3 per cent.

I call attention to these precedents because that shows that human beings in normal conditions of life think that is a fair rate for money. In London 3½ per cent was the rate during the war for acceptances, while the British Government was paying 5 per cent.

But I object to any policy that will bring about depression. A violent depression by such means would serve the rich and ruin the poor. The debtor class of the country, relying on stability in business, will be unable to liquidate without great sacrifice and the creditor class will quietly and virtuously absorb the property of the debtor class at panic prices and cash in later when the usual reaction takes place. This is the history of all panics; the country understands it, and the country will not submit to an artificial panic, no matter how respectable the advice that brings it about.

When the Federal Reserve Board summons a council to determine a policy, that council should include merchants and manufacturers and not bankers alone. The wonderful Bank of England, the great servant of commerce, is controlled by great merchants. But the Federal Reserve Board summons on a great occasion like this bankers alone, who profit by high interest rates and who will be the beneficiaries, temporarily at least, of the medicine they prescribe for the suffering public.

They summon class A directors, who are bankers, and do not summon class B directors, who are representatives of the agricultural, industrial, and commercial interest. Why?

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut talks about the officers of the Federal Reserve Board all being Democrats. I will say to the Senator that I did not regard Paul Warburg, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., late deputy governor of the Federal Reserve Board, as a Democrat, and he was one of the leading lights of the Federal Reserve Board. I regard him as a typical conservative and reactionary. Does the Senator wish to make an observation on that?

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator knows he has not been a member of the Federal Reserve Board for some time.

Mr. OWEN. I know that, but he was deputy governor.

> You may break, you may shatter, the vase if you will,
> But the scent of the roses will hang round it still.

Mr. McLEAN. I am not responsible for Mr. Warburg.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no; I know that. I am not charging the Senator with responsibility for Mr. Warburg, but when he went out Mr. Albert Straus, of Seligman & Seligman, went in, and he is another conservative and reactionary, and Fred Kent, vice president of the Bankers' Trust Co., who had charge of the foreign exchange during the war, was a conservative and reactionary, and Mr. Leffingwell, who was recently Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was another conservative gentleman. I do not attribute that to them in any other sense than to say that that is their "point of view," that they think in terms of high interest and bankers' profits and in terms of the bankers' earnings. Eugene Meyer, another conservative gentleman, was appointed in the Treasury and was speculating and buying United States bonds with the funds of the War Finance Corporation at a profit and under par, and making money for the United States out of the poor bondholders compelled to sell at a discount. I do not regard that as progressive conduct in any way. That is the conservative view, as I understand it.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator says they are not Democrats? They are reactionaries?

Mr. OWEN. I do not think of them as Democrats or Republicans. They are business men of very conservative views in charge of the United States Treasury. Mr. Leffingwell, I understand, was a Republican. I assume Paul Warburg was a Republican. I assume Mr. Straus was a Republican; if he is not, he might as well be. I would rather have him classified as Republican than Democrat.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not draw a line between reactionaries and Democrats?

Mr. OWEN. I do not. I have seen reactionary Democrats.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not wish to be understood as criticizing any member of the Federal Reserve Board. I merely called attention to the fact that they were Democrats, because the Senator seemed to be addressing his complaint to this side of the Chamber.

Mr. OWEN. I am addressing my complaint to the circumambient atmosphere.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that, occupying the position which I have, I have felt that I ought to do everything possible to encourage the Federal Reserve Board, and that Congress ought to do everything possible to help the Federal Reserve Board carry the country through this emergency, and believing as I do, that they are conscientious and able men, regardless of their political affiliations——

Mr. OWEN. I agree that they are conscientious, able men, I am trying to give them some conscientious advice now.

Mr. McLEAN. I have advocated every measure which they suggested which commended itself to me as wise. I will say to the Senator now what I have felt like saying several times, that I believe it was a mistake to make the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency ex-officio members of that board.

Mr. OWEN. They never attended anyway, so they did not do any harm, at least the Secretary never did—perhaps semiannually.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know what they have done.

Mr. OWEN. Occasionally, I suppose, the Comptroller of the Currency does attend.

Mr. McLEAN. The board is supposed to be the supreme court of finance, and I think that it would be in a much better position to administer the law without prejudice, and more wisely, if it was entirely free from the influence of political appointees, those belonging to any particular administration.

I also think the system would have been stronger if there had been fewer banks. I think one bank, or not more than five, would have conserved the resources of the banks and mobilized the reserves of the country much better.

Mr. OWEN. I assume the Senator approves the National Monetary Commission bill?

Mr. McLEAN. I think everything that has been done for the benefit of the country under the Federal Reserve System has arisen from the fundamental idea in the bill to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator think that quick money against assets and under interest charge originated with that bill?

Mr. McLEAN. Oh, no; but it was in that bill.

Mr. OWEN. It was in that bill, adopted from a proposal made on the floor of the Senate in 1900 by the leading Democrat in the Senate.

Mr. McLEAN. That may be.

Mr. OWEN. I merely mention that to keep the Senator from giving credit to the Monetary Commission bill to which it is not entitled.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not think the partisan question was raised at all in the framing of that legislation. I think Republicans and Democrats were alike eager to frame a law that was good.

Mr. OWEN. It was proposed conservative legislation. It was legislation which made one central bank; it was legislation which put that one central bank in the hands of the bankers who, in that organization, would have controlled the credit system of the United States. It was mischievous in its conception in the highest degree by putting the powers of credit in this country in private hands instead of under public control.

It was conservative. That is what I mean by conservative. I do not mean it was necessarily dishonest. I do not mean it was dishonest in intent. I mean it was the conception that it was better for the bankers to have control of the credit system of the country, and that is why I spoke of Mr. Warburg, and why I spoke of Mr. Straus, and these other gentlemen as conservative.

Mr. Leffingwell I regarded as conservative, among other things, because Mr. Leffingwell, I remember, came over here to the Senate and tried to get a bill passed to relieve the national banks of taxation on their assets.

Mr. McLEAN. Do I understand the Senator to imply that the Federal Reserve Board is under private control?

Mr. OWEN. I do not see how the Senator could by any possibility arrive at any such suggestion.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator was referring to the operation of the Aldrich-Vreeland bill when he said that it puts the banking system under private control.

Mr. OWEN. I was referring to the National Monetary Commission bill, to which I had just previously referred, when I said it put that system under the banks by giving the banks 40 out of 43 directors in general charge.

Mr. McLEAN. The banking idea in the Aldrich-Vreeland Act, it seems to me, is the successful idea in the Federal Reserve System, but I think it was wise to put the control of that system under the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. OWEN. I am glad to know the Senator entertains that view. That was not entertained by those who favored the Monetary Commission bill. They were very much opposed to having Government control. When I speak of conservatives I mean those who look at this system from the bankers' standpoint, who think of it in terms of profit, who think of it in terms of interest, who want the reserve banks to make as much as possible.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator made a statement a few moments ago that surprised me very much, if I correctly understood him. I think the Senator said that during his connection with the Federal Reserve Board Eugene Meyer was engaged in speculating in Government bonds.

Mr. OWEN. Perhaps I should not have used the word speculating. What he was doing was buying the bonds below par, with the funds of the War Finance Corporation, which I regard as speculating for the United States Government in buying them below par.

Mr. THOMAS. The inference was——

Mr. OWEN. I did not intend to reflect on Mr. Meyer at all.

Mr. THOMAS. I am very glad that is so, because it surprised me very much.

Mr. OWEN. No, indeed; but it was another conservative view entirely, thinking in the terms of the banker instead of thinking in the terms of credit of the United States and credit of the whole people.

Mr. THOMAS. I knew the Senator would not make a personal charge unless he had some basis for it, and the inference which I drew from his statement was that Mr. Meyer while a member of the board was engaged in private speculation.

Mr. OWEN. No; I did not mean that at all.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator made another statement rather startling, that Mr. Leffingwell had come to Congress and attempted to procure the passage of a bill to exempt national banks from taxation under certain circumstances.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator going to follow that up and explain it, or was that a casual statement?

Mr. OWEN. I was just referring to that as evidence of looking at this matter from the bankers' standpoint, because I did not think it would be at all fair to other taxpayers or to the country to relieve the banks of taxes. I do not think that is right, but that is the view Mr. Leffingwell had.

Mr. KENYON. He was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury at that time?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; he was.

Mr. KENYON. Who was the Secretary of the Treasury at that time?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. McAdoo.

Mr. KENYON. So I take it the action of Mr. Leffingwell must have been with the acquiescence of and in accord with the views of Mr. McAdoo?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; there was a bill sent over here to me by Secretary McAdoo, which I introduced. I thought when I introduced it that it was for the purpose of protecting the bonds of the United States from taxation.

On examining the bill—S. 4137, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session—I found that it was really a bill that would have exempted the national banks from being taxed on their assets, and I was not willing to agree to that. I had a report from the Secretary of the Treasury in favor of it on the ground that it would serve to protect the bonds of the United States, but I wrote him immediately, pointing out that it would not serve to protect the United States bonds at all; that it would merely exempt the banks from being taxed. I objected to the bill, made an adverse report on it—Senate Report 355, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session—and moved its indefinite postponement, because I had made myself responsible for its introduction. It was indefinitely postponed by the Senate April 3, 1918. Hon. CARTER GLASS, at the Secretary's request, introduced the same bill—H. R. 8935—January 18, 1918, but his committee never reported it.

Mr. KENYON. The bill to which the Senator refers is the bill which was advocated by Mr. Leffingwell?

Mr. OWEN. No; it was not. It was a different bill.

Mr. KENYON. When the Senator speaks of the bill being sent here, I wish to inquire was it sent by the Secretary of the Treasury for introduction?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir; it was sent by the Secretary of the Treasury. The facts are these: Secretary McAdoo wrote me on March 26, urging the passage of S. 4137. I replied immediately. Without reading, I will have my reply and report inserted in the RECORD from my files.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 26, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR, I received your letter of March 20 with the inclosed Senate bill, No. 4137. I am glad indeed to know that you will at an early date bring this bill to the attention of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The banks of the country have been called upon, and during the course of the war must be called upon again from time to time, to subscribe for Treasury certificates of indebtedness and Government bonds. The unwritten provision of the Constitution, as construed by the United States Supreme Court, and the express provisions of the statutes of the United States, prohibit State and local taxation of the bonds and certificates of indebtedness of the United States. The United States has sold its bonds and certificates of indebtedness with an express stipulation exempting them from State and local taxation. Naturally complaints come from all sides against the indirect taxation of United States Government securities through taxes on bank stocks levied by States and municipalities.

So far as the national banks are concerned such taxation can, as I understand it, only be levied with the consent of the United States, since national banks themselves are governmental instrumentalities. Such consent of the United States was given by what is now section 5219 of the national-bank act, which section was originally enacted in 1864 and amended in 1868. So far as such taxation relates to State banks and trust companies, the matter is, I believe, out of the control of the Federal Government. The proposed amendment will prevent this indirect taxation of Government bonds by the State so far as national banks are concerned. It will then be for the State legislatures to follow suit and relieve State institutions of such taxation. I hope that the States will do this because the ability of the United States to finance its war requirements is seriously impaired if United States bonds are taxed directly or indirectly by the States.

Under the Constitution and statutes of the United States its obligations can not, any more than its instrumentalities, be taxed by States or municipalities; but the consent given by the United States in section 5219, Revised Statutes, to taxation of national-bank shares has led the States to devise a system of taxing the banks through their shareholders which enables the States indirectly to tax United States bonds and certificates. Some States have gone so far as to exempt their own bonds from this indirect taxation while subjecting to it bonds and obligations of the United States.

The United States now makes its own bonds subject to its income and excess-profits taxes while exempting those of States and municipalities from all United States taxes. Surely this gives to the States and municipalities sufficient advantage. They should not longer be permitted to tax United States bonds and certificates of indebtedness by indirection. This they can not do except by virtue of the consent of the United States embodied in section 5219. The proposed amendment would withdraw that consent.

I consider the adoption of the proposed amendment, which will relieve the national banks of indirect taxation upon their holdings of Government bonds and Treasury certificates of indebtedness, a vital step in meeting the problems of war finances. I think it of the utmost importance that it should be enacted before the third Liberty loan is offered.

Cordially, yours, WM. G. MCADOO.

Hon. R. L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

MARCH 27, 1918.

Hon. WM. G. MCADOO,
The Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Answering your favor of March 26 relative to Senate bill 4137, the taxation on national banks relates only to their stock, the stock being measured by its book value, but the bonds of the United States held by a bank are not subject to taxation. If the banks were permitted to deduct from the assets of a bank the amount of bonds they hold, they could, during the short period of the tax return, buy these bonds to the amount of the face value of their stock and escape all taxes to the State, disposing of their bonds immediately afterwards. This would probably cost the State over $70,000,000 without corresponding benefit to the Government of the United States, which would not get such tax.

Many of these bank stocks pay 10 and 20 per cent and some earn even higher returns. The States do not in reality tax United States bonds by indirection when they tax the capital invested in national banks, for the invested capital comprises the insurance fund against the current demand of depositors, and this amount should be kept as a liquid reserve for the transaction of current business, the deposits often exceeding the capital stock tenfold.

The States give protection to the capital so invested, and it would seem to be only fair that the States should be compensated for this protection. Of course, the banks would be glad to escape this taxation, but their argument that they are entitled to escape this taxation on the ground that the States ought not to be permitted to tax United States bonds by indirection is not only unsound, in my judgment, and if granted would not benefit the United States substantially, but would give the banks $73,400,000 (based on 1½ per cent of the value of the capital stock of $4,893,000,000, composed of capital stock paid in, $2,274,000,000; surplus fund, $1,945,000,000; undivided profits, $674,000,000), which amount now goes to the States for the maintenance of public order.

Very respectfully, yours, R. L. OWEN.

[Senate Report No. 355, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session.]

"Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 4137):

"The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4137) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, respectfully report thereon with the recommendation that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

"The purpose of this bill is to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes authorizing the taxation of shares of national banks.

"The proposed amendment, suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury for the reasons set forth in his letter hereto attached, provides that—in determining the value of the shares the net amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States owned by the association shall be deducted from its assets.

"The national banks of the United States have in capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits approximately $2,123,000,000.

"This particular amendment, if adopted, would lead to the immediate demand by State banks and trust companies for a like exemption from taxation. Indeed, this has already occurred in the House of Representatives, where an amendment has been proposed to the bill authorizing the third issue of Liberty bonds, providing for a like exemption for State banks and trust companies.

"Under the proposal, if a national bank of $300,000 capital and surplus and $3,000,000 of deposits should invest $300,000 of its deposits in United States bonds it would entirely escape all State and local taxation, and, of course, transfer such burden of taxation upon other local citizens who have no bank stock.

"Your committee believes that this would be an unwise change of policy. Unwise because it would transfer from the owners of bank stock a just tax they pay to the State and cities in return for police protection, and, secondly, it would not benefit the United States substantially, because the banks do not pay tax on the bonds which they buy out of the funds provided by their deposits, and they would still buy bonds out of the twenty-odd billion dollars of deposits to the extent necessary for floating the bonds during the period required for the public digestion of such securities.

"The effect of the proposed amendment would be to transfer approximately $33,000,000 of State and local tax from those owning the capital of national banks to the shoulders of other citizens, and would undoubtedly lead to a like demand by the State banks for a similar exemption, without rendering any adequate return to the United States Government. The capital, surplus, and undivided profits, which measure the cash value of bank shares, and the resources of our banking system was, for September, 1917, as follows:

	Capital, etc.	Total resources.
National banks	$2,213,391,000	$16,543,499,000
State and other banks	2,667,295,000	20,836,357,000
	4,880,686,000	37,379.856,000

"The possible diversion of State and local taxes on this capital at 1½ per cent would be about $74,000,000 per annum, and this State and local tax would have to be raised by other means and would disarrange the taxation systems of the States to this possible extent.

"The banks have over $32,000,000,000 of resources over and above their capital with which to buy bonds while in process of public distribution.

"The cash credits representing capital comprise only a moderate reserve against the demand of their depositors, and it is a questionable policy to invite the banks to crystallize these credits into bonds when it is not absolutely necessary.

"We therefore recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill.

"The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury is hereto appended and made a part of this report."

Mr. OWEN. On March 29, 1918, two days after I had explained my objections, Mr. KITCHIN, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, introduced House bill 11123 to authorize the third Liberty loan. In section 5 appeared the following:

"In determining the value of the shares of any national bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution, for the purpose of taxation by any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or any local taxing authority, the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States owned by such bank, trust company, or banking institution shall be deducted from its assets."

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 2, 1918, appeared the same explanation by Secretary McAdoo to the House of Representatives that I had objected to on March 27, 1918. The bill amended came over to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Leffingwell appeared before the Finance Committee of the Senate at that time; and that is the reference that I made, because I met him in the Finance Committee advocating that very matter. I was opposed to it, and I appeared before the committee and expressed my dissent. Owing to my resolute opposition the committee omitted section 5. I thought it undemocratic because granting a special interest and favor to the banks against the public interest.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am interested in knowing, if it is not at all embarrassing to the Senator from Oklahoma, just what this bill which was advocated by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, would have done for the banks.

Mr. OWEN. It would have relieved them from taxation.

Mr. KENYON. In a very large sum, I take it?

Mr. OWEN. Well, whatever the tax would be upon the assets of the banks of the entire country, for it was proposed in the House bill that the legislation should apply to the State banks as well. It amounted to 1 or 2 per cent on something over $4,000,000,000, I think.

Mr. KENYON. Now, one matter further, so that I may look this question up a little. About what was the date of the report which the Senator from Oklahoma made under which this bill was indefinitely postponed?

Mr. OWEN. It was just before the third Liberty loan, along in the early part of 1918. It is one of the reports of the Senate—Senate Report No. 355, April 3, 1918. It has been on file here for two years; there is nothing new about it at all.

What I am objecting to is to having the law administered from the banker's standpoint, and merely in his interest and against the public interest. I want it administered from the standpoint of the manufacturer, the merchant, and the stock-raiser—from the people's standpoint as well as from the bankers' standpoint. I have received a number of telegrams here from the far West in reference to this matter to which I think it is worth while to call the attention of the Senate. I have a telegram from cattle raisers in Arizona who had their attention called to this subject.

They say they are being denied credit to enable them to raise cattle. That is all right for the Beef Trust, to force those people to sell their cattle because they can not get credit, but I am opposed to treating the people who raise stock in that way. I myself was once a stock raiser. I raised cattle for seven years—from 1887 to 1894. I had a section about 6 miles square—about 36 square miles—with the finest grass in the world, with running streams of water through it. I went down to Texas and got cattle and brought them up there in Indian Territory, and for seven years handled cattle on the range. I sent to the market between seventeen and eighteen thousand head of steers, and when I got through my seven years of labor I had not made a dollar above my bare expenses and the interest charges I had to pay on the enterprise. I discovered the reason why. It was because there was but one buyer of my product—the Beef Trust. No wonder they made money.

Armour & Co., who, starting as packers with a capital of $160,000, now have $173,000,000 of profits, which they have saved, besides their dividends running into the millions. Where did they get it? They got it from such men as I was, raising cattle on the range, unable to protect myself and unprotected by my Government. These men on the range are now to be denied credit; they are to be squeezed to death, and their fortunes are to be sacrificed to whom? To the Beef Trust. I will not stand for any such policy; I will not pretend to be content with it; I am not going to agree to it; and I am not going to stand for this high interest rate, which is bringing on a depression. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair) rapped with his gavel.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that exactly that complaint is coming from the farmers of the Middle West, for example, from my State, where, by virtue of some legerdemain, they are unable to get the money to carry on their business.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Kansas has said that the same thing is true with regard to Kansas, and the Senator from North Carolina has said the same thing is true with regard to North Carolina. I have here a telegram from Fort Worth, Tex., which I will read, as follows:

FORT WORTH, TEX., May 17, 1920.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Have read with deep interest your letter to Gov. Harding, of Federal Reserve Board, regarding depressed prices Liberty bonds, and heartily indorse your suggestion that interest rates on loans with Liberty-Victory bonds as collateral should be immediately lowered to prevent further sacrifice sales of bonds to meet maturing obligations of owners. Federal Reserve Board should exercise its powers and its limit of influence with Federal reserve and member banks to lower interest rates on such loans to the point where owners of bonds who bought by original subscription, as each issue was urged upon the public, upon whom all possible pressure was brought to bear to induce them to buy Government obligations in the days of our country's urgent necessities, should no longer be forced to sacrifice their bonds. We subscribed for $600,000 of various issues, and were allotted total of $480,000 of all issues, which we still own. High discount rates and tightness of money has rendered it necessary for us to pledge these bonds at unfavorable rates, adding grievously to our market value loss on our bonds, which we wish to retain until their maturities. We are engaged in heavy transactions in the exportation of southwestern grains from States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas; and the attitude of some national banks and the highest interest rates required by the Federal Reserve Board renders it exceedingly difficult to operate in so necessary an operation as exporting wheat and other grains—our most liquid assets, our farm commodities so urgently required by European importing countries. Please continue your efforts with the Federal Reserve Board and secure immediate relief from present unnatural conditions.

MIDLAND, TEX., May 17, 1920.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We heartily congratulate you upon your recent speech just quoted by press, dealing with interest rates as now regulated by Federal reserve banks. Legitimate cattle business is almost stagnated by reason of lack of money account these rates. Can not something be speedily done whereby credit may be had freely by legitimate productive business?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. Does the Senator believe that the high rates of interest now being charged by the Federal Reserve Board tended to increase the interest rate charge on the recent railroad bonds which were sold?

Mr. OWEN. To be sure they had such an effect.

Mr. CALDER. The high rates of interest on railroad bonds have tended to attract capital from ordinary business, as the Senator knows. I was in New York yesterday, and the men who make it a business to loan money on real estate for the development of property and the building of homes told me that to-day there are no private funds and very little funds from the banks and insurance companies, which can loan money on such bonds, available for building development.

Does the Senator think that indirectly these high rates of interest imposed by the Federal Reserve Board tend to injure the money market?

Mr. OWEN. Absolutely.

Mr. CALDER. That situation is very desperate now, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Yes. In some instances people are getting tents to live in because they can not build houses; they can not get the credit necessary to build houses. New Zealand, I will say, has furnished to her citizens or her householders and fathers of families credit on 30 years' time and at low rates of interest with which to buy concrete to build concrete houses to shelter the families of New Zealand in houses that are permanent, which are good in winter and in summer. I am in favor of the Government protecting our people in like manner from the crushing monopolies that deny them housing on fair terms. In this country people are driven out of their houses by profiteering landlords.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., May 17, 1920.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Much interest has been evinced here on your address on financial conditions before the Senate last week. The prevailing financial stringency has resulted in stopping movement of our young steers from these breeding grounds to pastures where they are matured for beef. These cattle were contracted early by Texas, Colorado, and northern pasture men and advance payments made; now they are being forced to sacrifice advance payments owing to their inability to secure funds regardless of collateral rate of interest and amount of margin in steers, claiming the Federal Reserve Board having stopped loans on cattle security. This spring movement of young steers is not speculative but occurs every year, and heretofore has been financed without difficulty. To stop it will not only throw many in Arizona out of business but will certainly bring about eventually an upheaval in beef conditions generally. It is just as important to the Nation as the movement of any grain crop. Our breeding ranges are stocked to capacity, and the breeders can not finance this, but, on the contrary, need money badly for operating expenses. We have wired to Secretary Houston and Federal Reserve Board asking if some provision can not be made whereby member banks are permitted to accept enough well-secured cattle paper to permit this normal movement of steers to pastures, from whence they go to market in one or two years hence, and avoid this disaster. Would appreciate any assistance you may care to give.

ARIZONA CATTLE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
CHAS. P. MULLEN, President.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator when that telegram was dated?

Mr. OWEN. It was dated on May 17.

Mr. McLEAN. I presume that no reply as yet has been received from the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know whether a reply has been received or not. I think the department will wish to do what they can about it.

Mr. McLEAN. That is the only point that interests me in this discussion. If the Federal Reserve Board is restricting legitimate credits in any way, I say to the Senator, "Go to it, and strength to your arm."

Mr. OWEN. I am "going to it" all right, and I am not going to stop until it is corrected.

Mr. McLEAN. I am not defending anything of that sort, as the Senator well knows. My position is that it may be absolutely necessary to raise the discount rates in certain instances in order to discourage credits that are desired by speculators.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to raising rates on speculative loans where they are known to be speculative and where they otherwise show an indisposition to liquidate.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like very much to have the Senator note the Secretary's reply to that telegram, and, if possible, present it to the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I have written some letters down there myself, but I do not seem to have obtained the results that I thought were desirable.

I also have the following telegram from Willcox, Ariz.:

WILLCOX, ARIZ., May 17, 1920.

Hon. R. L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Accept our congratulations on your timely speech of last Thursday relative to Federal Reserve Board. The efforts of the board to deflate credits immediately has resulted in stopping the movement of our young steers from breeding ground to northern pastures, where they are matured for beef. The northern buyers who contracted for these cattle early and made advance payments are now being forced to forfeit these advances, owing to the inability of anyone in cow business to secure funds, regardless of collateral, rate of interest, or amount of margin in steers. Unless relief is obtained the southwestern cowman will be against the wall. This association, in conjunction with Arizona Cattle Growers' Association and Panhandle and Southwestern Association, are wiring Arizona Senators; also Secretary Houston and Gov. Harding, of the board, requesting their assistance in relieving this serious situation.

COCHISE-GRAHAM CATTLE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
GEO. P. MORGAN, President.

I have here a letter from ex-governor of New Jersey, Hon. E. C. Stokes, of one of the large national banks of the country—Mechanics National Bank, of Trenton. I desire to say that my observations are not directed against the banks; they are in behalf of the banks, and for their real welfare. I do not want the banks of this country to be injured or harmed, but I do not want them to pursue a dangerous policy which will harm them and which incidentally is harming the country. This letter reads as follows:

THE MECHANICS' NATIONAL BANK OF TRENTON,
Trenton, N. J., May 15, 1920.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR OWEN: I am delighted to know that somebody in the United States Senate has the intelligence and the courage and the patriotism to resent the action of the Federal Reserve Board in raising rediscount rates—an example that causes or at least furnishes an excuse for artificially high rates throughout the country.

I was opposed to the Federal Reserve System when the bill for its inauguration was pending, just because I feared such action on the part of those in charge of the system as has now come to pass. You and Secretary Glass favored it because you thought it would prevent the present condition, namely, exorbitant rates for credit when the country is in what might be termed a credit famine. Your purpose was most commendable, but the Federal Reserve Board is functioning in a way that thwarts the good object you had in mind when you urged the legislation.

The Federal Reserve Board is proceeding upon an entirely wrong theory. High wages and the high cost of material make necessary more credit than in normal times if industry and business are to be carried on. The manufacturer can not to-day finance his pay rolls and his materials and carry his manufactured product—if he is compelled to because of poor transportation service—on the same line of credit that he did before the war.

If because wages are high and materials are high the Federal Reserve System can not aid the banks of the country in furnishing the necessary credit to carry on enterprise and promote prosperity, then the Federal Reserve System has failed and ought to be changed or modified. The present methods of the Federal Reserve Board are based on an entirely erroneous theory.

Increased credit is not the cause of high prices. Increased credit is the result of high prices and is necessary because prices are high. What the country needs to-day is more credit, not less credit. If the industries and business of the land could be assured of more and cheaper credit, production would be encouraged, and with an increase of production prices would fall. With assurance of the proper amount of credit at reasonable rates, intensive production would follow and prices would be cheaper, even without a reduction in wages. This production, however, will never be undertaken by the manufacturer or even by the farmer if he thinks his loans are going to be called or curtailed and he himself forced into bankruptcy because of inability to carry his enterprises to completion.

The members of the Federal Reserve Board and some of the members of the Federal reserve bank utterly fail to grasp this economic law and the importance of its encouragement in this hour of strain.

Your diagnosis of the chief cause of the fall in the price of Liberty bonds is absolutely accurate. There are 22,000,000 of such bondholders in the country. These bonds were bought as matter of patriotism by many who could illy afford it, and when they are compelled to sell to pay a doctor's bill or provide for the proverbial rainy day the loss they suffer creates a feeling of bitterness against the Government and the holders feel they have been deceived. Indeed, good faith on the part of the Government demands that every legitimate Government agency should be employed to keep these bonds at par and save the patriotic holders from loss.

The action of the Federal Reserve Board in raising the discount rates on loans secured by bonds to 5½ per cent—more than the interest return on the bonds—not only caused a liquidation of the bonds on the bargain counter, but it created consternation and fear throughout the country and halted confidence and enterprise. The action, it seems to me, was most unjust and certainly not needed from a financial point of view, when some Federal reserve banks last year earned 110 per cent. They certainly have no right to cry "profiteer" against their fellow countrymen. Their action gave the excuse for the raising of money rates all over the country.

Quick and prompt transportation of food supplies and raw materials is absolutely necessary if prices are to be kept normal. Indeed, inadequate transportation, if it does not cause a panic in food does cause high prices. The same is true in the case of raw materials for the manufacturers.

The railroads need money to buy new equipment. To-day security issues of roads like the Pennsylvania and New York Central, well secured by bonds or equipment, are upon the market at from 7 to 7½ per cent. This means that the money costs them, when they have paid their bank and brokerage commissions, from 8 to 10 per cent. With an allowed earning capacity of 5½ per cent under the new railroad law, our transportation systems can not continue to pay such exorbitant interest rates to finance their equipments and improvements. It is bound to break down and the country suffer from the consequent trade paralysis.

Every increase of discount rates on the part of the Federal Reserve Board makes for dearer credit. The high interest rates for call money in New York is artificial and unjustifiable. There is no more reason why New York bankers should demand rates over 6 per cent than Philadelphia or Boston or Pittsburgh. Indeed, some of the bankers in that city refuse to accept over 6 per cent. Such rates are tantamount to conspiracy against values and prosperity. They tend to very materially reduce the market value of legitimate securities held by life and fire insurance companies, savings banks, trust companies and national banks, and by millions of patriotic and innocent investors throughout the land.

There is scarcely a family in America that is not directly or indirectly, through life insurance and through banks, interested in a higher value of securities. Those securities to-day are abnormally and artificially below their true worth. Every time there is a rise in the market money rates are put up and the appreciation of these securities, affecting the savings of millions of Americans, is checked and, indeed, reduced.

No man or set of men in this country has any more right to be permitted to engage in financial methods that cause a loss to the millions of securities holders than he has to burn down a barn. Both mean destruction of the earnings and savings wealth of the country. This is a question of simple, common honesty; and when common honesty is involved, no man has a right, even if the law does not prohibit it, to resort to economic measures that violate it.

More and cheaper credit in this hour would be a godsend to the American people. The Federal Reserve ought to set an example to this desirable end. Just one example by way of illustration:

In the cities of this land many people are practically homeless. Some of them have their goods in storage and are living with their relatives because they can not get homes. The Government has urged the banks to finance home building. The banks should do this. Indeed, they are willing to do it, and do it at a rate not over 6 per cent.

The other day Congress passed a law permitting the Federal Reserve Board—an additional and dangerous power—to raise the discount rates in proportion to the line of accomodation of the member banks of the Federal Reserve System. That means that they can make discount rates 7 or 8 or 9 or 10 per cent or any per cent they see fit. The usury law does not apply under this act to this philanthropic governmental institution. Individuals can not indulge in usury but the Government can—a beautiful example for the Government to set to its people.

Under this law, if the banks have loaned to the limit of their credit to home builders and are compelled to borrow of the Federal Reserve Banks, because they are straining their credit to build homes and do it at 6 per cent, the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal reserve banks, can make the rediscount rates against them 7 or 8 or 9 per cent, so that the banks are compelled, either to lose money on the transaction or in their fear of the application of this law, refuse to extend credit to home builders and thus check this much needed enterprise, the remedy of a serious condition.

I realize that the Federal Reserve Board has the power, but, Senator, you can not drive the American people into desperation without resentment. The man who wants to build a home in this hour and the man who wants to furnish employment and pay wages, is entitled to have credit if his resources warrant it, and the attempt of the Federal Reserve Board to curtail credit under these conditions strikes a blow at the prosperity and welfare of the land.

Last January, in one of the largest cities of this country, a business man was called in and congratulated upon his statement, and told that he would be very welcome to come in to borrow, and that they would give him a loan of $75,000. The other day he went and asked for $25,000, and was refused, not because he was not worth the money, but because the banker said there was a credit famine in the country. He reminded the banker of his promise and conversation, but the banker simply shook his head and said, "We are going through a panic."

My comment on that is that that banker does not understand his obligations to his fellow man. Unfortunately some bankers forget that business and industry ought to be provided with credit when credit is needed, and they seem to hold to the theory that business and industry ought to borrow when credit is plentiful. This view of the credit function, which I fear is taken by too many bankers, is not banking at all. It is simply high-class pawnbroking. When a man needs credit, legitimate credit should be forthcoming, and it is the duty of the banker to provide it for him.

In 1907, during the panic of that year, our little bank at Trenton—then a third of the size it is to-day—borrowed six hundred thousand, paid 6 per cent for it, and loaned it to our customers to save them from trouble. We did not make a man pay a dollar during that entire period of trial. It was an hour when our customers, merchants, manufacturers, and business men needed help, and the real banker will see that people get help when they need it.

Of course we made no money on the transaction. In fact, we lost because the cost of handling the operation and the transfer of funds was entirely at the bank's expense, but we were rewarded in the thought that we had helped the community and saved the borrowers from suffering liquidation and perhaps bankruptcy.

I have no patience with the maudlin cry that there is not credit enough in the country to finance its progress and development. If that were true, there would be no progress or development. Progress necessarily demands more credit, and there is always credit enough in any civilized nation to carry on its legitimate business enterprises of any character whatever, provided that credit is made liquid and available. It is not being made liquid and available by present methods of the Federal reserve bank in pushing up their discount rates and encouraging high money rates in New York and throughout the land.

A United States Senator who will get up in the Senate and in a vigorous patriotic speech explain this situation to the people of America and demand a change in the interest of common welfare will make himself deservedly a friend of the people.

More might be said, but this letter is long enough. I thank you for your courage and for your clear insight in this day of artificial financial difficulties. The country is all right; the rank and file of the people are all right. They are ready to go ahead if the financial system of our country will not stand in the way and block their efforts.

I take the liberty of inclosing you a recent article of mine.

Very sincerely, yours,

E. C. STOKES.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Oklahoma is far better posted than I am on these matters, and I want to ask him for information this question:

Was it not the original design and plan of the Federal Reserve Act that it was to aid the commerce and trade of the country?

Mr. OWEN. Absolutely.

Mr. NELSON. And that credits should be granted simply on commercial paper?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is right.

Mr. NELSON. That policy was changed when the banks were permitted to borrow money on Liberty bonds as collateral.

Mr. OWEN. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. And has not that been one of the causes that has led to this great inflation of the currency?

Mr. OWEN. It has inflated the currency to some extent.

Mr. NELSON. In other words, if they had adhered to the original plan, and made no loans except on commercial paper covered with bills of lading and other sercurities, there would not have been the present inflation of the currency.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. But the practice of allowing them to borrow money on Government bonds has led to an immense inflation of the currency. Is not that true?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; some inflation of the currency, but very great inflation of credit. Of course, because of the war, in order to mobilize the resources of the country, we had to use and we did use the Federal reserve banks in discounting against these Liberty bonds as collateral security; and I think the time will have to come when we shall go back to the old system, where no bonds of any kind will be used, not even United States bonds, except in a very limited degree.

I do not believe they ought to be used at all, because we have an abundance of commercial paper now; but at present many of the banks of the country are carrying these bonds with the implied contract that they could use them as a means of getting credit, and I think it would not be advisable now to undertake to deflate the credit on those bonds. I think, however, that as soon as these bonds can be digested by the public the act ought to be changed so as not to leave bonds open as collateral security for the purpose of getting the resources of the reserve banks.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the great knowledge of these matters of the Senator from Oklahoma, with whom I served on the committee when this Federal reserve legislation was enacted.

Mr. OWEN. I remember with gratitude the service the Senator from Minnesota rendered. He was one of the most faithful and useful of our members.

Mr. NELSON. It was one of the claims—and I thought it was well founded—that our currency would become more elastic; that it would be governed by the ebb and flow of the commerce and trade of the country.

Mr. OWEN. That is the correct theory, too.

Mr. NELSON. That was the theory of the Federal reserve bill, and I thought it was a sensible theory; but by departing from it by allowing this great volume of Liberty bonds to be used in this way we have done violence to that theory, and we have got some other standard to measure the volume of currency outstanding. Is not that a fact?

Mr. OWEN. What the Senator says has great force in it and great value in it, because these Liberty bonds really, after all, are an investment, and are not the same kind of paper as bills based upon cattle, wheat, corn, and things of that kind, which measure the ebb and flow of commerce, as the Senator points out. It would be much better if we could get back to the old system, and I take it we will get back to it as soon as we get rid of the outstanding bonds which have not yet been digested by the public.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to let me interrupt him a little further to say this: We can not well overlook the fact that these Government loans that were made, these so-called Liberty loans and the Victory loans, were of a unique character, and different from all the other loans ever made by the Government.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. In other words, the Government made a canvass all over the country, and induced everybody, high and low, rich and poor, no matter what their calling or business was, to take a share in these Government loans.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Now, there was such a volume of them issued, such an immense amount of money was taken out of the banks and out of circulation to purchase these bonds, that it left a vacuum, and the bonds have gone down. Of course, some of these holders are big holders who can afford to hold their bonds; but there are many poor people who are face to face with the alternative either of selling their bonds at a big loss or of borrowing money to carry on their business, and the only security they can well give is these bonds. So that although our system of having Government bonds as collateral security for these loans of the Federal reserve banks is an innovation and a change, and has led to this great inflation of the currency, nevertheless it is one that grows out of the necessity of the case, and is unavoidable, I think.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is right. I have been anxious that the normal interest rate should come down instead of going up, because there are so many people, including many poor people, who bought these Liberty bonds as a patriotic duty; and if the interest rate goes skyrocketing up, it has the same effect upon Government bonds that it has upon any other kind of bonds. The effect is to make a comparison between a high rate of interest as a normal matter and a low rate of interest, 4¼ per cent, on these bonds. The consequence is, when people offer the bonds for sale, that men say, "Well, this security is good security, of course, but it is only earning 4¼ per cent, and I can get 8 per cent for my money. Why should I give par for these bonds?"

That is the kind of talk that goes on, and the action of the Federal Reserve Board in raising these rates to 6 and 7 per cent has the effect of depreciating the value of these Liberty bonds all over the country. There are nineteen or twenty million people who have these bonds, and who bought them for patriotic reasons. Of course, it can be said that if they hold them until the time of maturity, they will not lose anything; but they were told, when they bought them, that they were the best security in the world. They expected to be able to sell them at relative par whenever they wanted to. They thought they were as good as a savings-bank account which they could cash at will.

Another thing is that when you raise these rates in this manner, it has the effect of breaking down the value of the bonds and of the stocks held by the saving banks of New England. What does the Senator think of that? Is that advisable? Do you want to break down confidence in the savings banks of the country?

I tell you, Senators, there is a moral aspect to a charge of interest, and that moral aspect must be what will be a reasonable return on idle capital; and when you want to know what the reasonable return on idle capital is, you have a right to look to the precedents of the past.

In the United States, the banks pay 2, 3, and 4 per cent interest for deposits. The banks themselves say that 2 and 3 and 4 per cent are fair rates for money, because that is what they pay for money to their depositors. They have borrowed from their depositors billions of dollars at those rates, and then they let it out at 5, 6, and 7 per cent—an increase of 3 per cent above what they pay—showing again that that is a fair return for the handling of credits. As I pointed out a while ago, Belgium had a uniform, fixed rate of 3 per cent for 50 consecutive years, without a single break, before the war. France had the same rate, with a few changes. Germany had a rate under 4 per cent, around 4 per cent. England had a rate fluctuating between 3 and 4 per cent. It is a fair rate.

The United States bonds at 3 per cent were above par before the war. Two per cent bonds now, with the circulation privilege, are above par. I am not asking anything unreasonable in asking that a decent standard shall be set by the powers of this Government who are in control of the Federal reserve banks. I am not asking anything unreasonable when I point out that the Federal reserve banks, on a 4 per cent rate, made 100 per cent profit last year, and ask that they shall be content with 4 per cent. They ought to be content with 3. It is enough; it is a fair rate; and then they ought to discriminate as to whom they will make these loans to. But I say that if this thing goes on—this thing of these skyrocketing rates on the stock exchange, these skyrocketing rates on commercial and industrial paper—if the Federal Reserve Board raise the rate now, as they might do to-morrow—they are having a conference over it now—if they raise the rate, what then?

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] says he does not like to hear a prophet of evil. The prophets of evil have been talking a good deal. I am not afraid of any industrial depression.

There is no need for an industrial depression. We have plenty of credits, and I shall put in my remarks, without stopping to detail it now, the volume of credits that is available by the member banks and the reserve banks right now. These present rates are artificial and willful. They are selfish. They are unjustified. They are indefensible. If bad consequences ensue, it will be over my protest.

Job has well said that—

The thing I greatly feared is come upon me.

I do not fear it. I defy it, and I defy those who bring it about; and they will hear from the American people if it happens.

MEMORANDUM.

The resources of the Federal reserve banks May 14, 1920, were:

ASSETS.

Gold	$1,939,141,000
Loans	2,964,582,000
United States bonds and certificates	306,328,000

LIABILITIES.

Deposits	1,839,355,000
Capital and surplus	213,227,000
Federal reserve notes	3,083,234,000

Loans exceed deposits by over $1,100,000,000. The best loans in the world and deposits fixed by law are not subject to withdrawal. Entire system secured by assets of all member banks and by the United States. No cash reserve really required against deposits because deposits can not be withdrawn.

On a 33⅓ per cent reserve of gold the notes could be expanded if absolutely necessary to three times $1,939,141,000 or $5,817,000,000 or $2,817,000,000 in excess of present issue. No increase is probably necessary, because the speculative and investment loans being retired will furnish all credits likely to be needed without raising rates.

If any more gold were needed the United States could command it. No more gold is needed. We have more than enough, and the present ratio of gold against notes is over 60 per cent, while the Bank of England went below 15 per cent in gold reserve without disturbing the peace of Great Britain, because if actually needed, the Bank of England could issue legal-tender notes against loans.

England is economical in using gold, and the United States is uneconomical in the use of gold by keeping a percentage much higher than necessary. The surplus above actual need is so much noninterest-producing gold.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I hope we may proceed now with the shipping bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over in the bill will be found on page 9, line 1, where it is proposed to insert, after the word "sold," the words:

and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is not forced to sell: Provided, That no sale shall be made at a less price than the cost at the time of making such sale of constructing vessels of similar types in private yards in the United States, after deducting the depreciation charge against the vessels sold generally allowed in shipping operations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is interested in that amendment, but he is perfectly willing that it should go to conference and be taken care of there, and I assure the Senate that it will be looked into very carefully. Probably some modification will be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Also the other amendment on the same page.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, later on in the page, another committee amendment was passed over. Beginning on line 18, after the word "vessels," the committee propose to insert:

having a dead-weight tonnage of not exceeding 6,000 tons, unless such vessels are over 10 years of age.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 21, to insert section 19, as follows:

SEC. 19. That the board, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act and from time to time thereafter, is authorized and directed to determine what apprentices should be carried upon vessels documented under the laws of the United States and to prescribe the duties, compensation, and conditions of employment of such apprentices and to make rules and regulations requiring such apprentices to be carried on the vessels of the board, on vessels sold by it, and on vessels having contracts for the carrying of the mails, and the board is directed to submit to Congress from time to time its recommendations for additional legislation to make available a sufficient number of officers and able seamen who are citizens of the United States to officer and man the merchant marine of the United States to such an extent as it may deem desirable: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any existing power or authority of the board to organize or maintain its recruiting service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that went over at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and I just spoke to him about it. It will be entirely satisfactory to him to change, in line 14, the word "determine" to "recommend." So I offer that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 21, line 14, strike out the word "determine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "recommend," so as to read:

That the board, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act and from time to time thereafter, is authorized and directed to recommend what apprentices should be carried upon vessels documented under the laws of the United States, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The next amendment passed over is one in which two or three Senators, who are now engaged in a very important committee meeting, are very much interested. So, in the hope that the committee meeting may be completed without having to disturb them, and upon the assurance that it will take only about 20 minutes to dispose of the agricultural conference report, I am willing to lay aside the shipping bill temporarily for a few moments and allow that report to be taken up.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill be laid before the Senate, and that the shipping bill may be temporarily laid aside.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Mr. THOMAS. I assume the Senator having charge of the report does not intend to concur in the amendments about which there is a difference unless the Senate requires him to do so.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that the Senate conferees brought these three items in disagreement to the Senate, and, of course, it is for the Senate to instruct the conferees. I will assure the Senator that the conferees will insist on the amendments made by the Senate if so instructed by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. That is an answer to my query. I am very much opposed to one of the House provisions which the Senate conferees refused to accept. Of course, if there is to be a dissent, I do not care to take up any time in discussing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The entire speech is as follows:

Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota a question? I understand the conferees have agreed on everything except three items.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator propose to ask that the conference report be adopted as to everything the conferees agreed upon, and as to the balance does he want it to go back to conference?

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry. Is it permissible to file a motion to send the conference report back to the conferees with instructions to insist on certain Senate amendments, or must the question first be taken on the adoption or rejection of the conference report as agreed upon, and then file a motion to instruct the conferees?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair took occasion in 1914 to investigate the question and then expressed the opinion that anything could be done that had been done in accordance with decisions of preceding presiding officers, but it was the opinion of the Chair at that time that the way to reach it was to point out what the objections were to the conference report, and if the objections met with the views of the Senate, and they wanted the conferees to stand by the Senate amendments, not to withdraw it, but reject the conference report and then instruct the conferees to insist on the amendments of the Senate and send the bill back to conference.

Mr. COMER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for a question.

Mr. COMER. I am not going to make a speech. I understand that they disagreed on my amendment and that it has been rejected. I wish to say, Mr. President, to the chairman of the committee that this was a rider on the Agricultural appropriation bill and the most important proposition that you have. I do not wish to embarrass the passage of the Agricultural appropriation bill, and as the maker of the amendment I will not urge it at all.

I wish to thank the Senate for the consideration that has been shown me in the matter and to state that I am going to offer a regular bill or a regular amendment to a bill to come through regularly instead of insisting on the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I wish to thank the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] for the statement he has just made. I will say to the Senator that the conferees on the part of the Senate felt that it was a very important amendment and we did not feel that we could recede until it had been brought back to the Senate. I feel now that we have done our full duty, and it is left with the Senate to do whatever it sees fit with it.

Mr. COMER. While on the floor I wish to thank the chairman of the committee and the committee itself for the consideration shown the amendment. It is a most important matter and we trust that it will have consideration again.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just wish to ask how long this is likely to take? I did not expect that we would have a cotton discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. This is merely the embroidery. We are coming to the real thing now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We are going right at it now?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The action of the Senate on the conference report means very much to a certain class of our citizens. The appropriations that are carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill touch many phases of our national life.

I wish to state in the beginning just a few instances or a few things that are touched by the provisions of the bill. The meat that we eat is passed upon by the department's inspectors. Every egg that is kept in cold storage and placed in transit has been approved by this department. Every precaution is taken to see that there are no injurious ingredients in the food the people eat or in the medicine they buy. The department sees to it when maple sirup is sold that it is pure maple sirup and not some fraud practiced upon the people. Through the efforts of the department cotton, which enters into everything we wear, has been made more durable. Our clothing may be worn for a longer time because of the durability and strength either in the wool or in the cotton which is placed in it. Automobile tires have been made more durable because of the superior character of the ingredients which enter into their manufacture. The experts of the department study cotton and woolen fibers; their activities embrace the subject of shoes by reason of the development of methods of treating leather which prolong its life. The department teaches farmers how to conserve and how to save from waste their leather and how to tan it. It conserves and beautifies the forests and preserves the game of the country. It compels the proper labeling of medicine in order that one may not be defrauded in its purchase. It gives storm signals so that the farmer may be protected from unexpected and sudden storms or cyclones which may arise.

It controls the marketing of fruits and vegetables, aids in their transportation, and encourages economy in wiping out the commissions of the middleman. It has aided in the development of good roads. The experimental roads around the city of Washington are under the jurisdiction of this department. Experiments and tests are made in order that materials may be discovered which will be more durable, and which therefore will make the roads more lasting.

It is through the work of this department that farmers have been encouraged to economize in various ways; to raise more of particular products per year upon their acres. For instance, since 1880 there has been a gradual increase of 25 per cent in the average yield of wheat per acre, the Agricultural Department cooperating to a very great extent through its agents in making that increased yield possible. Largely through its activities the yield of corn has increased 10 per cent per acre; the yield of oats has increased 24 per cent per acre; the yield of potatoes has increased 33 per cent per acre; of hay, 20 per cent per acre; of cotton, 3½ per cent per acre; and the average yield per acre of other crops has increased 16 per cent. So this great department enters into the very life of the Nation.

Mr. President, upon agriculture depends the prosperity of the American people. The high cost of living to-day is due to the lack of production in the country; to the fact that the people are moving from the country into the cities and are becoming consumers instead of producers. So long as that condition continues high prices for agricultural labor are sure to prevail, and the high cost of living will not be reduced until more foodstuffs are produced to meet the demands of the consumers of the country. So this bill is of the utmost importance in order to meet conditions existing in America to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Mississippi proceeds, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The figures which the Senator has quoted, showing the increases in the yields of various crops, are very interesting and illuminating. I assume, of course, the Senator means that those increases represent the average throughout the country?

Mr. HARRISON. They represent the average throughout the whole country.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Mississippi did not state—and that is what I desire to have him state, if he has the information—during what period these increases have occurred.

Mr. HARRISON. They have occurred since 1880. Some States have shown marvelously increased yields per acre, while others have not shown so great an increase. I know that in the State of Mississippi the yield of corn has almost doubled, due to the encouragement that the Department of Agriculture has given in the organization of boys' corn clubs, and the encouragement the producers have received from the Crop Estimate Bureau of that department.

There is a great deal of criticism that can be very justly made of this bill. The Republican Party in its last campaign told the people that we were paying too much attention to foreign affairs, to foreign entanglements, and to foreign embroilments, and were not paying enough attention to our domestic and internal affairs. They said that if they should be honored by being placed in control in the Senate and the House of Representatives they would see that the internal affairs of the country were properly taken care of; that adequate provision would be made by law for every emergency, so far as our domestic and internal affairs were concerned. We have seen their record; we have watched it; and their finger prints are in this bill.

We saw them also in their action when we had under consideration the river and harbor bill, involving legislation which affects the very life of the Nation and which should provide adequate funds to carry on our trade and commerce with foreign nations.

You had seen and we had seen that for four or five years previously every harbor in the United States had suffered because of inadequate funds having been provided for its maintenance. You had seen and we had seen ship after ship lying at anchor in the sea waiting to be towed into harbor when those ships should have placidly sailed in without any help from a towboat. That condition had arisen because the harbors had filled up, no money having been provided to maintain the dredges, in order that our commerce and our trade with the nations of the world might continue to grow. In the face of such conditions, the people of America saw a Republican House of Representatives pass a river and harbor bill to take care of that phase of the internal needs of the United States, and notwithstanding the fact that prior to the recent war year by year the Congress had passed and the President had seen fit to approve river and harbor bills that approximated twenty-five and forty and forty-five million dollars, a Republican House of Representatives provided a lump-sum appropriation of only $12,000,000 for rivers and harbors; and that in the face of the fact that the cost of everything that enters into dredge work and the maintenance of the rivers and harbors of the country has increased a hundredfold since the appropriations of 1913 and 1914 and 1915.

We remedied that situation somewhat when the bill came to the Senate, the Commerce Committee providing appropriations of $20,000,000, and through the votes of Democratic Senators, aided by one or two Republican Senators, combatting both the Republican majority in this body and the powerful steering committee of the Republican Party in the other body, we increased the amount to $24,000,000. That is an insufficient amount; that is inadequate to take care of the needs of our harbors and rivers in this country.

The Republican majority voted for appropriations to furnish a merchant marine worth $3,000,000,000, and we now have under consideration legislation upon that subject. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], in charge of that measure, has just acceded to the request of the Senator from North Dakota, and by unanimous consent the Senate agreed that the consideration of the shipping bill might be deferred until the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill is concluded. Notwithstanding the fact, however, that we have provided a magnificent merchant marine costing $3,000,000,000, the Republican Party in the House and Senate have refused to provide sufficient funds to make our harbors and rivers deep enough to allow ships to go to and fro.

I might say in this connection that although we passed the river and harbor bill some three weeks ago, I believe, and the bill was sent to the House, it there lies on the Speaker's table, and the Republican steering committee refuses to allow any member of that party to make a motion for the appointment of conferees to send the bill to conference. That is the way the Republican Party has redeemed its promise to the people to provide for the internal affairs of this country.

Now, let us see about the Agricultural bill, which means more than river and harbor improvements, because it goes into every field, into every nook and corner of the United States and is vitally important to the prosperity of our country.

The Agricultural Department, through its experts, who know their business and who have the interest of the farmers at heart, submitted an estimate to this Congress, saying that it was the very smallest estimate that could be submitted for appropriations adequately to take care of the conditions and situation affecting and touching the farmers. That estimate covered a total of $37,672,000. Yet the Republican House of Representatives, having no great care for the farming interests of the country, refused to comply with the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, discarded his estimate of $37,000,000, and provided an appropriation of only $30,272,000. They lopped off of the appropriations to carry on the great agricultural industry of this country $7,000,000.

Was any such action as that taken by them when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration? Was there any such action taken when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration? No. The Republican majority did not act in a parsimonious manner in the case of those two appropriation bills. Although before the war our appropriations for the Army amounted to $101,000,000 and for the Navy at most to $160,000,000, and although no appropriations theretofore had been that large for the Army or Navy, we saw passed through this body and through the House, controlled by the Republican Party, a bill for the Army carrying appropriations of $350,000,000, and we saw passed through the House and through this body by Republican votes, steered by Republican leaders, a bill for the Navy carrying appropriations of practically $600,000,000. So the Republican Congress have seen fit to increase the Army appropriations by $250,000,000 over those of prewar days; they have seen fit to increase the Navy appropriations over those of prewar days by practically $500,000,000; and yet they try to deceive the American people by preaching economy, and, as an example of their economy, point to the saving of $7,000,000 in the great service that directly affects the farmers of the country.

The Senate did somewhat better than the House. We increased the Agricultural appropriations in the Senate until the bill carried a total of $32,740,000. It went to conference in that shape, with the increase made by the Senate from $30,272,000 to $32,740,000.

We had expected that the House would concede this small increase which was begged for by the Agricultural Department which the facts warranted, which no man could combat or give reason against; but we have seen the conferees on the part of the Senate come back with a report that reduces by $1,265,393 the amount carried by the bill as agreed to when the bill was under consideration in the Senate.

The amount carried in this appropriation bill for agriculture, if it should be adopted, is $2,400,000 less than was provided for the present year for agriculture, so it is difficult to understand, it will be very hard for you to explain, after your promises to the people two years ago that you would take care of the domestic affairs and the internal improvements of this country, when they see you reducing the appropriations for agriculture to a point $2,400,000 less than last year, and see you increasing the appropriations for the Army and Navy two and three and four fold.

I expect to point out to the Senator from Nebraska and to the Senator from North Dakota some of the items that I had hoped and that the Senate had hoped you would be able to hold in this bill, and I expect to point out how the decrease in these appropriations will affect those particular branches of the Agricultural Department that are affected by them.

For instance, take the first amendment—amendment numbered 19—of this bill. This is for the Office of Farm Management and Farm Economics. The Senate increased this item over the House $127,000. The increase requested in the estimates was $297,000. The conference report cuts the increase allowed by the Senate $77,000. Thus you are withholding from the Agricultural Department $77,000 that the judgment of the Senate warranted you in giving that department. You are giving them an amount much less than that asked by the Agricultural Department—very much less than they said they were able to get along on.

What are the reasons for the maintenance of the Office of Farm Management and Farm Economics? Let me summarize them:

The Farm Management Office was reorganized a year ago to make it more effective as the agency for looking to the improvement of rural life, land tenure, and so forth.

It is important to the farmer to provide for the study of the cost of producing farm crops. The department has already conducted successfully preliminary studies in the cost of producing cotton, wheat, and sugar beets. It permits working in cooperation with the Crop Estimate Bureau of the Agricultural Department to insure giving to every farmer in this country estimates as to what his neighbor did and how much it cost his neighbor to produce cotton or potatoes or corn or wheat, or anything else, encouraging him thereby, when he can see from the figures that the cost has been too much to him for that which he raised, to compete with his neighbor and to be economical in the production of these things. It goes into the study of horse and tractor utilization, so far as it affects the economic forces of the farm, the study of the relationship between landlord and tenant, land settlement, and land colonization, by which the landless may acquire its ownership. The Government should make it possible to encourage the farmer to stay on the farm, and should give to him all the information possible touching matters of social institutions, better schools, better churches, opportunities for social intercourse, and so forth. That is what we are trying to do by making these appropriations under the head of Farm Management and Farm Economics—making country life such that it will encourage people to stay upon the farm and discourage them from moving to the cities and becoming consumers in this land.

Amendment numbered 55 is the provision which touches that investigation of the disease of tuberculosis in animals—its control and eradication. You have cut the appropriation in that item for this year by $100,000. The department asked that you make immediately available $200,000. The Senate gave $100,000 for that work. The Senate conferees and the House conferees together have eliminated that $100,000 altogether, and that notwithstanding the fact that the department say that they have calls from all over the country now to send their agents there to help them to eradicate the tuberculosis in cattle.

This is a work of the Government that has saved millions of dollars to this country. I am quite sure that it was not the desire of the conferees upon the part of the Senate to have tuberculosis in cattle continue. I am quite sure that you wanted to restrain the hand of disease that is killing them by the thousands every year. Why, the facts are that the department estimates the loss from tuberculosis annually at $40,000,000. The condemnation on account of tuberculosis during the fiscal year 1919 was 37,600 cattle and 65,838 hogs, equivalent to 2,000 carloads of cattle and 1,000 carloads of hogs. So when you allow them to die from tuberculosis the feed that has been used, which amounts to thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars up until the time of their death, is gone. It is a matter of waste. So if we are to encourage the raising of cattle and try to help in the reduction of the high cost of living and restraining the hands of the profiteers in the cities and the towns that are charging too much for meat and pork, we have got to make adequate appropriations to take care of such diseases as tuberculosis in our cattle.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that the conferees eliminated the appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. HARRISON. They have eliminated the provision of $100,000 inserted by the Senate that was made immediately available for this particular work. They have stricken it from the bill. I do not think the conferees disagree with me on that proposition, and if I misstate anything I am very glad to have it corrected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator does not misstate it, only the $100,000 was to be taken from the indemnity fund, which, of course, would mean an additional $100,000. That part of it was eliminated. Of course, we are very close to the end of the fiscal year, and it was thought unnecessary to make available a greater amount than that which we did make available. The only difference between the House provision and the Senate provision is that the Senate committee took $100,000 from the indemnity fund to be used in making these discoveries, which, of course, would mean an additional appropriation of $100,000. That has been eliminated, as the Senator from Mississippi states.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; so the $100,000 that was provided for to be used immediately during this fiscal year to do this work has been eliminated, and the department is cut short, and they say in their report to the conferees and to the Congress that they are unable to take care of these numerous requests that are coming from all over the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. That $100,000 was in the nature of a deficiency appropriation?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; they needed that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, I should like to ask the Senator whether the fund for this fiscal year is practically exhausted?

Mr. HARRISON. It is practically exhausted; yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that the Agricultural Department has available for this work during the intervening months between now and the end of this fiscal year practically nothing?

Mr. HARRISON. They needed $200,000, but the Senate gave them the $100,000, and now we are to see the whole thing go. It is a sad story to narrate. I dislike to have the country know it, but the facts must come out.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NUGENT. I have been advised that there has been a decrease of the appropriation for the eradication of hog cholera to the extent of about $200,000. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not I have been correctly advised?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I was just coming to that.

Mr. NUGENT. It is the Senator's purpose to discuss that matter?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I was just coming to that. Let me give, prefacing my remarks on hog cholera, this little piece of history:

In 1903, it is said, three of these scientists of the Department of Agriculture discovered the cause of hog cholera. They worked out an effective method of preventing that disease. Since 1913 the losses from it have been reduced over 60 per cent. The death rate per thousand, which was as high as 144 out of 1,000 in 1894 and 118 out of 1,000 in 1914, has been reduced to 41 in 1,000 in 1919. In other words, it means a reduction from 144 out of 1,000 in 1897 to 41 out of 1,000 to-day—just a little matter of over $41,000,000 saved by the discovery of how to treat and prevent hog cholera. The House provision carried $410,000 for hog cholera. We increased that amount $231,045. Certainly we expected the conferees upon the part of the Senate to stand for that important item, and yet the Senate conferees receded on that $231,000 for hog cholera!

I wish it were in my power, but I know under the ruling of the Chair and the practice here it is not in order to make a motion to instruct the conferees to insist in particular upon that one item, and I can not do it. We have to vote down the report first and then move to instruct. But certainly the action of the Senate conferees in receding on that one item is indefensible. It will mean thousands and thousands of dollars to the people of this country.

Amendment No. 77 relates to the investigation of fruit diseases. The Senate has allowed a reduction of $10,000 in that very important item.

The services rendered by the department under this item consists in the application of plant pathological methods, in the study of pathologist's methods; in the study of the cause and prevention of the decay and spoilage of fruits in transit and arrival in the market. It includes the identification and study of the fungi and bacteria which cause decay—includes the study of temperature and other conditions that affect the organism. This service works with the Bureau of Markets. It will greatly affect fruit shippers and resources as well as transportation companies.

A mere pittance of $10,000 is withheld from the department, doing such a great work as that, which might mean the saving of millions of dollars.

Amendment No. 79——

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. NUGENT. Before passing from that particular item, I desire to say that the appropriation for the eradication of hog cholera is, in my judgment, one of the most important provisions in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

A few years ago, when hog cholera was prevalent throughout the West, it occasioned the loss of thousands and thousands of head of hogs; in fact, whole herds were wiped out. But since the Government established a system of cooperation, and hog cholera serum was discovered and has been liberally used in Idaho, there have been, comparatively speaking, but small losses from this disease, and I have not the least hesitancy in saying that without this appropriation, and without a continuance of Federal cooperation in that way, in all human probability we will return sooner or later to the conditions which prevailed at the time the Government entered upon this cooperation, and it is vitally necessary, in my judgment, that the entire amount of the appropriation made by the Senate for that particular purpose should be retained in this bill.

It not only is of vital importance to the people of my State, but it is of vital importance to people throughout the country, because hog cholera destroys tens of thousands of hogs. As the Senator from Mississippi very properly stated, the food they consume up to the time of their death is gone, and carload after carload and trainload after trainload of hog meat, in the shape of fresh pork, bacon, ham, is lost to the people of the country, and more particularly is that loss a serious matter now, when every effort is being put forth to increase production of foodstuffs.

Mr. HARRISON. When we fail to provide sufficient funds to carry on this work, it just leaves it in such shape that the disease is going to take root again, and we will lose what we have gained by the prevention or elimination of the hog cholera or tuberculosis, as the case may be. In other words, we will be where we started. All we expended would then be wasted.

Let me call attention to the fact, too, that they have eliminated a million dollars in this bill for the foot-and-mouth disease, which has been carried for several years, at least a half dozen years, merely as an insurance against the foot-and-mouth disease.

Year by year they have appropriated at least a million dollars as an insurance feature, so that if the foot-and-mouth disease should break out they could go right to work to eliminate it. But under this Republican spell of trying to fool somebody and pretending as if they were really economizing, they have stricken out that million dollars, and there is no insurance fund provided in this bill to take care of that emergency, if it should arise.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in my section I think hog cholera is even more disastrous than is indicated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] with reference to his State. The disease in the South, at least in my section of the South, became so general and was so fatal that farmers had despaired, and they were stopping any effort to raise hogs. Hog raising was becoming a rare thing, even on the farms. The losses were so great the farmers thought they could not afford to take the risk.

When this remedy for the trouble was discovered, and when it had been demonstrated that it was usually effective in stopping the spread of the disease in my part of the country they began to raise hogs again, and I think that now, instead of buying practically all our meat from the West the farmers in my State are beginning to raise not all they require, but the interest in hog growing has so greatly increased and has so rapidly expanded that I feel safe in saying that in a few years we will be independent of the West for our meat products. I do not think there is anything the Government has done which has been more helpful to agriculture than the discovery of remedies for fatal diseases to essential food animals.

Mr. HARRISON. Amendment 79 is a provision which provides for the acclimatization and adaptation investigations of cotton, corn, and other crops introduced from tropical regions, and for the improvement of cotton and other fiber plants by cultural methods, breeding, and selection, and for determining the feasibility of increasing the production of hard fibers outside of the continental United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to get a little additional information with respect to the foot-and-mouth disease. Does the Senator from Mississippi understand that there is now a provision to take care of such diseases?

Mr. HARRISON. There is $550,000 provided in this bill, but that is the same amount which is carried from year to year and has been carried, together with the million dollars more that was provided for. The department asked and desired that the million dollars over the $550,000 provided should be incorporated. That sum has been carried in previous years merely as an insurance feature, as I have stated before.

Mr. GRONNA. I know the Senator wants to be fair. A million dollars is just simply the insurance fund—the indemnity fund.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it is a million dollars.

Mr. GRONNA. There was only about $200,000 of that amount used during the last fiscal year. So there is no necessity, of course, for the appropriation of that large amount.

Mr. HARRISON. I know; but Congress for the past six years has deemed it wise to provide that insurance fund, has it not?

Mr. GRONNA. It has been carried.

Mr. HARRISON. It has been carried.

Mr. GRONNA. It was anticipated that it might be needed in paying the farmers for loss of stock, but it turned out that only a small portion of it was used.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; year by year it has gone back to the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that would be the effect of it—that if it were not used it would remain in the Treasury and never get out of the Treasury?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And the only effect of leaving it out of the bill is simply to reduce the aggregate figures of the appropriation for some effect.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the only reason which can be assigned in the world—that the Republican Party, trying to fool the people by preaching economy, knocks out a million dollars which every year for the past 8 or 10 years has gone back into the Treasury of the United States. If the emergency should arise—if the foot-and-mouth disease should break out, and Congress be adjourned, there would be no reckoning of the damage that might be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand it, the appropriation of $1,000,000 has not been spent for several years?

Mr. HARRISON. It has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it was apprehended that it probably would not have to be spent the next fiscal year?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it was intended to take care of the disease if it broke out?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And now, under the pretense of saving $1,000,000 to the Treasury, they save an item in the appropriation bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; they cut the appropriation that much. Under amendment 79, which I have just read, the Senate increased the item $25,000 over the bill as passed by the House, but the report reduces the Senate amendment $10,000. The important work of improving cotton by breeding, and so forth, would be seriously impaired. If no appropriations had been provided for this work, it would probably have prevented the bringing into this country of the Egyptian cotton, which is now worth $20,000,000 to the Arizona and lower California section.

One of the tire companies has invested over $10,000,000 in land and other facilities of production in the Salt River Valley in order to develop this Egyptian cotton, the fibers of which are so strong and cause tires to last longer.

Cooperative work with the Philippine bureau of agriculture and other insular bureaus furnishes supplies of henequen and sisal to meet the American demand for twine fiber.

In cooperative exploration and experimental work the department has stimulated the cultivation of sisal in the Philippines and henequen in Porto Rico and the Republic of Santo Domingo.

In Santo Domingo recently, from the examination made by our agents, has been disclosed an area of approximately 500,000 acres used for the growth of henequen. This is very promising for the production of this fiber.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not contend that we ought to take any more money to extend the raising of henequen in Cuba or in Porto Rico. The Senator knows that we have held extended hearings, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] knows, which showed that the International Harvester Co. and the Plymouth Cordage Co. have expended millions of dollars on that very thing, and that it has been proven an absolute failure. They have not the right sort of soil. I am not finding any fault with the Senator for criticizing the conferees for yielding. There are many of the items which the Senate committee very reluctantly yielded, but I must dissent from the Senator's statement that we ought to appropriate money for these very things which we know are not practicable, which we know absolutely result in a waste of money.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is speaking for himself. He says "we" know. All of us do not know that. The Agricultural Department does not know that.

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, yes; the Agricultural Department will not insist that this money should be used.

Mr. HARRISON. The Agricultural Department did insist that the $10,000 which the Senate conferees agreed to strike out should be provided.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who was chairman of the subcommittee, and who is present, will bear me out in the statement that it was an absolute failure, with all the millions that these corporations expended.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is talking about henequen and sisal?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I only stated that as illustrative of the point. I further offered the Egyptian cotton proposition. We have brought that into this country, and to-day there are $20,000,000 invested, in Lower California and Arizona, in raising that cotton. This appropriation was not confined to henequen. That was only one of the little things they did.

Mr. GRONNA. Is not the Senator a little uncharitable in criticizing the committee, when we increased the House appropriation by more than $500,000 for the raising of cotton?

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to get to that presently. Did I understand the Senator to ask me if I was not quite uncharitable in criticizing the committee?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I think I am very charitable in not saying more against the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator ought to give us credit for what we did do. We had several meetings, and took up those items, which give consideration to the cotton States of the South; and it is just as important for the North as it is for the South, because cotton is a national crop. It does not belong to the South only. We all have to wear clothing; we are compelled by law to wear clothing. We can go hungry if we want to, but we can not go without clothing.

The Senate conferees very earnestly insisted on this great increase of $300,000 in one item and $200,000 in another. The Senator ought to give us credit for that.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has gone a long ways in this matter, but he should have gone the full way, and I say this to the Senator and to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and to the other conferees. Of course, there was not any Democrat in the conference on the part of the Senate during the last five or six weeks.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say for the benefit of the Democrats that nearly all the items were disposed of before the Democratic members of the conference committee left the scene.

Mr. HARRISON. I say that the Senate only had two conferees present.

Mr. GRONNA. I hold no brief for the Democratic conferees, but I simply want the facts known.

Mr. HARRISON. I am quite sure that if the Senator could have had it in his power, and the Senator from Nebraska likewise, that they would have carried in the bill every increase provided for by the Senate, but they could not do it. The Republican Party, through its leaders here and in the House, have given out a statement and have made it their slogan to fool the people, to deceive them in this country, to have the people believe that we are economizing in the expenditure of money, and it was the force of the leadership in the House and in the Senate that has caused this bill to be so small.

I do not doubt a bit in the world that if the Senator from North Dakota could have had his way there would have been a larger appropriation for the agricultural interests of the country, and I say the same thing for the Senator from Nebraska. But the Republican Party is bent on trying to show a saving in expenditures in the Agricultural Department. The word has gone down the line—we heard it in the Agricultural Committee—that we must keep the bill cut to the bone, and that is why the bill is so small. I know the Senator is not to blame wholly for the matter at all.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to dissent upon the Senator's statement that it was the Republican leadership which caused a reduction in the bill. I should be glad to have any Senator on the minority side of the Chamber attend, and if the Senator from Mississippi will kindly meet with us when we go back to conference, he will find that the House conferees are fully able to declare themselves without any leadership from the Republican Party or any other party. I can assure the Senator from Mississippi that he would find that there would have to be a great number of meetings before he would have a bill as large as this agreed to. There were some three hundred amendments to be harmonized.

So far as the conferees on the part of the Senate were concerned, speaking for myself and my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]—and he can speak for himself better than I could—the Republican leadership had absolutely nothing to do with the items in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I know the Republican Members of the House on the conference committee, and I know them to be splendid fellows. I served with both of them for eight years. It is unparliamentary, perhaps, to refer to the rules and present practice of the House. They have changed over there lately, and there is a steering committee now that tells them what to do, and when they send the word down the line for a committee to reduce an appropriation to a certain amount, down it comes. That is the reason why they went through with the river and harbor bill like they did, and that, no doubt, is why the Republican conferees on the Agricultural appropriation bill are doing it.

I accept the explanation absolutely that those two Republicans are able to take care of themselves, but they are under the spell of the steering committee of the House over there. The Senator knows it, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] knows it. The Senator from Nebraska smiles in acquiescence of that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I am smiling that the Senator from Mississippi should go on with what is, to my mind, entirely out of place, trying to make a partisan matter of something that has not any partisanship in it; but I do not want him to make any statement about me that is not true.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's smile was so winning that I could not restrain myself.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator thinks I am smiling in acquiescence of his statement, he is absolutely mistaken and has misstated the fact. I am smiling because it seemed to me too foolish that the Senator should mean it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Senator admits the smile, but denies the meaning?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I always thought heretofore that the Senator from Nebraska smiled in behalf of the farmers of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi, and probably when he gets through I will have something to say in my own time, referring to his intimation that the members of the Agricultural appropriation conference committee—and he has referred particularly to two of us—have been moved by a partisan consideration, have been controlled by party leaders, that when he says that he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought I had been defending the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator either has no information on the subject or he has been entirely misinformed. There is nothing to it. There is no foundation whatever for it.

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped, when the Senator voted to reduce these appropriations for hog cholera, for the foot-and-mouth disease, for preventing tuberculosis, and various other things, that he was not at all times following his wish and his own judgment. I think it would have been better if he had been acting under the spell, the party direction, of the Republican majority in the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. So we get this conclusion from the Senator's statement. So partisan, so narrow-minded in his advocacy of this proposition is he that he first condemns a man because, the Senator says, he is acting under the spell of a party committee, and when that is denied he says the man is a good deal worse than though he was so acting. So we are going to be "damned if we do and damned if we don't." It does not make any difference so far as the Senator from Mississippi is concerned. He is going to condemn us anyway. If we had stood for all the big appropriations that he is advocating now, then he would have been talking about our extravagance instead of kicking because we were not extravagant.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator says I would be condemning him if he had stood for the appropriations I am contending for now. Did not the Senator vote for some of the things I am contending for now?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know what the Senator is contending for.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has not been listening to me, then.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's main contention is that we have had hog cholera because there is Republican control in the Senate. That is the way it seems to me.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, we had hog cholera before the Republicans got control, and while your party is guilty of so many outrages and indefensible abuses since getting control of Congress, I do not charge you with that. I do say, though, that we are going to have more hog cholera if you stay in control and fail to make adequate appropriation for its prevention.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt the Senator is honest in his belief.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. But, of course, I think he is mistaken. I do not believe the control of one party or the other is going to affect hog cholera or tuberculosis in Kansas.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. HARRISON. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska? He said if he were standing for the things I am contending for now that I would be condemning him. The Senator stood for everything I am speaking for. What I am opposed to is reducing the appropriations from what the Senate agreed to and what the Senator agreed to and voted for in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Did the Senator from Wisconsin desire to ask me something?

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to ask the Senator whether he thinks the Senate conferees should insist on having the bill their way and having their way on every item?

Mr. HARRISON. It may be we could not get a bill through, but I can tell you how they can do. The Senator has a powerful influence in the House of Representatives. I served with him. He was one of the leaders there, and I know of no man there who had more real influence in the House than he had. If he had stayed there, he would probably have been Speaker of the House. If the Republicans will assist the Democrats in voting down this conference report, and then vote for a motion to instruct the conferees to insist upon these items that the Senate approved, and if he will then take his influence back to the steering committee of the House and bring it to bear upon them to agree to it, then we will get a bill that will help the farmers of the country. Will the Senator do that?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does me altogether too much honor and ascribes to me altogether too much influence, for I have not any such influence. The Senator must not think that the steering committee of the House, as at present constituted, exercises the same great influence that the steering committee of the House used to exercise when he was a Member of it and he and his party were in the majority.

Mr. HARRISON. It was much more powerful, and when it exercised its power it exercised it for the benefit of the people of the country; but to-day they exercise for special interest and against the people.

I want to come now to amendment No. 81. That is the provision for investigation, testing, and improvement of plants yielding drugs, spices, poisons, oils, and related products and by-products, and for general physiological and fermentation investigations. The House appropriated $59,820 for that work. The Senate reduced it $20,000, and in the report the House recedes. That is one victory that the Senate conferees won. When the Senate reduces the amount, under the House bill, the Senate wins a great victory by not yielding on that particular proposition. The only time in conference when the Senate conferees won was when they gave up something.

Mr. NORRIS. What was that item?

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Senator forget there was such an item in the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted the Senator to read it again, if he will.

Mr. HARRISON. It is amendment No. 81.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not have before me the numbered amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. It is for investigation, testing, and improvement of plants yielding drugs, spices, poisons, and so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does he think that item ought to be reduced $20,000?

Mr. HARRISON. I certainly do not.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is opposed to that, then?

Mr. HARRISON. I am. I was opposed to the action of the Senate when they agreed to the reduction.

Mr. NORRIS. Usually the Senator has been condemning the conferees for receding, and here is a condemnation where the House conferees receded.

Mr. HARRISON. But the amount is that much less.

Mr. NORRIS. The difference is that the Senator objects every time there is a reduction in the appropriation.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, no. It would take me a week if I undertook to point out all the objections I have; but I am now talking about this item.

Mr. NORRIS. Take this particular one. Was that an amendment where the Senate reduced it?

Mr. HARRISON. That was an amendment where the Senate reduced it $20,000.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the way it passed the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. And the House receded.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us take that. Does the Senator claim, now, two things: First, that that was very important and the Senate did wrong in reducing it?

Mr. HARRISON. I certainly think so.

Mr. NORRIS. And, secondly, that it was reduced because there is a Republican Senate? He blames that on the Republican Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. I know I voted against its reduction.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know how many Democrats voted with him?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not remember that particular item, but the Democrats as a rule voted for adequate appropriations.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator know that on every one of these appropriation items there was not a party line drawn either in the Senate or in the committee?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course there was not.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator look around and see any of his Democratic colleagues on the floor who were in favor of a reduction and voted for it?

Mr. HARRISON. I know the majority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate voted to reduce it. I was against reducing the item. The House conferees receded on that reduction. I am criticizing that reduction, and here are my reasons for it.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the Senator's criticism.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the Senator has no objection to it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be right. I am not contending even that; but the thing I do object to is that the Senator is trying to give the impression now that the Republican Party is to blame for it, when the Republican Party has not anything more to do with it than the Democratic Party or than the flowers that bloom in the springtime, so far as party considerations are concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator thinks that way.

Mr. NORRIS. Nobody ever considered it in that light.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course not. In these conferences for the past five weeks there has been one lone Democrat and there have been four Republicans. You can not escape the result of your action; you must assume the responsibility when you have the majority control in the Senate and in the House.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not trying to escape the responsibility.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. NORRIS. I have never tried to escape responsibility. I was in favor of many original reductions made by the committee. I believed we ought to reduce in a good many respects more than we did reduce, not only in this bill, but almost every other bill that came before the Senate. I believe there was a time when we were confronted with the proposition that we ought even to reduce in cases often where we were dealing with almost a necessity, because of the condition of the country in regard to revenue and taxation. But there never has been a time before on this bill as far as I know, and I am glad to say it, when any man ever tried to make a partisan issue out of any item in it.

There never has previously been a time in the consideration of the bill, so far as I know—and I am glad to say it—when any man ever brought forth a partisan issue as to any item it contained. If we had wanted to pursue a partisan attitude in regard to the matter there would have been many an item now in the bill which would not have been in it affecting particularly the section of the country whence the Senator from Mississippi comes.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Nebraska think I am dealing in politics in the consideration of this bill?

Mr. NORRIS. I do. No one can listen to what the Senator says and get any other idea than that. He is dealing entirely with politics.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has not been listening to me.

Mr. NORRIS. I have been listening to the Senator's entire speech.

Mr. HARRISON. I have been trying to analyze the Senator's work as a conferee on this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I understood my colleague, he discovered the politics; he did not invent it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct.

Now, as to the amendment about which the Senator was speaking, touching drug plants, here are the reasons why I think the appropriation for that purpose should not have been reduced. It will necessitate the abandonment of poisonous plant surveys on the western ranges and in the national forests. The appropriation provides for cooperative work in the development of drugs of every kind, and for vegetable-oil investigations. It made it possible to begin the production of camphor in Florida. They are raising camphor plants now in Florida which produce camphor to an amount which is valued at $2,000,000. Largely as a result of the department's investigation and its introduction of drug-plant crops, the demand for importations of drugs from abroad during the war was promptly met by increased production of such important drug crops as belladonna, digitalis, and cannabis, which are indispensable in the treatment of serious disease conditions. All this should be encouraged.

Fundamental investigations in planting would have to be abandoned as would other investigations of the physiological changes produced in crop plants by parasites and other disease-producing agents.

So the Senator will agree with me that that is a most important provision and involves a most important work.

Mr. President, amendment numbered 82 was stricken from the bill by the Senate. It provided:

> For biophysical investigations in connection with the various lines of work herein authorized, $32,500.

The House receded, and consequently that item goes out of the bill. The item provided for fundamental, technical research work on the general problem of definite determination of the physical conditions of plant growth, including irrigation, relation to temperature, soil, and moisture, which are essential factors in the solution of many agricultural problems. It covers such questions as the exact determination of the relation of plant growth to moisture content, temperature, humus content, and so forth. It is especially important in connection with dry farming. This item is most material to the farmers of the West, for the result of the investigations will show to them what may be raised on the dry lands.

Amendment numbered 90 provides "for horticultural investigations, including the study of producing and harvesting truck and related crops, including potatoes, and, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets, studies of the behavior of vegetables while in the process of marketing and in commercial storage," and so forth.

It is estimated that the results of the investigations carried on in Wisconsin alone under this provision during the past year on Irish potatoes, where the seed used was the same as that used in the test, showed that the increase due to use of this character of seed would have been more than the total yield of the State, notwithstanding the supposedly high character of the seed now used in the State.

It is under that provision that the department is assisting in the production of sweet corn throughout the United States, and aiding in canning sweet corn and other products, constituting a most important work; and yet the Senate conferees have accepted a decrease in that appropriation of $15,000.

The next amendment is amendment numbered 114, touching the forests of the country. I desire in particular to call the attention of the western Senators to this item, the appropriation for which is decreased from the amount carried in the law for the current year by $28,000. The provision reads:

> For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forest and forest lands.

It would seem that there is hardly anything more important for the Congress to do, if it can be done, than to assist in conserving the forests of this country. I became a Member of the other House from a district which had more timber perhaps than any other district in the whole Southland, consisting of magnificent pine forests and other varieties of wood. People came in, bought the lands at a small price, and to-day they are worth from $100 to $150 an acre.

I have seen those forests cut, as it were, overnight and they are rapidly disappearing. The price of lumber, of course, is going up and timber is gradually getting away from us. It seems to me that the National Government should do something to assist in conserving the forests of the country because it is only a question of time when they will all be gone, and when that time arrives then the material entering into the construction of homes will be much higher, increasing the burden on the home builders of the country.

This item carried with it a provision for the investigation of the paper industry to ascertain if we can not develop some plan under which more paper and cheaper paper may be furnished, so that the people may read and the newspapers of the country may be furnished with more wood pulp; but the Senate has agreed to strike out that item entirely, and the good work of the Senate has now gone astray by the action of the Senate conferees together with the action of the House conferees.

Amendment No. 118 affects 155,000,000 acres of land in the national forest and affects the protection of the forests from fire. Day after day I have seen the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] pleading for the protection from fire of the forests of his State and of the West generally. I have seen him try to provide for aeroplanes to safeguard the forests so that watch might be kept on the fires and aid might be furnished in conserving the forests and the national parks.

I see, however, that the Senate conferees strike down the effort and decrease the appropriation intended to protect the national forests from fire. So that now perhaps the department will not have enough employees living in the national parks and in the national forests to give warning in case of fire; they will not have sufficient force to provide for telephone wires, so that word may be carried rapidly from one place to another that a fire is raging. Failing to provide adequate protection and management, the result is to strike down the conservation spirit and the tendency of the time to protect our forests.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator wants to be correct in his statements, I am sure.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. The $60,000 which the Senate added to the bill authorizing the War Department to cooperate with the foresters in locating and extinguishing fires was not to be used for the purpose the Senator has stated of erecting telephone wires, and so forth. If the Senator will read the language, he will find that he is mistaken as to the appropriation being designed for that purpose. The Senator knows that telephone wires and telegraph poles can not be used in connection with aeroplanes; there would be no use for them; it would be necessary to have wireless, and that is, of course, what was intended. It was designed to have field stations, and then secure aeroplanes from the War Department; but we had to reduce the amount as the Senator has stated from $60,000 to $50,000.

Mr. HARRISON. I was speaking of amendment No. 118. I think the Senator got the number wrong. Here is the provision of which I was speaking:

> For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

There was $400,000 provided by the House. We raised it to $450,000. The Senate receded on that proposition, thus reducing the amount $50,000.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is correct about that. That fund could be used and would be used in establishing new telephone lines. I thought the Senator was speaking of the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] providing for an air patrol.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I was speaking of this amendment.

Now, I come to amendment No. 122, if the Senate will bear with me. That is for investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of poultry, eggs, fish, shrimp, oysters, and other shell fish, and so forth.

The House provided $52,880 for that purpose. The Senate raised it to $62,880. The Senate recedes, thus reducing the item $10,000, the amount that we increased it. I need not discuss the importance of that item. Many thousands of dollars have been saved to the consumers and the people of the country in the shipment of eggs, in instructing them how to pack them and how to transport them from one place to the other, and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been saved in handling and packing poultry, fish, shrimp, and oysters.

Mr. GRONNA. But the Senator must remember that we are appropriating $200,000 in the bill which we have just passed, the cold-storage bill, which can be used and will be used for that purpose; and, as the Senator knows, we are entering upon an entirely new plan, so far as the fish industry and the dairy industry are concerned. If the bill which we passed in the Senate to-day becomes a law, the Senator will find that there will be ample funds to take care not only of the fish industry but of all of these other food products.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has given the best explanation in regard to that item of any item that I have discussed yet. His excuse, as I understand it, for a reduction of that item, or for agreeing to the House provision, was because we were going to pass a law, and we have passed one to-day through the Senate, the cold-storage law, and that it carries with it $200,000, and that there will be enough money then to take care of this particular situation.

Mr. GRONNA. No; the Senator misunderstood me. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. I should have said to the Senator that the House conferees contended that the amount allowed by the House was sufficient. As the Senator knows, they held extensive public hearings, and there are several volumes printed, and in nearly every instance they were able to show that the funds appropriated by the House would be sufficient without raising the salaries of the employees.

I am sorry that we had to recede from all those amendments proposed in the Senate allowing higher rates of salaries to these employees of the Agricultural Department. We had to recede because the bill has been in conference now for two months, and it seemed to be impossible to reach an agreement upon any other basis. So, while we did increase the salaries of all employees receiving less than $1,200—we raised many of them from $900 to $1,100 and $1,200, and we raised many of them from $750 to $1,000, or to $1,100—we did the best we could with reference to that. That is the reason for the decrease in the total to some extent; not altogether, of course, but to some extent.

Mr. HARRISON. I know; but on this item, amendment No. 122, the question of salaries is not involved at all, because that is an appropriation for handling——

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; it is involved. Salaries are involved in all those items. The appropriation is to pay these men to instruct and to take care of these matters. Salaries are involved in every one of them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is almost all salaries. Nearly the whole thing is salaries.

Mr. HARRISON. The salaries that are paid to these different parties are on the statutory roll, and are provided in other parts of this bill; and when the assistant to the Secretary came before the committee, asking us to increase certain salaries and to decrease the number in certain instances, he said it was for the purpose of giving him a better organization, a more efficient force; and, if I recall correctly, taking into consideration the increased salaries with the lopping off of certain employees, the total increase did not amount to $4,000. That is my recollection about it.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is correct about that. We dropped 192 employees altogether, and the appropriation was reduced only sixty-five hundred and some odd dollars, so the Senator is correct about that. Later on, however, the department asked for additional clerks, so that when the bill finally passed the number was increased to some extent, and the amount of the increase was, I think, about $24,000—a very small amount.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but this particular item is a lump sum for investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of poultry, eggs, and so forth, and for the utilization of waste products and the development of new sources of food. Of course, it takes employees to do that work; but the employees are on the statutory roll and provided in other parts of the bill. Here is what strikes me, though, as exceedingly strange, that in this day of high cost for everything, when the laboring man is calling for increased wages in order to meet this abnormal situation—a condition that has never confronted us before—in practically every provision here the aim of which is to make things cheaper, to reduce the high cost of living, there is a decrease, or the Senate conferees finally receded.

Take that item, for instance, merely $62,000 provided to study this great question of investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of poultry, eggs, fish, shrimp, oyster, and other shellfish—something that goes upon the table; something that aids in reducing the high cost of living. The more fish that are caught, the more oysters that are gathered, the more poultry and eggs that enter into transportation and into the markets, the greater the influence on the breakfast table, causing a reduction in the high cost of living.

This item, however, goes further than that. It says:

For the utilization of waste products—

Things that have just been thrown away before. We say to the Agricultural Department, "Take this amount of money and study and see if these waste products can not be utilized, so that we can fight the soaring high cost of living."

But it goes further than that, and it says:

And the development of new sources of food.

If there is a single provision in this bill that ought to affect the high cost of living and to combat the profiteer who has gone wild, it is this provision appropriating money for the development of new sources of food; and yet we find ourselves reducing that amount by $10,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The bill, as reported by the committee, carried $52,880 for the purpose named.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The bill, as it passed the Senate, carried just $10,000 more.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think that the proper investigation can not be made with $52,880?

Mr. HARRISON. We appropriated the full amount, $62,880, last year. We are reducing the appropriation that they had this year.

Mr. NORRIS. How many years have they been investigating that subject? Does the Senator know?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, they have been investigating it, probably, for several years, and I hope they will continue to investigate it. New conditions are constantly arising, and will continue to arise.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know how much money they have spent in that investigation?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think that the cost of living would go down immediately if they had $10,000 more to spend for the purpose of investigating these things?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know; but I know that the study of these waste products and the development of foods that have not been used before will have its influence upon the cost of living.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not suppose the Senator wanted to spend any money on the high cost of living. That is in the hands of Attorney General Palmer. He is reducing the high cost of living.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is very gracious. I can say this for Attorney General Palmer, that he has done his very best to try to reduce the high cost of living.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not saying very much.

Mr. HARRISON. He has given instructions throughout this country to his agents to go before the grand juries and present the facts, and in many cases they have indicted the profiteers. He has used every power of his great office to see that they should be brought to the bar of justice. The grand juries of the country, perhaps, have not done their duty in all instances. Maybe the petit juries of the country have not done their duty in some instances; but the Attorney General has done his duty in trying to prosecute and convict these profiteers in every instance.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator recognizes, does he not, that the Attorney General has said that if certain laws were passed—which were passed—he would reduce the cost of living?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and he has done his very best.

Mr. NORRIS. All right. That is all we can ask of anybody.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. But the cost of living has not been reduced. That will probably be the way with the few clerks that this $10,000 would pay. I doubt very much whether the difference that the Senator is taking the time of the country in talking about, $10,000, if appropriated as he asks, would ever do anything that could be measured in that direction.

Mr. HARRISON. Why, we never know the result of these things until we try. We do not know what good any appropriation here is going to do, but we make it in the hope that it will do some good.

Mr. NORRIS. We appropriate here $52,880 for the purposes that the Senator has named.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Senator condemns everybody because we have not appropriated $62,880.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not condemning everybody. I am not condemning anybody. I am pointing out the situation to the Senate in the hope that the Senate will do at least as much in the making of an appropriation as we did last year for this particular work. The Department of Agriculture have requested it. They say they need it to carry on that particular work. The Senator thought so when we had this matter up before the Senate Agricultural Committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. He thought so in the consideration of the matter before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield again, I recognize that on items of this kind men's judgments may honestly differ. Honest men may disagree as to the number of dollars and cents that ought to be appropriated. Nobody can have his own way in every respect; and when conferees get around a table they would not be justified, in my judgment, in refusing to make some concessions, even though sometimes they thought they were going too far, in order to get an agreement; but it can always be said in cases like this particular item that they disagreed on the side of economy; that as they finally agreed to it, it cost the taxpayers less money.

Mr. HARRISON. And I am saying to the Senate that it looks very strange to me that a reduction takes place here in every provision that might help to reduce the high cost of living.

When I am discussing it and pointing out that particular phase of it the Senator brings in the name of Attorney General Palmer.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. I think that is very appropriate.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us discuss that a little bit.

Mr. NORRIS. The Attorney General has himself made his own proposition in regard to the high cost of living.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think that the Attorney General has done practically everything within his power when he has instructed his district attorneys throughout the United States and his agents to investigate profiteering going on in this country, trying to indict those people, and trying to convict them? They have convicted many of them.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator asks me that question in regard to the Attorney General, I will say that I think the Attorney General has been the most successful Attorney General we ever had in trying his cases in the headlines of the newspapers. We have never had his equal.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not agree, then, that the Attorney General has done everything he can to bring these people to the bar of justice for profiteering?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I would not say that; but the Attorney General, of course, has not made good in any of his promises or any of his pledges. He probably promised a lot of things he could not make good in.

Mr. HARRISON. I never heard of the Attorney General promising anything he has not made good on. He came to Congress. He asked Congress to amend the Lever food-control act by giving him the power to indict and prosecute fellows who charge unreasonable profits on certain necessaries, and so forth, and to provide a penalty. After weeks and months and months of waiting upon the part of the Senate and upon the part of the House and after much insistence upon the part of the Attorney General we finally made that amendment. The Senator from Nebraska voted for it. He was one of the men, if I recall, who helped us to get it out of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, again I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I did not help. The Senator will be able to condemn me, probably, because I did not. I made a speech on the floor of the Senate in which I said, in substance, that I thought the Attorney General had a law already on the statute books which would accomplish all the things he said he was going to accomplish, although I would not put any straw in the way of passing the law if that would help any; that I would be glad to do it. I did not expect any results from it, and no results have come from it, and the cost of living is climbing yet.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I can not expect the Senator to agree with me.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course not.

Mr. HARRISON. If he was against the law which was necessary to be passed to arm the Attorney General so that he might prosecute these fellows under it, he would still stand out that his position was right, that we should never have amended the law, and consequently he can not see any good in the efforts of Attorney General Palmer. But the Senate took a different view. I thought, because the Senator is generally on the side of the plain people, who want to see these profiteers convicted—and I have admired his course, in many instances—I felt sure that the Senator was with us in the passage of that law. But I stand corrected. He is not the friend of the people I thought he was.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the Senator stands corrected. There is a difference between a shadow and a reality. I did not have any faith in the Attorney General's promises, and the Senator did.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I did.

Mr. NORRIS. I said, "I will not stand in the way; give him everything he wants; give him enough rope and then if the high cost of living does not come down we will at least be able to say that we were mistaken." We could not go any further.

Mr. HARRISON. I had a great deal of faith in his promises, and that is why I voted for that legislation, because I think the way the profiteers have bled the people has been outrageous and that they should be put in jail. Their course has been a long saturnalia of inexcusable and indefensible practices, and I was willing to curb them in every possible way. I feel that way now.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator in that.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator is not willing to go with me in passing legislation to get after them.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; we gave him everything he asked for.

Mr. HARRISON. You say "we" did. You can not say that "we" did. You should say "you" did.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not fight the proposals. I said I did not believe it would amount to anything, because he had a law already and had not done anything under it.

Mr. HARRISON. He did not have a law already, because there was no penalty in it.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; there was a penalty in it. There was penalty enough to send every profiteer to jail for his life.

Mr. HARRISON. There was no penalty in the law and no provision in the law for those who made unreasonable and exorbitant charges or profits on necessaries; and that is why we amended the law and clothed him with that authority. He instituted suits all over this country. He gave the word out to his agents and his district attorneys, and they have done their duty. There have been hundreds of cases of convictions. There have been some acquittals, and where they were acquitted possibly some of them should not have been acquitted.

Mr. NORRIS. I doubt very much whether there is anybody in jail on account of the Attorney General's prosecutions for profiteering. There may be some little fellow, some insignificant fellow somewhere, who has been prosecuted and found guilty. I know from the Attorney General's own testimony that when it came to great, big packers, where he admitted himself that the evidence showed they were criminally liable, he not only did not prosecute them but he entered into an agreement, having failed to get an injunction, that would be good in the future.

Mr. HARRISON. That statement shows how prejudiced the Senator is against the Attorney General.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that it does.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no man who has ever occupied the place which the present Attorney General now occupies who can hand down such a magnificent record as he will be able to hand down. It is the record he has made which has made him prominent in this country to-day as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President, and will make him one of the leading men, I might say, at the San Francisco convention.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me to get through——

Mr. NORRIS. I did not know he was to be one of the leading men before the convention.

Mr. HARRISON. There is much the Senator does not know. The Senator awhile ago ascribed to me partisanship in the discussion of this matter. He has injected, not little partisanship, but big politics, the presidential race, exhibiting his spleen—I will not use such a word, but at least showing his opposition to the Attorney General.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Let me finish, and then I will yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to correct the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. In what I said?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I have not injected big politics. I have not talked about candidates for President. I did not know the Attorney General was one.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator did not know he was a candidate for President? He will know it, and should he be nominated the Senator will feel it in November.

Mr. NORRIS. No. If the Senator will look at the primaries where he has been running, he will reach the conclusion, too, that he is not a candidate.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not defending him as a candidate for the Democratic nomination; but he has run well, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Pretty well for him.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; for him. I am glad the Senator at least gives him that much credit.

The Attorney General, on the record he made against profiteers, and on the record he made in dealing with the packers, entered into the primaries of Georgia, a State that probably he had never entered before that primary. He ran pretty well there. He ran ahead of one of the most distinguished Members of this body, a man who represents in part that great State in this body. He ran ahead in the number of votes in the convention of one who had lived in Georgia all his life, and who had a strong hold upon a certain part of the population of that State. This Attorney General whom the Senator derides and condemns and finds fault with, not willing to give him credit for anything he has done, will go into the convention in the State of Georgia with more votes than any other candidate, having won before the people of Georgia in that primary. He evidently made a good impression upon them.

The Senator referred to Palmer's dealing with the packers. The Attorney General did something with the packers which the Senator has been unable to do, even though he may have had a great desire to do it for a very, very long time. We have talked about legislation against the five big packers for 15 or 20 years. Bill after bill has been introduced in the Senate and the House to regulate the big packers. In the Senate we had very exhaustive hearings. We went into it fully, and we determined, at least I found from all I heard, that these packers did have a strangle hold on the beef products of this country, on the swine, the cheese, the butter, the poultry, and ten thousand other things which I might mention. That not only did they control the stockyards but the refrigerator cars and even banks.

We did find that they were unwilling to deal merely in the businesses for which they had been organized, buying and butchering beef and swine, but they had gone into the grocery business, competing with all the wholesale grocery houses of the country; that they had contracts with big hotels to supply them with foodstuffs; that they could fix a price to-day at Chicago for beef at a certain amount, reducing it to the producers of the country, and the price went all over the country. Their influence was so great that they raised it when they wanted greater profits, and increased the price to the consumers when they desired. I was as willing as was the Senator from Nebraska to see appropriate legislation passed to regulate and control the five big packers. But while we in the Senate and the House had been talking for years to regulate the packers and restrain their avaricious hands and stop their blood sucking from the people, the Attorney General, the first one in the history of the country, went quietly but assuredly to work and got an agreement which they signed, he not obligating himself to do anything upon his part, and made them agree to do certain things; and those things in the main were the remedies we had tried to apply by legislation for 20 years. What he accomplished in his compromise, if you want to call it that, in bringing the five big packers to taw is a thing that ought to go down the ages and reflect to his credit as a great Attorney General. The decree he procured from five big packers may not be all that is desired, but it went further than any court or legislative body had been able to go before.

Yet, with that wonderful accomplishment, the Senator from Nebraska derides his efforts and condemns the result of them.

I do not wonder that he finds fault with the Attorney General. He is just prejudiced against him; that is all. But I was certainly in hopes the Senator would help us here to appropriate the insignificant $10,000 which the department requested to help fight the high cost of living; but he refused.

Now, let us go to amendment No. 123. Amendment 123 is an appropriation for the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act. If there was ever a time when you need an adequate appropriation for this particular work, it is now. Medicine and drugs of all kinds are higher than ever before. They have reached a limit where the poor people of the country, when they get sick, are unable to get enough money to buy them. The man who would defraud is now running amuck in this country. If there was ever a time when a person who had medicine to sell, and desirous of defrauding some one by adulterating it, it would be now. So we need the appropriations to enforce the pure food and drugs act now, and notwithstanding the condition with which we are confronted, this bill, for this particular work, carries an appropriation of $30,000 less than was carried last year.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator will remember that there will be $40,000 added to this from the Treasury Department, because heretofore and to-day the inspection of tea is made under the Treasury Department. This bill provides that that work shall be done under the Agricultural Department. Add the $40,000, and instead of being a decrease of $30,000 it will really be an increase of $10,000.

Mr. HARRISON. The Agricultural Department said nothing about that transfer, in the effort here to reduce the amount, and they stood fast on an estimate for the full amount of $629,361, and the House gave them only $579,361. They had requested the transfer of this particular work under the tea proposition, which is provided for somewhere else, and the appropriation is provided for somewhere else. That is on what page?

Mr. GRONNA. It is amendment 124.

Mr. HARRISON. You appropriate $40,000 for carrying on that work?

Mr. GRONNA. That has been appropriated in another bill.

Mr. HARRISON. How long ago, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. GRONNA. I forget which bill it is in. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] can help me out. It is in the deficiency bill or in the sundry civil bill, I forget which. It is in one of those two bills.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not in the sundry civil bill; it is in the deficiency bill.

Mr. LODGE. One of the deficiency bills.

Mr. GRONNA. I have the information on that, and I can say to the Senator that $40,000 will come from the Treasury Department.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us see what the department says about this item:

> This amendment increases the appropriation for the enforcement of the food and drugs act $50,000 over the House bill and $20,000 over the 1920 act. This sum is required for the effective enforcement of the food and drugs act.
> On account of the high price of all ingredients entering into the manufacture of food and drugs, the temptation to adulterate is greater at the present time than under normal conditions. New forms of adulteration are being devised and used and greater vigilance is necessary than ever before. The increase of $20,000 over the current appropriation will enable the department to meet this condition and continue the inspection service of those products which are in most need of inspection. For instance, it has recently been necessary to trace through the channels of commerce over almost the entire United States shipments of ripe olives—

We have read in the papers how ripe olives have killed people by the hundreds in some of the cities of the country—> since 30 or 40 deaths have resulted from poisoning by botulinus found in ripe olives put up in glass containers.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator certainly ought to be fair enough to admit that the people who have been killed by ripe olives were killed before the bill went into effect. So he can not charge their death to this bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I was not charging those deaths to this bill; but I say there are liable to be more deaths from such causes as that if the Senate and the House do not appropriate a sufficient amount of money to enable the department to investigate these things and to enforce the pure food and drugs act. I do not know whether that was the fault of the Agricultural Department or not. It may have been there would have been more people killed if they had not been as vigilant as they were. But certainly it is no excuse for the Senator from Nebraska, who was one of the conferees, to defend this by saying we should blame the Department of Agriculture for the death of these people from the eating of ripe olives.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator must not take that view of it. I never made any such charge. No such idea ever occurred to me.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has made so many charges that I did not know. However, we can get together all right on ripe olives.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was mentioning the fact that a great many people died from eating olives that were not properly inspected. I am not charging that anybody was derelict in his duty. It may be that they were, but I do not know anything about it. I merely called attention to the fact that while the Senator was commenting on the death of these people, this reduction has not yet taken effect, so he can not, at least, charge that to the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator did not follow me. I was only stating what the provision of the bill was in that respect and what the work of the department was in that connection. I only offered it as an illustration of some of their work. The Senator was not following me or he would not have found fault with my words.

Amendment No. 149 is for investigations, identification, and systematic classification of miscellaneous insects, including the study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals, household insects, and the importation and exchange of useful insects. The House appropriated $52,130 for this, and the Senate increased it $10,000. The Senate has receded. Thus the $10,000 provided by the Senate under agreement of the conferees is reduced.

What does that do? This would affect the study, identification, and classification of insects upon which the agents are conducting field investigation. It would completely disorganize the office force in this work. Many men now in this work will be thrown out and the work that they have done thus far will be retarded to that extent.

The next amendment to which I wish to call attention of the Senate is No. 147. This is for investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, and so forth, and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant.

On that the House gave $125,000 and the Senate provided for $170,000. The Senate has receded, and thus the amount has been reduced approximately $45,000.

Here is what that work does: It provides for the investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, and includes insects infecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar, and so forth. The experts have been studying the cotton boll weevil more than 20 years and have finally hit upon a method of poisoning with arsenic, which has been successfully carried on in a large portion of Louisiana and Mississippi. I believe they have established two stations, one at Tollula, La., and one in the Delta of the Mississippi. The department has been very anxious to apply this test to some region where the climatic conditions were different from those in Louisiana and those in Mississippi, and if this test is successful in the dry regions up in Georgia or South Carolina or Alabama or in the hills of Mississippi or in Texas, as it has been successful in Louisiana and in the State of Mississippi where it has been in operation, we will save thousands of dollars in fighting the boll weevil through this arsenic test. But with the reduction of $45,000 as carried in the bill for that particular work, you have greatly retarded the progress of the Department of Agriculture in this particular in reference to the bill. It would seem to me that the amount as passed by the Senate should have been retained.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was wondering how long it might take the Senator to conclude. I understand there is a desire to adjourn a little early to-day on account of the death of former Vice President Morton.

Mr. HARRISON. I can close any time the Senate is ready. I wanted to discuss a few more amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably it might take the Senator some little time, and probably the matter might better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. I am in no hurry.

Tuesday, May 18, 1920.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday, when the conference report was being considered by the Senate, it was laid aside at the adjournment, and I have not yet concluded my remarks analyzing certain decreases of appropriations in the report. I shall not take up the time of the Senate very much longer. There are a few amendments, however, which I desire to discuss and analyze which carry decreases from the Senate bill.

The next amendment to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate is amendment No. 148, which relates to the following provision in the appropriation bill:

> For investigations of insects affecting truck crops, including insects affecting the potato, sugar beet, cabbage, onion, tomato, beans, peas, and so forth, and insects affecting stored products.

The House appropriated $110,000 for this work and the Senate increased that amount to $131,760.

In the conference the Senate conferees receded, and there is a decrease, therefore, of $41,760.

It seems to me that if that amount is stricken from the appropriation it will very greatly hamper the department in carrying on the work heretofore performed in making these investigations of insects affecting truck crops. The man who raises truck is confronted with many difficulties; he combats the seasons and fights innumerable obstacles.

Not only that, but these insects of various kinds ofttimes eat upon and destroy his crops. It would seem to me that on account of incalculable benefits resulting from this appropriation we ought to continue it and refuse to agree to the reduction.

Aside from that, under this item is carried the work of eliminating the sweet-potato weevil, an insect that has greatly affected the sweet-potato crop in many States. Here is what the department says about that work:

> Of the total appropriation for truck-crop and stored-product insect investigation, $65,000 has been allotted for work during the current year for the investigation and control of the sweet-potato weevil, the most serious menace to the production of this important food crop throughout the South. The reduction made by the House bill in the appropriation under this item, if allowed to stand, will mean that the sum available for 1921 for the sweet-potato weevil eradication will be little more than half the total that has been expended during the past three years. If this sum can not be replaced, great havoc must result to the project.
> The value of the sweep-potato crop for 1919 is estimated at $138,000,000.

And with this strong presentation upon the part of the Agricultural Department we are unwilling to appropriate $20,000 to eliminate the sweet-potato weevil, when it is calculated to destroy a crop that is valued at $138,000,000. In my own State we have eradicated the sweet-potato weevil through State cooperation with the Federal Government. They have done the same thing in some of the other Southern States. It has almost been eradicated in Louisiana, but there are now two other States in which it has not been completely eradicated.

If we withhold this appropriation and stop the work of combating the sweet-potato weevil, it will take a new start, and all the work we have done heretofore under this appropriation will have been in vain, and we must start all over.

I proceed to a discussion of amendment No. 195, which is the provision that carries the appropriation for crop estimates. That is cut $53,000. I need not discuss the great importance of crop estimates, a service that has brought untold benefit to the farmers of the country, informing them how much cotton it is estimated will be grown during each month and each week of the year, estimating what the corn crop and the wheat crop will be, so that they can either withhold their crops, if desired, or plant more if they should want to. I can not believe the Senate can approve of this reduction.

The next amendment is one affecting the Bureau of Markets, amendment No. 243. I am sure the Senate will agree with me that it was highly necessary to create the Bureau of Markets. It carries the whole subject of marketing, transportation, and sale of products. No branch of the Government service has a greater opportunity of usefulness. Yet we find that this amendment cuts the present appropriation $41,540.

I pass from that to amendment No. 271. I desire to say that in these decreases which were made by the conference committee they have not cut in items affecting one section more than another. They have cut appropriations which affect the West, they have cut appropriations which affect the New England section, and the North and the South, but there is no cut or decrease which affects the section from which I come more than the appropriation to eradicate and fight the pink bollworm.

The pink bollworm is more dreaded than the boll weevil, that destructive insect that costs the farmers of the South millions on millions of dollars, affecting the cotton crop in some States as much as 50 per cent and in others causing a complete loss.

The pink bollworm came into the United States some three years ago, I believe, from Mexico. They were able to practically eradicate it in Texas, as they thought, but it has been recently discovered in Louisiana. Texas and Louisiana and all the States affected by the pink bollworm, or which might be affected, are making appropriations to cooperate with the department in preventing a spread of the insect. Experts came to the committee and said that because of the discovery of the pink bollworm in Louisiana, it having been scattered in cotton seed through many parishes of that State, it would be necessary for the Congress to appropriate $588,560, with which it might be controlled. Delegations came to Washington only a few weeks ago from Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Georgia, and from all over the South, urging upon the Horticultural Board the inauguration and promulgation of regulations, some of them advocating a complete quarantine against infected States, so fearful were they that the pink bollworm might find its way into the other sections of the country. With the great loss threatened to the cotton industry of the South, and the need of absolute and immediate aid, the committee has reduced this appropriation $100,000.

The other amendment, and the last amendment to which I shall call the Senate's attention, is the reduction of $100,000 to fight the European corn borer, which is found in the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, and that section of the country. I recall the Senator from Connecticut came before the committee, and members of the horticultural boards of those States, I think, came before the committee, or sent their views to the committee, and urged us to make an adequate appropriation to fight the European corn borer. The agricultural authorities urged it. Yet we find that the item is reduced $100,000 in this bill.

Mr. President, I have pointed out these various decreases in the agricultural appropriation bill, and I have given my reasons why I thought the Senate should not reduce them. I know the conferees upon the part of the Senate have had a very hard time in fighting the conferees upon the part of the House.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I am sure he will agree with me that the Senate conferees did their duty with respect to this item. The House did not allow anything, and this is $400,000 more than the House allowed.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is talking about the European corn borer?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senate conferees no doubt did their best to maintain these items in the bill, but, as I said yesterday, I attribute the decreases in the bill to the word that has gone forth, and it can not be denied, that the Republican leadership in the Senate and in the House have said that we must economize in this bill, and that this bill is cut for no other purpose than that the impression can go to the country that a Republican Congress is saving money for the people.

It is false economy to try to save money when the departmental experts in the Department of Agriculture say that they need it to fight the insects and the pests that are destroying the food products and things that we should raise in order that we might reduce the high cost of living.

It does seem to me that we ought to be fair with the farming interests of the country, and if there be one bill where increased appropriations should be reflected over the appropriations that were carried in the corresponding bill last year, it is the bill appropriating for the agricultural activities of the United States. It is indefensible for the Congress, the Senate and the House, to go to the people with the record that they have made of increasing the Army bill $250,000,000 over the appropriation for the Army in 1914 and with an increase in appropriation for the Navy of $450,000,000 over 1914, and at the same time with a decreased appropriation of $2,400,000 for the agricultural interests of the country.

The result of the labor and the work of the Republican Party in the Senate and the House, as reflected in these appropriation bills, shows hand prints that you will not be able to get away from and that you will be compelled to explain to the people in the coming election. I am sorry that you have done it. I regret it ever so much that you have seen fit to cut down these appropriations for the farming interests of the country. We ought to encourage people to stay upon the farms. We ought to make every adequate and reasonable appropriation that will make life happy and pleasant for the man who lives in the rural sections of the country, that this great influx to the cities from the country will be stopped.

It is for these reasons that I have expressed myself on the Agricultural appropriation bill, because I am not in sympathy with what the conferees upon the part of the Senate have done. I should like to see them stay there until doomsday and force the Republican steering committee and the men in the other House who are on the conference committee to yield, that these appropriations that are requested and urgently demanded by the Department of Agriculture might be incorporated into the law, instead of reducing the bill by $7,000,000 from the estimates of the Agricultural Department.

I recall that when the new Secretary of Agriculture, a man in whom we have great confidence, a man who has shown his interest in the farmers of the country, came before the Agricultural Committee just before that committee made its final report to the Senate he pleaded with us to make a lump-sum appropriation over and above what was provided specifically in the bill, so that any emergencies might be taken care of and the farmers' interests protected. We denied it—that is, a majority of the committee denied it and would not comply with his request. But you have gone further in this report and reduced the amount practically $1,500,000 below the action of the Senate. This appropriation is a mockery and a sham, a reflection on the Congress, an admission of its impotency to take care of the internal demands of the country, an insult to the great patriotic class of American farmers who played such a glorious part in the winning of the war, and upon whose efforts the very life of the Nation now depends. If you believe this kind of false economy practiced upon this class of our citizens will be rewarded in the coming November election, then you misjudge the temper of the times and a great awakening is awaiting you. Let me appeal to the Senators on that side in charge of this report to withdraw it, let it go back to conference, and there insist upon the reincorporation of those appropriations that the judgment of the Senate has heretofore made possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked for by the House, and that conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. GORE conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] what action was taken with respect to the plan of the House to impose an additional amount upon lessees of forest-reserve lands?

Mr. GRONNA. The bill as it passed the House carried a provision appropriating $25,000 to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in making an investigation of the rates charged for grazing lands. The Senate committee struck out that provision, and that action was approved by the Senate. The conferees were unable to agree. So it was brought back to the Senate, and, of course, it goes back to conference now under instructions that the Senate conferees shall further insist upon this and two other amendments.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to learn from the chairman of the committee the position that will be taken by the conferees on the part of the Senate. I wish to state to the Senate that the charges now imposed upon lessees of the lands in forest reserves for cattle and sheep are very, very high. Indeed, in my opinion they are too high in many instances to make it at all profitable for men to engage in the live-stock business. It would be a positive disaster if those rates and charges should be increased. I sincerely hope the Senate conferees will insist upon adhering to the position taken by the Senate, because if they should yield to the House in that respect I am sure that their plan, which is not founded in reason, might be carried into effect, and the result would be very serious to the live-stock industry in the Western States.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the distribution, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] if he would like at this point to offer the amendment to the last section in the bill that he had printed the other day? I have sent for the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] with reference to an amendment in which he is interested, and in the meantime I think we might dispose of the amendment which the Senator from Utah desires to offer. The Senator's amendment has been submitted to me, and it is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is advised of the fact that consideration of the shipping bill has been resumed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from New Jersey is out of town, but he understood that it would come up during his absence.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not expect to conclude consideration of the bill to-day, in the absence of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I expect to conclude it to-morrow. The Senator from New Jersey understands the situation, and talked it over with me before he left, and said I should go on with the bill.

Mr. KING. But the Senator will not press it to a final vote to-day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not think there is any chance of a final vote to-day, but I should like to dispose of the amendment, because I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. KING. Very well. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Utah proposes to amend the committee amendment inserting section 41 by adding to it the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That in the event that any share of the capital stock of a corporation, or of a partnership, or of an association, or any interest in or any part of the property of a citizen of the United States in any such ship or in any such corporation, partnership, or association, shall, upon the decease of the holder and legal owner thereof, pass by intestate or involuntary succession to a person not a citizen of the United States, said shares, while the same are held by an alien, shall not be voted at any stockholders' meeting of such corporation, nor shall any alien by reason of intestate or involuntary succession to any interest in any such partnership or association or in any such ship have any voice or control with respect to the operation and management of the same, excepting only that this proviso shall not apply in case of corporations, partnerships, or associations engaged in foreign trade, unless the shares or interest taken by an alien by intestate or involuntary succession shall reduce the quantity of stock and securities held by citizens of the United States to less than 75 per cent of the total stock and securities of such corporation, partnership, or association.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to direct the attention of the Senator from Washington to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] the other day, which seems to me to be a very unwise one, but if the Senator will give assurance that in conference it will be fully considered I shall not ask for reconsideration.

Under the proposed amendment it was provided that stock could not be hypothecated or any disposition made of it except that there should be an actual transfer upon the books of the company, the result of which would be that a man could not take the stock of which he was the bona fide owner to a bank and use it as collateral; he would have to take it to the corporation—the corporation might be located a considerable distance away—and have it transferred upon the books of the corporation to the name of the bank or individual from whom he was to borrow the money. I suggested then and I suggest now that that would interfere with legitimate business and be an impediment to the transaction of business between the banks and individuals who may need money for purposes of carrying on the very object for which the bill in part has been devised.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that I agree with him as to the importance of that proposition. It was put in on the floor of the Senate without especial consideration, and I think under those circumstances and with that understanding which the Senate had the committee on conference will be fully justified in giving it their careful consideration, with a view to such modification as may be deemed necessary to accomplish the purpose of the section, which was to prevent the transfer of such stock to alien ownership. The provision is not intended to prevent the transfer among American citizens of properties that they own. All that we desire to do is to prevent the transfer of such property and such stock to foreign ownership. I assure the Senator that the committee will look into that matter very carefully.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator from Washington it would be very unwise to inhibit legitimate transactions between citizens of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, Mr. President, I desire to recur to section 25. As to sections 22 and 23, the Senator from Minnesota had to leave the Chamber, and I told him that I would not call those sections up while he was absent. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is now here, and I desire to call up section 25. I think the amendment covering that section has been read. I desire to offer an amendment or two to the section, in order to perfect it and really to carry out its intention. For that purpose I now send an amendment to the desk, which I desire may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 26, line 16, after the word "vessel," it is proposed to insert the following:

documented under the laws of the United States and.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington the object of that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state the object of the amendment to the amendment. The text of the section now reads:

That during the period of 10 years from the enactment of this act any person a citizen of the United States who may sell a vessel built prior to January 1, 1914—

That might include a foreign-built vessel or something of that sort. The purpose of the amendment is to obviate that objection. I desire to confine the provision to American vessels. So after the word "vessel" I have proposed to insert the words "documented under the laws of the United States and." Is that explanation satisfactory to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, on the same page, in line 18, after the word "sale," I propose to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 26, line 18, after the word "sale," it is proposed to insert "under Title I, Title II, and Title III of the revenue act of 1918."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not catch the purport of that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 26, in line 17, we used the words "income taxes," but in consulting with the Treasury Department we were informed that those words were hardly broad enough to cover what is really desired—that is, taxes under the income law; that we should specify the title of the act. That is the purpose of the amendment, to show clearly what we mean by the words "income taxes."

Mr. SIMMONS. This is the section of the bill which relieves from the payment of income taxes the owner of a vessel who sells it and reinvests the money in the construction of a new vessel?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the section with which we are now dealing. I desire to say just a word or two to call attention to what this amendment proposes to do. There are really three propositions embraced in this provision. The first proposition permits the owner of a vessel which is documented under the laws of the United States and operated in the foreign trade to be exempted from the payment of excess-profits taxes which would be assessed against him each year for 10 years upon the express condition that the money be expended in the construction of new ships of a type, character, size, and so forth, to be approved by the Shipping Board. That exemption applies for a period of 10 taxable years. The sole purpose and justification for that is the desire of the committee to secure, if possible, through private construction new and up-to-date ships.

This situation confronts us: We have quite a large tonnage of ships. That tonnage was built under the impetus and necessity of war. The question then was not as to the character of the ships or the special type of the ships or the adaptability of the ships to engage in certain special kinds of trade or in competition with certain classes of other ships, but the problem was to get ships to meet the needs and satisfy the demands of war. As a result, while we have a great many ships, we have not ships of a certain type; we have not ships really of the best type, the most modern, up-to-date ships; those that are highly essential if we are going to maintain the place in the carrying trade of the world which we ought to have.

The purpose of this amendment is to encourage and induce private parties to invest money in the building and construction of such ships. It does not exempt them in one sense from the payment of excess-profits taxes, for if they do not build new ships then the money is not exempted from taxation, unless in the discretion of the board it is applied upon mortgages upon ships purchased from the board. We hope that under this provision there will be at least some up-to-date ships constructed by private parties to engage in service on particular routes and in special trade. If they do not build ships, then they must pay the excess-profits tax just the same.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator concluded all that he desires to say upon that subject?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; with reference to that particular phase of it.

Mr. KING. Did the committee consider the wisdom of establishing a policy of exemption from taxation in order to stimulate the development of some particular enterprise, and did the committee further consider the question of the effect that such a precedent would have in the future, whether or not it would encourage demands to be made upon the Government for like treatment with respect to other industries, perhaps not so important as the shipping industry; but, at least, very important to certain sections of the country? Personally it strikes me as very unwise to inaugurate any sort of a policy of discrimination in taxation, and this is a form of discrimination. I would prefer, if we have got to give bounties and subsidies for the development of our merchant marine, to make a direct appropriation out of the Treasury, rather than to exempt men from the payment of taxes. I think that the machinery employed in bringing about such exemptions and the instrumentalities that will be required in order to determine whether there should be an exemption, the amount of the exemption, and the amount that should be applied will result in complications, in controversies, in extravagance, in inefficiency, and in waste; and we will secure less beneficial results in dollars and cents and in ships built from the policy suggested by this bill than if there should be a direct appropriation. So, with my present information, I shall feel disposed to vote against this amendment and consider it so important that we ought to have a full Senate here to vote upon the item.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the committee did consider the questions raised by the Senator. Those are the first questions really that present themselves in the consideration of a proposition of this kind. After giving them full consideration, in view of the importance of the object to be attained and the necessity for our doing something to encourage the building up of the merchant marine, we concluded that this was a very wise and proper way to do it.

I do not believe that it will establish a precedent. There is not any other industry that is in the situation of the shipping industry. The merchant marine of the country is not—at least, I do not consider it—solely a private proposition. The Nation as a nation is interested in it; it is one of the essential arms of our national defense; it is just as much a national necessity in time of war as is a Navy or any other instrumentality of carrying on war. In that view we did not consider that it could be deemed a precedent or that there is any other industry that could be placed or would be placed upon a parity with that of shipping. We think that we can enact such a provision with reference to the merchant marine without making it a precedent in any particular.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Utah and other Senators one very important consideration. We have a very costly asset in the ships now owned by the Government. The bill proposes in its first section a national policy by which we are to put this great merchant fleet, which cost us well on toward three and one-half billion dollars, into private ownership. If we are to put it into private ownership, we must persuade citizens of the United States to buy the ships. We can not readily find $3,500,000,000 worth of capital ready to be invested in a new business; we have got to give some encouragement to that capital.

The merchant marine in a way is a war asset. We did not intend to spend so much money in building ships; the necessity confronted us as a result of the war. Now, as business men we must try to handle it as a prudent man would handle his own private property. It is a great asset. Our people must be taught to think along lines of shipping; they must have their minds turned to the sea; we must provide an inducement to make them put their capital into ships.

There are two considerations I should like Senators to bear in mind in connection with this matter. First, if I am asked as a citizen of this country to spend my money for ships, I am compelled to reply, "I have money and I should like as a patriotic man to buy some ships; but I do not understand the business. What inducements have you to give me?" "Well, we will sell you the ships very cheaply." "Very well, that is some inducement, but suppose I should make a success of the business, are you going to tax me as you tax everybody else? Are you going to tax me as you tax excess profits from a business in which I have been engaged, which I understand, and about which I know something? What offset are you going to make to the prospective losses I may have in that business? I may lose every dollar I put in it. It is new. It is unknown. I am going on an uncharted sea, literally and figuratively, in going into this business." Then you say: "All right, sir. In order to induce you to do that, I will exempt you from all excess-profits taxes on the amounts that you may earn out of that business, provided that the amount which you would pay in the way of taxes on excess profits, if you earned them, shall be used in building new ships. You put that into a new ship."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question.

Suppose this situation should be developed: Two or three years after the passage of this bill, and after a number of individuals, relying upon the assurances that they will be exempted from excess-profits taxes, engage in the construction of ships, we repeal the excess-profits tax. Does not the Senator think that they would come on to the Government and say that there was a sort of an implied understanding that they were to receive a direct cash appropriation to the extent of a mitigation of their tax of $100,000 or $50,000, and therefore they would ask an appropriation from the Treasury to compensate them for what they had lost?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator's question, I think, carries its own answer. There would be no claim whatsoever—no fair claim—for compensation. In the case stated by him, the purchaser of the ship would be under obligation to put that money into additional ships—of course he would—and he ought to do it, because he buys the ships originally with that understanding; but he is not going to lose money. If he makes excess profits on which ordinarily he would have to pay taxes, that carries with it the idea that he is a money maker and not a money loser. There would be no money to put into ships unless he had made some excess profits.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. This only relieves him of a present burden. If the Government later on repeals that tax, he is simply relieved of it in another way.

Mr. RANSDELL. He is relieved of it in another way. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. He is just relieved of it in two ways.

I want to repeat very briefly, and then I will yield the floor, that we are merely trying by this amendment to offer an inducement to American capital to build these ships and go into the business and do something which is so near to the heart of the Senator from Utah. He does not like Government ownership and operation of anything, and I sympathize very much with him in that respect. The object of this amendment is to try to get the private citizens of this country to relieve the Government of this great three and a half billion dollar burden that is now weighing on us.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. I gather from the Senator's statement that he is proceeding upon the assumption that the gentlemen who will buy these ships from the Government are those who are inexperienced in shipping matters, and for that reason it is necessary that the Government offer them some extraordinary inducement in order to induce them to engage in this business. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact, if I remember correctly, that during the time the Panama Canal tolls act was before the Senate one of the most distinguished Members that was ever in this body made a statement to the effect that 90 per cent of all the coastwise shipping on the Atlantic was under the control of two steamship organizations; and I ask the Senator if he thinks, as a matter of fact, that any man would go into this business without having had experience in it?

Mr. RANSDELL. In reply to the Senator, I will say that all of us know from the reports that only 9 per cent of the overseas shipping of this country was carried under the American flag when the war broke out, and we can not possibly find enough experienced people to go into the business. We must induce people who perhaps have had a very slight experience as operating agents for the Shipping Board, since the Shipping Board began to charter these vessels to private companies and others at the different ports of this country, to buy the ships, if we are to have them bought. There are not enough experienced companies in the business to buy them; and therefore I say again that we must offer an inducement to people to go into a business that they do not thoroughly understand.

Mr. NUGENT. Does not the Senator believe that the companies that are now engaged in that business will in all human probability take in new capital, and, as a matter of fact, purchase these ships; or, in other words, does not the Senator think, as a matter of fact, that practically all of the ships that will be disposed of by the Shipping Board under this bill will eventually pass into the hands of the companies that are now engaged in the shipping business?

Mr. RANSDELL. I sincerely hope not. I imagine that these shipping companies will buy, and I sincerely hope they will buy, quite a large percentage of the ships that we have to sell; but I repeat that there are nothing like enough of them. Does the Senator conceive what three and a half billion dollars' worth of property is? It is an immense amount of property. We must get a great many people in the business of ship operating to handle that many ships. Doubtless the old line companies will buy a number of them. I imagine that they will increase their capital, and I hope they will increase their capital; but we want to have a number of new ship lines from every port of this country that amounts to anything, and we must persuade the enterprising, patriotic people of all the ports in America to go into the business of operating ships if we are to do what the bill proposes—have the whole fleet owned and operated and controlled by American citizens, under the American flag.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NUGENT. Then the Senator believes that in order to induce the gentlemen to whom he refers to purchase these ships it is necessary to relieve them of the provisions of the law with respect to excess and war profits that apply to all other of our citizens and to give them thereby an opportunity as a matter of fact to capitalize their profits, on which they pay absolutely no tax of the character referred to here. Now, I ask the Senator from Louisiana, as well as the chairman of the committee, why should that proposition be applied to shipowners only and not applied to the people of our country who are engaged in other lines of business? Suppose, for the sake of illustration, that a man goes out and purchases a farm, or sells a farm, and with the proceeds derived from the sale of that farm he purchases another farm. He is not exempt from the operation of the provisions of the statute with respect to excess profits or war profits, should the profits be declared to fall within either of those classes, and neither is any other class of our citizens.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the Senator will admit that the exception proves the rule in all cases. I think the Senator will admit that when the war broke out we had no merchant marine worthy the name. We had a coastwise commerce and coastwise ships, but no overseas ships. Now, this being such a great asset, and it being the desire of all patriotic Americans to put this immense asset under the American flag, I again say that we have got to encourage the people to go into this business. It is an exceptional case.

I agree with the Senator that ordinarily we ought not to exempt anyone from excess-profits taxes, but we must do it here; and let me repeat that every dollar of exemption made in this way is to be used how? In building new ships in American shipyards, giving employment to American workmen, giving employment to innumerable people all over this land; for it takes an immense amount of manufactured materials of various kinds to build a ship. Every dollar of it is to be put back into a new ship, and when a new ship comes on it will pay its excess-profits taxes just as any other business enterprise would do.

I now yield the floor to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I hope I may be allowed now to proceed for a few moments. I simply wanted to tell what this amendment in its three aspects proposes to do. Then I am perfectly willing to throw it open for a full discussion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I trespass further upon the Senator? His proposition is rather novel to me, and therefore I must trespass again upon him.

Did the committee consider the question of the right of the Government to exempt this class of business from taxation? Did they examine the constitutional aspects of the case? It does seem to me that there is grave doubt as to the constitutionality of a provision which says to A and B, "Your business shall be exempted from taxation; no matter what profits you may have, we will exempt you; but X, Y, and Z must pay taxes. The reason for the exemption lies in the fact that we want to stimulate the business in which you are engaged."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the committee had no question as to the constitutionality of this proposed legislation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to suggest to the Senator, in response to the question of the Senator from Utah, that the courts have held repeatedly that the uniformity required by the Constitution is a geographical uniformity only.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator, in reading the amendment, said something about its making an exemption in the case of mortgages. I did not quite understand that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the amendment contains this provision:

Provided, That such owner shall not be entitled to such deduction unless during such taxable year he invested, or set aside under rules and regulations to be made by the board in a trust fund for investment, in the building in shipyards in the United States of new vessels of a type and kind approved by the board, an amount, to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury and certified by him to the board, equivalent to the war-profits and excess-profits taxes that would have been payable by such owner on account of the net earnings of such vessels but for the deduction allowed under the provisions of this section, or unless such owner, with the approval of the board (to be given only if because of the smallness of the amount involved the board deems it best for the interests of the United States), applies such amount on any mortgage indebtedness due to the United States for the purchase of ships.

That is, if the amount of the excess-profits taxes that would be earned would, in the opinion of the board, be such that it would be unwise to try to invest it in ships, the board may permit its credit upon mortgages for the purchase of ships. Otherwise it goes into the Treasury as excess-profits tax, and no exemption is allowed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to object to that, but that was not in the amendment as I originally understood it, and I think it extends the principle rather far.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there should be objection to that, I should have no objection to its being stricken out; but that idea has been in the amendment from the beginning. Probably the Senator did not notice it. Of course, the main idea of it was the exemption for the construction of new ships, and this was put in because it was thought that probably the earnings might be so small in the case of the owner of a single ship or two ships that the board would deem it wiser to allow the amount to go on a mortgage.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, suppose the owner of one of these vessels that has the excess profits should have purchased that ship from the Shipping Board and there should be a very large mortgage on the ship held by the Shipping Board. These excess-profits taxes might be applied to pay off that mortgage rather than to build new ships. That was the theory of it, I imagine.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I must confess that I do not like that feature of it. My understanding of the matter was that this was to encourage the construction of new ships where a ship was sold and all the money—not that part of it which would represent the excess profits, but the entire purchase money received for that ship—was reinvested in other ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that that is the next paragraph of the section. That is the paragraph which I was just going to start to explain. There are three propositions involved in the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Utah that personally I should have no objection to a direct appropriation, but I believe this is a better way to work it out. I am in favor of that only as a last resort toward building up an American merchant marine. I think this is a better way to do it than that. The second paragraph relates to the matter which the Senator from North Carolina has just mentioned, and, briefly, it covers this situation. According to many of the ship people of the country, there are quite a good many old ships. If those ships were sold under prevailing conditions they would bring in quite a large sum and a large profit; but the greater part of that profit is taken by the excess-profits tax or the income tax, and as a result the owners do not sell the ships. They either operate them or else they tie them up.

It was hoped that under this provision the owners could be induced to sell these ships and invest the proceeds in new, up-to-date ships, and this provision simply meets that situation by permitting the profits arising from such a sale, if they sell the ships, to be exempt from income taxes if all of the proceeds of the sale are invested in new ships. It is simply another incentive to get new ships built.

The next provision in this section is with reference to depreciation. As I understand it, the Treasury Department, under the income-tax laws, now allows only about 3 per cent depreciation. In other countries a larger percentage is allowed. This simply provides a way for a board which shall determine the amount of the depreciation to be allowed on these ships, so as to put our operators of ships upon a parity with their competitors. There is no real exemption there. There is no real subsidy in that proposition. It is simply a proposition to put them upon a parity with their competitors so far as depreciation allowed for ships is concerned.

Mr. President, those are the three paragraphs of the section. The committee has simply looked at the matter in this light: We have felt that we want an American merchant marine. We propose to do everything that we consider necessary to get an American merchant marine of up-to-date, modern ships. We did not have them before the war. Our capitalists would not go into the business. They would not build them, and our trade was carried under a foreign flag. If we do not do something to help them out there is no reason to assume that that condition of things will not occur again, because it is certain that our competitors on the sea are going to do everything in their power to keep us off the sea or drive our ships from the sea. We are willing to go to this length, at any rate. We believe it would do great good.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. NUGENT. I notice that the last paragraph of the section under discussion limits the authority of the officers named to fix the amount of depreciation on vessels completed since November 11, 1918. I inquire of the Senator why that limitation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state the purpose of that provision. Everybody knows that people who owned ships when the war broke out in many cases have been enabled to write off possibly the entire cost of the ship in profits coming from the great freight rates that they have been able to get. We did not believe anything of this kind was necessary in a case like that, and that is the reason why we did it. When the war started, in 1914, rates went up, and a man who owned a ship made enormous profits; sometimes one voyage paid for his ship. There is no reason in the world why he should be permitted any depreciation. But if a man comes in now with a little ship he must face the conditions which confront everybody at this time. So we made this apply to him. We cut it out from the other simply because we felt they have been enabled to write off a great deal of the cost.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether he is willing to permit action on this amendment to go over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] desires to speak, and when he concludes it will go over until to-morrow, and we will have an executive session.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before discussing the merits of this section, I have consulted with the chairman of the committee, and he has no objection to the amendment being adopted which I now suggest. After the word "years," in line 16, page 25, I move to insert the words "while so operated."

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is entirely satisfactory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Now I move to strike out the first paragraph of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to strike out the first paragraph of section 25. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the part of the section my motion covers is the exemption of these vessels engaged in the foreign trade from excess and war profits taxes.

In the first place, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the discrimination which will be imposed by this section upon our coastwise trade, which is, of course, a very important element in our trade. The entire capital cost of vessels engaged in foreign trade can be written off under this section, and then they can engage in our coastwise trade, without any capital investment, in competition with that coastwise trade. With this provision in the law I do not believe we would ever have a first-class vessel built in shipyards in this country for the purpose only of engaging in our coastwise trade. Our people could not afford to take the chances of investing that large amount of capital as against the competition which would follow from such an investment.

But upon the broader question of the merits of this proposition, Mr. President, I submit that this is not the way to encourage the upbuilding of an American merchant marine. It is vicious and unscientific. Many years ago the various States of the Union enacted laws to encourage industry within their borders through the means of exempting a particular industry from taxation. I think every State in the Union has abandoned that system, and it is not found upon a single statute book to-day.

Why is it vicious here? Under this provision, Mr. President, a man who needs no help is rewarded; the man who is making a very profitable return upon his investment is rewarded. It does nothing for the man who has bought a ship, or a fleet of ships, and is engaged in transportation where he is not making any return whatever upon his investment. If there was to be any scientific adjustment of this matter, it would not exempt the profitable shipowner, for he needs no exemption. It would take those taxes and put them into a fund, and that fund has to be used for the benefit of the shipowner who did not have a profitable investment.

But even then, Mr. President, this is not the way to reach the question of the encouragement of a merchant marine. If with the other provisions of the bill we can not build up an American merchant marine engaged in our foreign trade, it seems to me the path that the Congress should follow in building up that merchant marine is very clear, and that is through subsidy if need be; but only such sum as the discrimination between the wages paid upon foreign ships and the wages paid upon our ships, to ascertain in each case what the difference is, and pay only the difference in wages that exists. If the difference be in capital account, to ascertain what the difference is in a given case, and make good that difference, if they do not make good out of earnings.

There is no system about the plan which is here proposed. As I said a moment ago, it rewards the line which is making exorbitant profits, and permits it to keep them, while where there is need of establishing a line of transportation, where it does not and can not make a profit, there is no encouragement or help for such a line in the provisions of this bill.

So much for the first paragraph. The next paragraph, exempting from income taxes the profits upon a vessel built prior to January 1, 1914, if those profits are invested in a new ship, I am thoroughly in accord with. That is merely changing capital account from one form into another form, and I certainly agree that that paragraph should be adopted.

But when we come to the next paragraph, we find that it permits the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the chairman of the board to determine from time to time what shall be allowed for annual depreciation of vessels purchased from the United States, or vessels completed in the United States, since November 11, 1918, in order that the owners of such vessels shall, with respect to the capital cost thereof, be put as nearly as may be on a parity with the owners of ships under the flag of our foreign competitors in the world's carrying trade, and such allowances shall be embraced in the deductions allowed by law in determining the net income subject to income taxes and war-profits and excess-profits taxes.

This treats as depreciation something which the chairman will admit is not depreciation at all. It is not depreciation at which this section is aimed; it is subsidy. It has nothing to do with depreciation. The depreciation in a ship, whatever percentage is allowed, is the difference in value between that ship as at first constructed and as it depreciates in value from year to year. That depreciation will be allowed as a matter of course, but that is not what is meant by this paragraph. After all, the proper depreciation is allowed, and in addition the committee now calls something depreciation which is not depreciation at all.

The chairman referred a moment ago to the fact that prior to November 11, 1918, the ships in our foreign-carrying trade were able to write off their entire capital investment in the profits they had made. That is true. So we have foreign ships to-day coming into competition with the ships covered by this bill, where there is no capital investment at all, because it is written off. Yet here is a direction to allow as depreciation the difference between the capital cost of those foreign ships and the capital cost of our own, which would mean the entire cost of the ships covered by the bill. Of course, there would never be any tax under that proposition.

What becomes of that first paragraph, then, where you say there shall be an exemption of excess profits and war taxes, provided the amount of those war taxes and excess profits are invested in ships for the benefit of building up and encouraging the merchant marine, when you have in that very section itself a provision which exempts them in effect from all of those taxes and they can put the money in their pockets?

There is no requirement whatever for the building of ships or even paying off mortgages that may be owed to the Shipping Board. So it seems very clear to me that the first paragraph and the last paragraph of this section should be stricken out. It is discrimination against our coastwise merchant marine. It is a subsidy in its most vicious form, in a form that has been abandoned by all economists and by all the States of the Union that I know anything about. It gives a reward to those who do not need the reward, who ought not to have the reward, and withholds any encouragement from the shipowner who, if he is to have a subsidy at all, ought to receive it from the Government.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator's contention to be that, under the first paragraph of the section which he has been discussing, the person who receives exemption and utilizes it in the construction of a ship for foreign trade might use that ship in domestic trade?

Mr. LENROOT. He would have a perfect right to do so.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that is improper and ought to be prohibited?

Mr. LENROOT. I say that while on the one hand we are in a way encouraging the building of ships for our foreign trade, we are discouraging the building of any new ships in the United States for our coastwise trade, because there is a discrimination. This provision is limited to ships engaged in our foreign trade. Ships engaged in our coastwise trade do not receive the benefits of this exemption. So at the end of 10 years, through this exemption, the capital cost of a ship may be entirely written off, and, of course, they can then enter into competition. No coastwise ship can compete with a ship where it has had its capital cost written off through exemption, where the coastwise ship has to pay its full excess-profits and war tax. That is what I mean.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to suggest, with reference to the coastwise ships, that they have a monopoly now of their business.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were opened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 19, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 18, 1920.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Robert R. Carman, of Baltimore, Md., to be United States attorney, district of Maryland, vice Samuel K. Dennis, resigned, effective May 31, 1920.

COAST GUARD.

Capt. James H. Brown to be a senior captain in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from May 11, 1920, in place of Senior Capt. John C. Cantwell, retired.

Capt. Harry G. Hamlet to have temporarily the rank of senior captain in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from May 11, 1920, in place of James H. Brown, promoted from the temporary grade of senior captain.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

To be colonel.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 18, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, we approach Thee with gratitude welling up in our hearts for the God-like qualities inherent in the soul of man which in times of crises lifts him out of himself and makes him a hero in the sight of men and in Thine approbation.

It is a glorious thing to die on the field of battle, amid the roar of shot and shell for a great principle; but it is more glorious to live to a principle in the daily acts of life. Help us therefore to think right, to live right, in accordance with the right as it has been revealed to us; after the similitude of the world's Great Redeemer, who lived and died a hero. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a short report of the Commissioner of Labor for Iowa regarding labor conditions in Iowa and in the Middle West. It is short, only occupying one page of typewritten matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this report from the commissioner of labor of the National Government or the State of Iowa?

Mr. TOWNER. No, sir; it is a report from the commissioner of labor for Iowa; he is also Federal Director of the United States Employment Service in Iowa.

Mr. GARD. On the question of farm labor in the Middle West?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, dealing with what phase of it, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. TOWNER. The report was given out and was very extensively circulated in the United States that 150,000 farm laborers were required in Iowa.

Mr. BLANTON. More than lived there?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and this report goes to show that the statement is very much less, in fact about 1,500 instead of 150,000 according to the report given to him officially. It has quite an interesting bearing upon labor conditions in the Central West.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet it indicates, which it must do if it indicates real conditions, that there is to-day within the United States a job for every man who is willing to work.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly, upon the farms of the Middle West, I will say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TRUE CONDITIONS OF FARM LABOR IN IOWA.

Reports are being circulated throughout the country indicating a great shortage of farm labor in Iowa. One of these reports is to the effect that the Iowa farmers are 150,000 men short of requirements; that as a result of this many acres of Iowa farm lands are taken out of tillage and put to pasture. These statements are said to have a serious influence with financial institutions, including banks, insurance and loan companies, in the loan of money to Iowa farmers.

These excessive figures are not true.

There has been a shortage of farm help, as indicated by the reports from county farm agents to the State Federal Employment Service. Every county in the State is thoroughly organized, there being one county farm agent for each county of the State, and Pottawattamie County, because of its size, has two agents, making 100 agents for the State. Each of these is thoroughly familiar with the conditions of his county.

In a questionnaire sent out to these agents under date of March 1 there was indicated an unsupplied shortage or demand for 619 married farm hands and 745 single hands, making a total shortage for the early part of March of 1,464 farm hands. Under date of April 1 a second questionnaire was mailed to the agents, and the early part of April indicated a shortage of 297 married farm hands and 1,152 single hands, making a total of 1,449. This represents the shortage, instead of 150,000, as indicated in press notices.

It is reported that Mr. J. N. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, a resident of Iowa, should have reported the shortage of 150,000 farm workers. Mr. Howard has been using the figures of the State Federal Employment Service, and instead of 150,000 has given the figures as approximately 1,500 in all of the addresses that have come to our notice.

As to the great cut of acreage under tillage, 57 counties report a cut in acreage of approximately 10 per cent; 28 counties report a cut, but of so small proportion that the agents did not give the per cent; while 14 counties report no cut in acreage whatsoever. The reports from these also indicate the wages that are being paid and which are likewise stated in dispatches to be so excessive that it will be impossible for farmers to employ labor at the excessive rate.

The average from all reports received from county agents for the months of March and April was $73.25 for married men and $67.91 for single men. In some counties the rate being, of course, lower than this average, while in other counties because of conditions the rates are somewhat higher.

The lateness of the season has had some little effect in the acreage put under tillage, but Iowa is doing her full share and will continue to do her full share as a food-producing State; and while we can use some additional farm laborers, as indicated by the reports of the county agents, there is no such shortage as shown in these press dispatches, which are doing a great damage to the State of Iowa and to the Nation.

A. L. URICK,
Commissioner for Iowa, Federal Director United States Employment Service.

Attest:

GEO. B. ALBERT, Chief Clerk.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. POMERENE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference on the Agricultural bill (H. R. 12272), had further insisted upon its amendments, and agreed to the further conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. GORE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3210. An act for the consolidation of lands within the Jefferson National Forest; to the Committee on the Public Lands.
S. 3372. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to Jennie Dunphy Meyer for certain lands in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on the Public Lands.
S. 3992. An act authorizing the exchange of certain lands in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on the Public Lands.
S. 4273. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 866); to the Commitee on the Judiciary.
S. 4332. An act to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
S. 1023. An act for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.
S. 2298. An act for the relief of the Flathead Nation of Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.
S. 2800. An act authorizing the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians in the State of Oregon to submit claims to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDING PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9781, with Senate amendments. It does not require consideration in the Committee of the Whole House, and I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9781) to amend section 217 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up this bill under Rule XXIV as being a House bill with Senate amendments——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. STEENERSON. And neither the bill nor amendments are required to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House. It is simply a matter of legislation. The Senate amendments simply increase the penalties prescribed in the law. This is a bill that was passed by unanimous consent here on a report of the Post Office Committee, on the recommendation of the Post Office Department, and that department has recommended it for two or three successive times, but this is the first time that it has gone through both Houses.

Mr. ANTHONY. What does the bill do?

Mr. STEENERSON. It provides for permits to transmit poisons in the mail as prescribed by the Post Office Department from manufacturers and pharmacists to dealers, dentists, physicians, surgeons, and so forth. The necessity for it arises from the decision of the Federal court, which ruled that the former statutes did not authorize the department to limit the transmission of these poisons from manufacturers and dealers to physicians, and so forth, and the rules and regulations to that effect were held in conflict with the statute itself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is this the gentleman is doing, raising the penalty on something from $5,000 to $10,000?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Senate has amended the House bill, which prescribed a penalty of $5,000 and 10 years, the same as existing law, Penal Code, section 217, by raising the maximum to $10,000 or 20 years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. For what?

Mr. STEENERSON. For transmitting poisons in the mail with intent to kill or in anywise hurt, harm, or injure, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, now, does the gentleman from Minnesota believe it does any good to raise the penalty to an exorbitant degree?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Senate, in their report, states that inasmuch as a violation of this statute transmitting poisons through the mail with such intent might result in death, they recommended that the penalty be increased to $10,000 and 20 years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I am asking the gentleman is, if he thinks that increasing the penalty improves the law?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I think it is justifiable to increase the penalty as recommended by the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but you do not answer my question. That is, Do you believe that increasing the penalty for a crime to an exalted point, helps to enforce the law or does any good at all?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do, because this law practically leaves the maximum to the court, and they can put it as low as they desire in their discretion, and in the administration of law there might be cases where the court would be justified in imposing the high penalty proposed by the Senate.

Mr. GARD. Does the penalty fix a minimum or maximum?

Mr. STEENERSON. It simply fixes a maximum.

Mr. GARD. And no minimum punishment?

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. GARD. What is the maximum? Ten years in prison?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment?

Mr. MOON. Is this the Senate amendment to the bill that passed the House?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. It was reported by our committee unanimously and passed unanimously in the House about two months ago.

Mr. MOON. And it comes back with a Senate amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. It comes back with a Senate amendment which increases the maximum penalty.

Mr. MOON. Why does it not go to the committee?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, under the rules I move to concur.

Mr. MOON. I know you can do that, but I think the matter best go to the committee for consideration.

Mr. CANNON. What rule now is the gentleman proceeding under?

Mr. STEENERSON. Under Rule XXIV.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—SALTS AGAINST MAJOR.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the notice which I gave on Saturday, I wish at this time to call up the contested election case of James D. Salts against Samuel C. Major, of the seventh congressional district of Missouri, and I move the adoption of the resolutions contained in said report and now in the hands of the Clerk.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman withhold that until I make a request to send the naval bill to conference?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 13108, the naval appropriation bill, be taken from the Speaker's table, all amendments disagreed to, and the conference asked for by the Senate agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Naval appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. BUTLER, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. PADGETT, and Mr. RIORDAN.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—SALTS AGAINST MAJOR.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion for the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the adoption of the resolutions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONCLUSION.

Your committee, therefore, for the reasons hereinbefore stated, respectfully recommends to the House of Representatives the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That James D. Salts was not elected a Representative in this Congress from the seventh congressional district of the State of Missouri and is not entitled to a seat herein.

"Resolved, That Sam C. Major was duly elected a Representative in this Congress from the seventh congressional district of the State of Missouri and is entitled to retain a seat herein."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I intend to occupy the time and the attention of the Members of this House only a few moments on this matter. I do wish, however, to make a brief statement, because it has been the custom in some quarters to adversely criticize the Congress of the United States in regard to its conduct of contested-election cases. I find that in many parts of the country it is the common belief among the people that these cases are decided on partisan grounds and not upon their merits. This belief, whatever may have been the case in the past, has no longer any basis of fact, and no better proof of this can be found than the record of the Committee on Elections No. 1 for the last three Congresses.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the distinguished gentleman so soon forgotten the case of Weaver against Britt?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I was referring particularly to the Committee on Elections No. 1. I believe the case to which the honorable gentleman has referred was decided upon its merits, upon the law and the facts. But the Committee on Elections No. 1 during the last three Congresses has made a unanimous report in every case submitted to it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman kindly yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman very well suggested that these cases ought to be decided on their merits, and I thoroughly agree with him. I want to call the attention of the gentleman, however, to the fact that when he speaks of the past, that the Committee on Elections No. 3, of which I was privileged to be the chairman for some years, decided not only every case on its merits, but I think the record would show that that committee over which I presided decided more cases—it was then a Democratic committee—in favor of Republicans by far than it decided in favor of the Democrats, because we had considered each case upon its merits, and cared nothing about the political affiliations of either contestee or contestant.

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that that is exactly the way these contested-election cases ought to be decided.

Now, in the last Congress the Committee on Elections No. 1 consisted of six Democrats and three Republicans, and under the leadership of my distinguished friend and colleague, Judge WILSON of Louisiana, we had three cases to decide, and in every case the committee unanimously decided in favor of the Republican candidate for Congress. In this Congress this committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has had two cases of a partisan character—the case of Reeves against Bland and the present case of Salts against Major, both from the State of Missouri—and although the committee in this Congress consists of six Republicans and three Democrats, in both of those cases, after a careful consideration of the facts and the law, the committee has unanimously decided in favor of the Democrat.

In this present case your committee finds, after a thorough investigation of all the facts, that James D. Salts, the Republican contestant, was not elected, but that the sitting Member [SAMUEL C. MAJOR] was elected by a plurality of 56 votes over his Republican contestant. I therefore trust that these resolutions, unanimously reported by your committee, will be unanimously adopted by this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

NITRATES AND NITRATE PLANTS.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department has a report which it is about to file in the matter of nitrates and nitrate plants. I had promised the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that when I filed the report in the basket I would so advise him, for some parliamentary steps which he desired to take at that time. I desire to state that I am now filing the report in the basket.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the report, and being uncertain as to whether this point of order, which has no political phase whatever, may not in some form reach the House for decision under the precedents, much as I regret to do so, feeling that the membership, perhaps, should hear the discussion on it, I am constrained to make the point of no quorum, reserving the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman does that, will he allow the Chair to submit this question to him?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. To the Chair it is a novel suggestion that the gentleman can make a point of order to a report as it goes into the basket.

Mr. GARRETT. I will state to the Chair what is in my mind very frankly. It is not my purpose to appeal from the decision of the Chair—I will put it that way, because I know it will be a well-considered opinion—but I do not know but that the Chair himself might feel constrained under some of the precedents, with which, I think, the Chair is familiar, to submit it to the House without passing directly on the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman means the question as to whether a point of order can be made on the putting of the report in the basket?

Mr. GARRETT. No; as to the disposition of the point of order to the report itself. I think there is no question but that I am in time in making the point of order and am making it at the right time; but whether the Speaker will feel constrained to submit it to the House without passing upon it, I do not know.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not make a point of order at this time on the report submitted through the basket. He can not make the point of order until the matter comes up for consideration.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman has presented the report from the floor of the House under an agreement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; he has not presented the report from the floor of the House, but he has presented it through the basket. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the gentleman presenting the report from the floor of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. It was my understanding that it was to be so presented, and I thought it was the understanding of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. I think it ought to be disposed of before the majority can dispose of the resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not desire to lose any rights that I may wish to preserve. The gentleman himself is seeking to protect his rights, and I am likewise seeking to protect my rights.

Mr. GARRETT. We are both within our rights.

The SPEAKER. The point of order that the gentleman from Illinois suggests is the same point that the Chair wished to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee about.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to have any controversy with the gentleman about it. The relations between the members of this committee have always been pleasant. But I have done just exactly what I told the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] I would do. I told him I would advise him when I dropped the report in the basket, so that he could make the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not dispute the gentleman's word. I simply got the wrong impression. The resolution under which this committee was created, Mr. Speaker, gave it the right to report at any time. The language is the same as that in the certain cases of the general rules of the House. I thought the report was to be made from the floor of the House, the same as in the case of a privileged matter. There is no dispute between the gentleman from Illinois and myself on that question. There can be no question of veracity raised between us.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Tennessee might make the point of order that the report would have to be presented from the floor of the House. I do not think any of these reports have been made from the floor of the House heretofore.

Mr. GARRETT. I think not. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] may submit this report as from the floor of the House, if that is agreeable to him, so that we may dispose of this point of order without further trouble.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not a parliamentarian. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is a very skillful Member of the House and well versed in parliamentary law. I do not know the exact effect that this would have upon the procedure, and therefore I am constrained to object.

Mr. GARRETT. Then I shall have to make the point of order that the report should be presented from the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman on that point.

Mr. GARRETT. The resolution under which this committee was created provided that it should have the right to report at any time. The language is the same as the language——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just asked the parliamentary clerk to look that up. The Chair is not familiar with the language and does not recall what it was. Will the gentleman please read the language?

Mr. GARRETT. It is provided that "the select committee shall report to the House, in one or more reports, as may be deemed advisable, the results of its investigation."

Perhaps I am in error about the matter of its providing that they should have the right to report at any time, unless it is in the former part of the resolution. I was under the impression that the resolution provided that the committee should have the right to report at any time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Tennessee will recall, of course, that as to the former reports from this committee——

Mr. GARRETT. They have been made through the basket.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They were not only made through the basket, but they were not called up as privileged reports, but came up under a rule, and it seems to me that the language of the resolution creating the committee clearly does not give the report a privileged status. I think the gentleman agrees to that since reading the language himself.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, the purpose of the special rules was to have discussion. That was the real reason for the bringing in of those rules.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If it had been called up at any time there could have been discussion. It was of a privileged status.

Mr. GARRETT. I think the report could, but I do not think it was privileged for discussion under the general rules of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Perhaps not.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose we shall have to have a ruling on the question as to whether or not, it being presented through the basket, a point of order lies.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection, as far as I am concerned, to the gentleman proceeding with his argument and the point of order reserved.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; I will reserve it.

Mr. GARRETT. That means two points of order pending at once.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That frequently happens.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, as to the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee that reports from this committee must be made from the floor, I think the Chair has already ruled on that point.

Mr. GARRETT. I withdraw that point, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that it might save the time of the House if this matter went over for a day, unless there is some particular haste. There might be some agreement about it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am willing to reserve my point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. I believe I am within my rights in making the point of order as soon as I have official notice that the report is made. I wish to explain the situation. If the point of order I make is good, this report ought not to appear as the report of the committee and ought not to be printed as such. If the point of order should be sustained, I think it is well understood between the chairman of the select committee and myself that it will be modified to meet the situation. I do not wish it printed as the report of this committee if in fact it is subject to the point of order. That is my whole purpose in making the point of order at this time. I am perfectly willing to argue it with the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois pending. Of course, I will have to take the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MONDELL. The question raised, Mr. Speaker, is rather important as to whether or not a point of order can be made against a report of this kind when dropped in the basket. If the Chair prefers to have the matter go over for a brief time, it seems to me that is the thing to do.

The SPEAKER. This is the first time the question has been raised as far as the Chair knows. This is the first time that the point has ever been made.

Mr. GARRETT. I have some decisions. However. I am perfectly willing that it shall go over with the understanding that it shall not be printed until the point is disposed of.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if I may suggest, for the expedition of this matter, why can not the matter be taken up later to-day when the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois might be discussed. There are some authorities on that proposition, and I have no doubt the gentleman from Illinois is conversant with them. I have one or two myself.

Mr. GARRETT. I have a brief on the subject.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The necessity for haste in this matter is that we are going to adjourn shortly. This select committee has several reports yet to make and it all takes time, and we want to hurry it along as fast as we can.

The SPEAKER. If the gentlemen have investigated this question, the Chair would be glad to hear them. The Chair understood that the point as to whether a point of order could be made on a report dropped in the basket had never arisen, but the Chair would be glad to hear gentlemen on that point.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I thought the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order that there was no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT. I withdrew that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know that I would insist on the point of order, but I would like to reserve it, and perhaps I will withdraw it.

Mr. GARRETT. I am perfectly willing that the discussion on the point of order made by myself shall proceed with the point of order by the gentleman from Illinois reserved, if it be so desired by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to make the point that there is no quorum present?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not. Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that in a certain contingency it might be desirable for the Members generally to hear the arguments. I think I made it clear to the Speaker what that contingency is. I presume the Speaker will rule on the question one way or the other.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the report of the Select Committee to Investigate Expenditures in the War Department is not in order. First, because parts of its findings exceed the authority of the committee under the terms of the resolution creating it; and, second, that it infringes upon the jurisdiction of another committee of the House of Representatives, and is therefore not in order under the rules of the House.

Historically, this may stated: During the progress of the war with Germany there were developed and constructed two practically completed plants for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, one being what may be properly characterized as the pressure process, which was a relatively small experimental plant. The other was a plant in which there was to be utilized what is known as the cyanamide process. That plant was built for a capacity of 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per year. It was completed and went into operation in some of its units within a few days after the signing of the armistice. The War Department, through the Secretary of War, has recommended to Congress—whether in an official recommendation or by inference I am unable to state—certain legislation touching the disposition for the future of plant No. 2. Bills, in accordance with the recommendations of the War Department, were drafted and introduced, one in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, and one in the House by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, it being introduced and so referred long after this Select Committee on Expenditures was created, and while it was functioning.

That bill provided in brief for the creation of a Government corporation, all the stock to be owned by the Government, and I believe the estimate is about $3,000,000, to add to this plant which is now an ammonium nitrate plant, certain mechanisms that will be required to turn a part of its units into the production of ammonium sulphate which is a fit form for fertilizer, and sell that product into commerce. The remainder of the fund suggested in the bill is to be operating capital.

That is the substance of what is contained in the bill now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs. Bearing that in mind, I direct the attention of the Chair to finding No. 30 of the report of the select committee now before us. Finding No. 30 of the majority report says:

> It would be unwise and contrary to the Government's best interests for the War Department or any agency of the Government acting under or through such department to build and operate a plant in conjunction with Nitrate Plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of ammonium sulphate and other nitrogenous compounds for commercial purposes.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, that is a direct, specific recommendation leveled at the very heart of a bill now pending, and which has been for some time pending, before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, and upon which that committee has, I am informed, held hearings. Therefore, although it does not mention the bill by name, since it involves the legislative proposition, and the only legislative proposition that is pending anywhere before any committee of the House, it infringes upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. I am familiar with the line of holdings, correct in themselves, that there is double jurisdiction. That frequently arises. There might have been some question as to this particular bill, as to whether it properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Committee on Agriculture of the House. If the Committee on Agriculture or any other committee of the House had obtained a public bill without objection and no effective effort had been made to take that jurisdiction away from it, covering the same subject matter, either of those committees might have come in and reported upon it, and the matter would not have been subject to the objection which I am now making, but the investigating committee never had the legislative subject referred to it. I submit that under the resolution appointing this select committee its jurisdiction may be tersely stated as follows. It has authority—

First. To investigate contracts and expenditures by the War Department.

Second. To exercise the power and authority granted the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, to which I shall hereafter refer.

Third. To send for persons and papers.

Fourth. To administer oaths. It probably has that authority without express statements in the resolution.

Fifth. To take testimony.

Sixth. To sit during sessions of the House.

Seventh. To appoint subcommittees.

Eighth. To report in one or more reports with recommendations.

Those recommendations must, I take it, be within the scope of the committee's powers and jurisdiction.

Under the second item which I have mentioned the committee may exercise the power and authority of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. We must go to the general rules of the House to see what that authority is. I submit that the jurisdiction is limited under the general rules of the House so that the committee has authority merely to inquire into and report upon the justness, the correctness, and economy of expenditures and into the proper application of public moneys, and into the economy and accountability of public officials. I think by no possible stretch of the general rules of the House defining the jurisdiction of the standing Committee on Expenditures in the War Department can its powers go beyond those I have just enumerated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not read it all, has he?

Mr. GARRETT. I think I have read a correct analysis of it. There are conceivably legislative propositions with which this committee might deal, and with which it would have the authority to deal, and that ought to be referred to it under the rules of the House. I do not deny all legislative authority to this committee under proper cases, under a bill that may properly be referred, coming within the scope of the rule itself; but this bill has never been referred to the committee. It was referred, as I stated once or twice before, long after this select committee was created, and properly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Therefore, so far as the subject matter of this bill is concerned, it is an infringement upon the jurisdiction of that committee to attempt to make a recommendation, to be followed by a resolution, in all probability, that would endeavor to commit this House upon that legislative act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman contend that any jurisdiction which this special committee may have acquired at the time it was created could be affected or taken away from the committee by the introduction of a bill subsequent to the creation of the committee and a reference of that bill to some other committee?

Mr. GARRETT. I would not make that contention.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think that is just what the gentleman said.

Mr. GARRETT. I would not make that contention. I would say this, that if this committee chose to undertake to deal with that proposition it is its duty to proceed in the regular way to obtain jurisdiction of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; but here is the point, if the gentleman will pardon me. This committee, when it was created, was given certain jurisdiction. It either had or had not jurisdiction over the matters to which the gentleman had referred. How could the introduction of a bill subsequent to that have any effect upon the jurisdiction of this committee?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, the gentleman has constantly referred to the fact that a bill was pending before the Committee on Military Affairs which deprived this committee of certain jurisdiction when that bill was introduced long after this committee was created. If this committee had jurisdiction, the introduction of a bill had nothing to do with it, and if this committee had no jurisdiction the introduction of the bill had no effect upon it. What pertinence has the introduction and the reference of a bill to the Committee on Military Affairs upon the jurisdiction of this committee, created before the bill was introduced?

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, it would clearly indicate that, in the opinion of the Chair, this committee did not have jurisdiction of it when he referred the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But this committee is not a legislative committee, and no bill could be referred to it. It has no authority to report a bill.

Mr. GARRETT. That is precisely what I am arguing, except that I do not go quite the length of saying that it has no legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has no legislative jurisdiction over a bill. It is an investigating committee. I do not think a bill could be referred to it.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not go quite that far. I think there are some legislative propositions it conceivably might have jurisdiction over. It does not have jurisdiction over this. Will not the gentleman from Illinois agree with me, that if we have no authority to report a bill we ought not to report upon the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But there has been no report upon the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. Not mentioning it by name, but the subject matter is there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But both the title and the number of a bill must be mentioned in a report upon it. Stating what ought to be done is a recommendation, which has nothing to do with that particular bill. That is outlining a policy recommended by the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. So much for the proposition of the infringement upon the jurisdiction of the other committee of the House.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry if in order.

The SPEAKER. It is in order if the gentleman from Tennessee will yield for that purpose.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to enable me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee seeks, if I understand the point of order, to prevent the printing of a bill, or a report at least, that is part of the object. I want to ask the Speaker, as the gentleman possesses information which the Members of this House do not possess, how the Members of this House can vote intelligently upon this proposition? Suppose the matter would come up in the form of an appeal from the decision of the Chair and the gentleman possesses all the information beforehand and we possess none at all?

Mr. GARRETT. If the Chair will permit me to answer that——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad for the gentleman to answer it.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that, so far as I am concerned, the ruling of the Chair is to be final on the proposition. It is not my intention to appeal if the Chair rules against me. What the intention of the gentlemen on the other side may be if the Chair should hold with me I do not know.

Mr. JUUL. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee understands I mean to be perfectly fair——

Mr. GARRETT. Surely I do.

Mr. JUUL. But here we are, a number of Members upon this side, and the gentleman apparently knows all about a document that has not yet been dropped in the basket——

Mr. GARRETT. It has been dropped in the basket.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman speaks with all information concerning the contents of the document, and we are sitting here entirely in the dark and do not know whether or not we are in sympathy with the gentleman or oppose him.

Mr. GARRETT. I will tell the gentleman confidentially that he should sympathize with me. [Laughter.]

Mr. JUUL. I think so eminent a parliamentarian as the gentleman from Tennessee ought to permit the Members to find out what is in this mysterious document that he knows all about and that we know nothing about; and it would seem to me that the fair thing would be to permit the document to be printed and let all of the Members become as conversant with it overnight as the gentleman is now.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I stated a while ago—I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois heard me or not—if I am correct in my contention there are, I think, excellent reasons, not of a parliamentary but of a public character, why this ought not to go to the House and the country as the solemn report of a committee, and it is for that reason that I desire to have this parliamentary proposition disposed of at this time. Of course, if it is proper from a parliamentary standpoint, it will be printed; and if it is improper, it ought not to be, in my judgment.

I have read, I will say to my friend from Illinois, finding No. 30, which is the very heart of the proposition. All the other findings from 28 to 37 and finding 39 are directly argumentative in support of finding No. 30, as are various parts of the so-called brief attached to the findings.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman permit me again?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. JUUL. I do not know of any judgment of any gentleman on the other side that I would rather take than that of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. Here, if the gentleman's point of order prevails, we are sitting entirely in the dark and we do not know whether or not we ought to be with or against the gentleman, whether it is proper or improper. Here is the word of one gentleman who has read the bill with 400 other gentlemen who have to accept it without investigation, and I think the document ought to be printed and let us share with him the responsibility of passing on whether or not it is a good or bad document.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, I have stated my reasons for not desiring it printed. It is a matter, I will freely and frankly state, I am willing to leave to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I understand the gentleman is against the recommendation as to further procedure that is contained in section 30 of the report?

Mr. GARRETT. I prefer to state it this way, I will say to my friend from New York. In my opinion that is not only a recommendation, but a finding and an argument in support of the finding going beyond the jurisdiction of the committee. That is one of the phases of my point of order, and the other is with reference to its infringing upon the jurisdiction of another committee.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the further reading of section 712 which refers to Expenditures Committee. It reads:

The proper application of public moneys and also retrenchment.

It seems to be that under those two headings anything that is contained in section 30 would be entirely in order.

Mr. GARRETT. Then the gentleman's contention would be, of course, quite different from the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if I understood both correctly, because the gentleman from Illinois holds that it has absolutely no legislative authority. I think, Mr. Speaker, that is substantially all that I care to say at this time, and I trust I have made clear that I rest the point of order upon two bases, namely, that the report undertakes to deal with a legislative proposition pending before another committee, and therefore infringes upon its jurisdiction, and that it exceeds the authority conferred upon the select committee under either the general rules of the House or under the powers given by resolution 78.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this committee was created, as I understand it, June 4, 1919. The power given to the committee is as follows: "Which said committee is hereby authorized to fully investigate all contracts and expenditures made by the War Department or under its direction during the present war," and in addition, and so forth, power is conferred by the rules of the House upon an expenditure committee, but the rules do not extend the power of the committee as to making investigation. The language in the bill gave them authority to investigate all contracts and expenditures made by the War Department. Then the rules further provides:

That said select committee shall report to the House, in one or more reports as it may deem advisable, the result of its investigations, with such recommendations as it may care to make.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT. I suppose the gentleman will agree with me that that would mean recommendations coming within the scope of their authority under the rules?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I doubt whether they would have authority to recommend that the Constitution be amended as to the length of term of the President.

Mr. HUSTED. It would include recommendations also as to the future policy of the War Department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would clearly include any recommendation which in any way related to the expenditures of the War Department, either as to the past or as to the future, relating to the matters for which expenditures had been made in the past. Now, that is as plain as the nose on a man's face. This committee had the power to investigate the expenditures and to report its recommendation as to whether those expenditures were made for a purpose which was wise, and whether additional expenditures ought to be made to complete a project for which the past expenditures were made, or whether the Government ought to proceed to utilize the expenditures which were made, or whether the Government ought to dispose of the things that were created by the expenditures already made. The committee would have had that power, in my judgment, even if there had been no provision made giving them the power to make recommendation. But here is an express direction to the committee that it may not only report the results of its investigations, but they make recommendations based upon those investigations. If all the committee could do was to report upon the investigation which was made, what is the object in saying that it shall have the power to make recommendations? It is already given the power to make the report of its investigation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has insisted that this committee does not have the right to make a report which will affect in some way a bill subsequently introduced in the House if its recommendation should be followed. Clearly the jurisdiction of this committee was fixed at the time it was created. No bill subsequently was introduced to take away any of that jurisdiction. The mere dropping of a bill in the basket by a Member does not affect the jurisdiction of a committee which has been created by the House. This committee has not undertaken to report upon the bill. I do not think they would have authority to report upon the bill, but they would have authority to expressly recommend that that particular bill be not passed. The President has no power to send a veto message to Congress in one sense and advise that certain other legislation not in the bill vetoed ought to be reconsidered. He has no constitutional power except the right to make recommendations to Congress, yet he did that the other day. No one took exception to that exercise of power by the President. He specifically recommended that other legislation was improper in addition to the legislation which he vetoed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in justice to myself, I doubt whether I am in consonance with the recommendations of this committee as to the nitrate plant, but as to the power of the committee to recommend, I do not think there is a particle of question that, having investigated the expenditures for the nitrate plant, they could recommend that it be dismantled, abandoned, and torn down; that it be used by the Government; that it be leased by the Government; or that the Government exercise such power as it pleased in various directions. That is what the committee was for, namely, to recommend to Congress, after it made its investigation, the best course that might be pursued by Congress, making utilization of the immense sums of money which have been expended by the War Department.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it would be futile for me to proceed further along the line of argument just concluded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], inasmuch as he has so clearly expounded the ideas that I have on that subject. However, there is one phase of this matter that I think it worth while to call to the attention of the Chair. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] makes his point of order alleging that a part of the report is beyond the jurisdiction of the committee, and that therefore the Speaker should inspect the report, and if, on examination, he finds a part of it to be beyond the jurisdiction of the committee, by his ruling it would be made necessary that that portion be expunged.

In order to do so, of course, the Speaker must become conversant with what is in the report. He must, to a degree, know what the report is based upon, and having knowledge of what is in the report, he must then make his ruling as to the jurisdiction. He could not take the word of the gentleman from Tennessee or my word as to what the report contains, a report that contains 70 pages.

Mr. Speaker, it was never intended that the Chair should pass upon questions such as these, and we are not without authority on that proposition. In Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, section 1338, a similar question arose:

On May 26, 1836, the House was considering the report of a select committee in relation to the disposition of petitions relating to the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, when Mr. Stephen C. Philips, of Massachusetts, submitted, in writing, the following point of order:

Can a committee, specially instructed to report two resolutions, the form of which was given by the House, report another resolution changing the rules and orders of the House in regard to the management of its business and depriving citizens of the privilege of obtaining the usual consideration for petitions upon subjects other than that referred to the committee?

The Speaker (James K. Polk, of Tennessee) stated that it was not within the competency of the Chair to draw within the vortex of order the question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Questions relating to the jurisdiction of the committees of the House or whether they had or had not exceeded that jurisdiction or transcended the authority conferred upon them by the House were for the House and not the Speaker to determine. If gentlemen were of opinion that committees in their reports had exceeded the authority given them by the House there were other modes of correcting what they had done; as, for example, the report might be recommitted with instructions, or the House, on that, as well as other grounds, might refuse to concur in their report.

The point now raised could not therefore be considered as a point of order to be decided by the Chair. It was in some respects analogous to the case of inconsistent amendments proposed, in which case it was well settled that "if an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order, for were he permitted to draw questions of consistence within the vortex of order he might usurp a negative on important modifications and suppress instead of subserving the legislative will."

So in this case, if the House should be satisfied that the committee were not clothed with authority, by the order of the House under which they were appointed, to report this resolution, "it may be a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order."

Now, that was followed on January 12, 1888, by a ruling by Mr. Speaker Carlisle, found in section 1339. A point of order was made to a report, and the Speaker said, after debate:

The Chair can only say what has been frequently said before upon similar points—that it is not within the province of the Chair to decide upon the sufficiency of a report made by a committee of the House. All that the rule requires is that a report shall be submitted in writing, without specifying the nature of the report, and if that provision of the rule is complied with the Chair must entertain the report.

Now, I have no doubt about the correctness of that position, Mr. Speaker. I would be entirely willing under ordinary circumstances to have the Chair decide upon the merits of this proposition. I have some well-defined ideas as to what the jurisdiction of these committees on expenditures is. I think, Mr. Speaker, that they have been allowed to fall into a disuse that is absolutely unjustified when we contemplate the original purpose for which they were formed. This committee, or the standing Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, was originally appointed in 1814 in order to supply a want felt at that time in Congress, when it was appreciated that Congress having appropriated the money, there should also be some committee of the Congress that could supervise the expenditure of it. I think that some of the duties of the committees on expenditures have been taken over by the major committees of the House, because the chairmen of these committees on expenditures have sat silent and inactive and permitted that to be done. In former days they were active legislative committees, and there was a broad field of activity for them.

For the Chair to rule now that this committee, which has had such excessive labors for a long period, must confine itself to a recital of what has been expended and where it has been expended is to take from the committee its principal function, which was to make recommendations, so that some good might come out of the activity of the committee in regard to the future expenditure of public funds. I feel it is our duty to make such recommendations as we can in regard to the future operations of these nitrate plants. I do not think I need say anything further than what I have said, together with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, because that embraces practically all that I had in mind to say on the subject.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I placed a question before the Chair. I trust the Chair will not treat the question lightly. I consider that in this controversy a Member would have the right to appeal after the Chair has made a decision. The question I put to the Chair was, if an appeal were made from the decision of the Chair, the Chair knowing the contents of a certain document before this House, and the membership not knowing, how is the membership of this House to vote intelligently? Suppose the right of any Member of this House should be used to appeal from the decision of the Chair? How are we to vote intelligently when we do not know the contents of the document?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, in reference to the case cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] I have observed that case in searching the precedents, and I felt sufficient interest in the matter to go to the Journal of the Twenty-fourth Congress itself and look that matter up to see just exactly what was involved. The principle is stated correctly, and the language of the Speaker, Mr. Speaker Polk, is quoted as given in the Journal; but it is a matter of some historical interest as well as having a direct bearing upon this question.

At that time there was great excitement throughout the country touching the matter of the receipt by Congress by petitions respecting the question of slavery. Mr. John Quincy Adams was making the great and historic fight which he kept up for so long a time with reference to the right of petition upon the question of slavery. Petitions were pouring in with regard to the matter of the disposition of slavery in the District of Columbia. The "Old Man Eloquent" had brought down upon him the ire of all those from the slave-holding sections who sympathized with the institution of slavery in any way, and as a result a resolution passed the House of Representatives which directed the reference of all petitions to a select committee.

That was on May 8, 1824, and not only were those resolutions referred, but the language that the committee that was appointed was instructed to use in reporting back to the House was in part set out. They were instructed to report back all the petitions affecting the question of slavery referred to them with certain language.

What the committee did was to insert the language that they had been instructed to use and then to use some of their own. There was committed to them in that case the duty of putting up the argument, you may say, in behalf of slavery, or that phase of it, and that was the case that was presented.

The same question did not arise there that has arisen here—that is, as to exceeding the jurisdiction of the committee—and that clearly distinguishes the leading case, so far as I have been able to find, as set out in the precedents upon this matter.

As to the subsequent case to which the gentleman referred, the ruling of Mr. Speaker Carlisle, I have not looked that up in the Journal, but it turned upon the question not of exceeding authority but of the sufficiency of the report; that is, as to whether the committee had done enough, not as to whether it had done too much. I raise no question about the sufficiency of this report, even upon the matters that come within its jurisdiction. I shall undertake to maintain a few days later that on the face of it it is all-sufficient, self-sufficient, and inefficient. [Laughter.]

But I do not raise any parliamentary question about that. That Carlisle decision turned upon the question as to whether they said enough, not whether they went beyond their power and said too much. And so I think it may be said of all the cases that are in the book.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserved a point of order on the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I think my point of order is perfectly good. I reserved it because I did not want to have go unchallenged or conceded the idea that any Member at any time might make a point of order against a report which had been filed through the basket, because that would be the cause of infinite delay if it were ruled in order. But having said this much, I withdraw the point of order. I have no objection to the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee being passed upon.

Mr. ALMON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to be heard?

Mr. ALMON. Yes; just for a moment.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear to my mind, although I do not pose as an expert parliamentarian, that this Committee on Investigation of War Expenditures under the resolution creating the committee is without jurisdiction to make recommendations as to the future of the Government nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Ala. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is true that the resolution creating the committee authorized that committee to report its findings and recommendations. Of course, that is understood to mean to make findings in matters over which the committee has jurisdiction and make recommendations about matters over which the committee has jurisdiction. The very name of the committee and the very work for which the committee was assigned shows that the purpose of the appointment of the committee is to investigate and report upon expenditures of the War Department. And this particular subcommittee is reporting on investigations of the Ordnance Department, one branch of the War Department, as to the nitrogen program during the recent war. If the committee found that Government funds had been misappropriated it would be proper for the committee to recommend that proper legal proceedings be instituted to protect the interest of the Government. This would be such a recommendation as is contemplated by the resolution creating this committee.

Of course, it is proper for the committee to report the results of the hearings and its findings, and as to the money that was expended in connection with the fixation of the air-nitrogen plants. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing in the resolution or the precedents which have been read to the Speaker which would authorize this committee to have jurisdiction of the future of these Government plants. I do not contend, and I do not wish my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to understand, that I contend that the introduction in this House of a bill by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], recommended by the War Department and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, would take away from Mr. GRAHAM'S subcommittee jurisdiction of any matter that the committee had jurisdiction of.

But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the bill now pending before the committee and the two Houses of Congress having jurisdiction of these matters pertain to the future use of plant No. 2, viz, the manufacture of fertilizer. As has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], this bill is now pending before both Houses of Congress.

Committee hearings have been had by both committees, and the records of this Congress show that extensive hearings have been had before the Committee on Agriculture in the Senate, and probably both sides have been heard. The records show that farmer organizations of this country have appeared and had hearings and favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interfere with the gentleman's argument, but time flies and the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. ALMON. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to make any further reference to these hearings, but I was illustrating and making the point that this question of future use of this plant No. 2 is a question of policy. It is a legislative question. It is a question to be determined by Congress and should be determined by the Military Committee, a legislative committee having jurisdiction of the matter.

I do not contend that the introduction of a bill recommended by the Secretary of War and referring it to the Committee on Military Affairs took away from this committee investigating war expenditures any right or jurisdiction it may have had. But I referred to that as the gentleman from Tennessee did, to show that the future use and disposition of this Government nitrate plant is one not to be determined or recommended by the Committee on Expenditures of the War Department, but by the Military Committee, which has jurisdiction of the subject matter. That is a sufficient reason, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, why the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] should be sustained. Let the legislative committee having jurisdiction of the question have full hearings as to what shall be done with this plant, and do not let it be determined by this committee which has not had hearings and which has no jurisdiction. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Tennessee was so courteous as to notify the Chair in advance of this point of order, so the Chair has had some opportunity to study the report and the point of order. On that account the Chair is peculiarly desirous that the case which the gentleman from Tennessee presents shall have his impartial consideration. And, of course, the statement of the gentleman that he does not intend to appeal increases the desire of the Chair to give the gentleman every benefit of doubt.

But it seems to the Chair very clear that this point of order is not valid. The decisions cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] had impressed the Chair quite strongly that on that ground the Chair had no jurisdiction. What the gentleman from Tennessee read from the Journal, the Chair admits somewhat weakened the force of the decision as cited in Hinds'; although the language and reasoning of Speaker Carlisle, would, to the Chair's mind, confirm the point that this is not really a question that the Chair should hold raises a legitimate point of order.

But it seems to the Chair very clear that the rule which gives the Committee on Expenditures its authority does cover this case. It says that the committee shall report to the House the result of its investigations.

Now, there can be no question that this investigation of a nitrate plant was directly within the sphere intended by this rule. The rule also says that the committee shall make recommendations. Now, of course, recommendations apply to the future.

Mr. GARRETT. May I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that committees of this kind have in the past made recommendations of impeachment growing out of expenditures? I think the record shows that.

The SPEAKER. That does not seem to the Chair to contravene the statement which the Chair has already made. The resolution gave the committee authority to do certain things in addition to the authority which the ordinary Committee on Expenditures had, and among these is "the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands" and "retrenchment." So this committee has the power, among other things, of retrenchment. That is within the strict scope of their duty. It seems to the Chair that if the committee in investigating the subject entirely within its sphere finds as it did in this case that there is a certain course of action by the War Department which it thinks would bring about retrenchment, that to recommend that course is a proper function of the committee.

It seems to the Chair very clear that they had a right to make a recommendation in the line of retrenchment as to the further prosecution of this project. The fact that another committee had control of a bill which would continue the operation of this plant which they are investigating in no way limits the scope of the authority of this committee. The report of this committee does not take away the jurisdiction of that committee. That committee can still consider the bill and report it to the House, which could if it desired adopt it.

So it seems to the Chair that this report is strictly within the scope of the committee's authority, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall care to do so, and if I do not do so I trust that my failure will not be taken as any lack of respect for the ruling of the Chair, but if I should determine before this matter comes up for discussion to file minority views upon that phase of the question, which I have not done, giving my reasons in the minority report, I ask unanimous consent that I may have that privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to file further minority views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, under the terms of House resolution 316, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 351, extending the provisions of an act amending section 32 of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, to June 30, 1921.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 351, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 351) extending the provisions of an act amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916, to June 30, 1921.

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has asked for a reargument of the case involving the constitutionality of the Federal farm-loan act; and

Whereas the reargument of the case will postpone a decision until next October at the earliest; and

Whereas the Federal land banks are now, and it is feared will be, unable under these circumtsances to sell bonds to meet outstanding commitments for loans to farmers pending a final decision: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 8, 1918, entitled "An act to amend section 32 of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916," be, and the same hereby are, extended to the fiscal years ending June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1921, to the extent that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized, as by the terms of said act, to purchase during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1921, or either of them, any bonds which he might have purchased during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, or either of them, under the provisions of the original act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "act," insert: "Provided, That he shall purchase no bonds issued against loans approved after March 1, 1920."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] will not now use some of his time.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members present, a quorum.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman, the stenographic reporter for the House quotes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], in propounding a question to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW], on Saturday last, the 15th, as using these words:

Does the gentleman complain and protest because the loyal people of the United States refuse to pay tribute to the men who were traitors to the country in the time of its greatest distress?

The gentleman from Georgia, whilst addressing the House, alluded to what he deemed to be discourtesy and injustice to the memory of Gen. Robert E. Lee in connection with the management of the Arlington amphitheater.

The words of the gentleman from Illinois were intended to be applicable to Gen. Robert E. Lee and to the great leaders associated with him during the era of 1861 to 1865. I did not hear the words so used by the gentleman from Illinois at the time, nor are they reported in the proceedings of the House for Saturday, but the stenographic report was called to my attention and I can not do otherwise than notice the words so used.

During the entire unfortunate Civil War the courage and sincerity of the Confederate soldier was never questioned by his brave opponents. [Applause.] The ability and integrity of Lee, Jackson, and other great leaders of the South was never minimized. Their supreme sense of duty, their unselfish devotion to what they deemed to be the cause of right, have been recognized in every land where patriotic heroism has a home. [Applause.]

I regret that the gentleman from Illinois gave expression to the language as reported by the stenographer. He stands isolated and alone in a wilderness of his own creation, where he will find neither renown nor happiness.

In the ancient Ionian city of Ephesus was the Temple of Diana, which attracted the admiration and wonder of travelers from every land.

In the city of Ephesus lived one Herostratus, who longed for eternal fame, and if he could not win that, at least for eternal notoriety. To achieve that result he burned down the magnificent structure before whose walls thousands gathered daily and gazed upon its wondrous beauty with rapture and delight.

The craving of Herostratus for notoriety was gratified. He destroyed the Temple of Diana 356 B. C., and for more than 2,000 years his name has been recorded upon the pages of history as the synonym of degradation and moral depravity.

Whosoever characterizes Gen. Robert E. Lee as a traitor may well beware lest he inherit from Herostratus his crown of infamy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The memory of Gen. Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson will live, transmitted from generation to generation, when the costliest tombs erected by the love of their countrymen shall have perished by decay and the walls of the Arlington amphitheater have crumbled into dust. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield me five minutes?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have no apology to make to any man for the words I uttered here on the floor a day or two ago. When the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW], standing in his place on this floor, protested because the names of Robert E. Lee and Gen. Gordon and others who had tried to destroy the Union were not placed on the memorial erected in commemoration of the Union soldiers who defended the flag, I simply asked the question, "Does the gentleman protest because the loyal American people refuse to pay tribute to men who were traitors to their country in its hour of need?" I repeat that question now. Does anyone deny that they were traitors? [Cries of "Yes!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, these men were educated in the Military Academy of the United States. They wore the uniform of the Nation as soldiers of the Union. They deserted the colors of their Nation and led the forces which sought to destroy the Union. Were they traitors?

SEVERAL MEMBERS (on the Democratic side). No!

Mr. MADDEN. I say, yes; they were traitors; and I object, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, to having their names placed beside the men's names who fought to defend the Union and to preserve its institutions. Ah, brave men; of course they were. No one denies that. But that they were trying to destroy the Union even the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN] will not deny, and I have no apology to make to any man for any words I have uttered here and which I am willing to utter elsewhere.

Mr. UPSHAW. May God have mercy on your soul.

Mr. MADDEN. Let the gentleman utter that prayer for himself. I can take care of myself.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, under the rule debate must be confined to the bill——

Mr. MADDEN. It was not.

Mr. MONDELL. And I shall insist on the rule——

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Wyoming happens to be mistaken. This is in general debate.

Mr. PLATT. I think the gentleman is right. It was intended to be in the rule.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will refer to the rule as appearing in the RECORD and read from the Clerk's desk, he will see that it is general debate.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important resolution we have before us. I suppose the most of you are familiar with its provisions. If not, you ought to give attention to it at once. This is a resolution which extends the act of Congress approved January 18, 1918, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury during the years 1918 and 1919 to purchase farm-loan bonds issued by Federal land banks not exceeding $100,000,000 each year. Now, if you are familiar with the fact that, owing to litigation now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, the Federal land banks find that their bonds can not be sold, and hence the Federal land banks are at a standstill. Now, this resolution extends the act of January 18 and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase Federal farm-loan bonds, but the committee amendment embodied in the last two lines—lines 11 and 12—limits the provisions of this act to the purchase of bonds to cover loans approved prior to March 1, 1920. I think that would amount to, as I say, maybe $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 worth of bonds; but still it leaves those banks unable to sell their bonds, at a standstill, unable to do business until perhaps next January, February, or March, because it is understood that case will not be reargued until next October, and we might assume that it will be some months after the reargument before the Supreme Court will render its decision. If the committee amendment is adopted, these land banks will be unable to do business probably until next March. I am in favor of the bill as it was introduced. I am opposed to the committee amendment. Of course, if the House shall adopt the committee amendment, I will vote for the bill as amended. A little relief will be better than no relief at all. It will not enable these land banks to function. They can not receive, they can not consider, they can not act upon applications from the 1st of last March, perhaps, until the 1st of next March.

Now, these banks are supposed to accomplish a good purpose. One object was to reduce the interest rate to the farmers, but above this was the idea that by giving the farmers better credit facilities they would increase food production, they would extend and help develop agriculture, and through that they would strengthen the very fabric of the Government, and to-day there is no more important question than the reduction of the high cost of living, and we all know that the cost of food can not be reduced unless the production of food is increased. So that this is not a question simply of helping the farmer to get a little lower rate of interest, but it is a question of helping the farmer, helping the fifty or sixty millions of men and women who live in our towns, in our great centers, in our great cities, so my proposition is to vote down the committee's amendment found in lines 11 and 12, which provide "that he"—the Secretary of the Treasury—"shall purchase no bonds issued against loans approved after March 1, 1920."

Mr. CLASSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. CLASSON. Will the gentleman tell how that date of March 1, 1920, was selected?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, after March 1, 1920, the Federal land banks have approved no loans; they suspended business at that time.

Mr. CLASSON. Why does not that meet the situation?

Mr. MORGAN. Because there are millions of dollars of applications now pending unapproved. If these banks do business there would be millions of dollars of additional applications made between now and next March.

Mr. CLASSON. Then if they have any applications that have not been approved by the 1st of March they can not consider them?

Mr. MORGAN. They can not consider them. The committee amendment should be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of the passage of this bill and I hope it will receive the unanimous vote of the House, and in that connection and in connection with the situation relative to banking in this country I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact, with which the House is perhaps thoroughly familiar, that on the 28th day of February last I introduced House resolution No. 476, which is now before the Committee on Rules, and upon which a partial hearing has been had.

One of the main propositions involved in this matter and in this resolution is the proposed inquiry with reference to the inflation of the currency as being the cause of the high cost of living in this country. Since that time, since that resolution appeared, to use a figure of speech which is largely in vogue, in the shape of a cloud the size of a man's hand arising on the horizon, what promises to be a movement of cyclonic proportions is commencing, there has been formed an organization covering 26 States and of many thousands of State and national bankers into what is known as the National and State Bankers' Protective Association, consisting principally of banks in the South, West, and Northwest. Representatives of these banks have been here and spoken before the Rules Committee in favor of this resolution. To-day there are in this country—and bear this in mind—nearly $4,000,000,000 worth of Federal reserve notes floating in the air like confetti at a street fair. The issuance of this currency is based ultimately upon the hoarding of at least 75 per cent of foodstuffs and necessities of life. To this view has recently come President Fisher, of Yale University; Dr. FESS, a great economist himself, and a Representative in this House; and ex-Representative Charles N. Fowler, of New Jersey, a former chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in this House, and a Member of it for over 11 years. No man in the United States is better informed on the situation than is Mr. Fowler. The situation has even gotten to that stage where the Federal Reserve Board itself, although it pooh-poohed this idea recently and denied there was any inflation of the currency, and if any it had no effect whatever on the high cost of living, has called, perhaps by reason of this agitation, maybe not, a conference of the Federal Reserve Board and the advisory council in this city. They are in session to-day.

The press announces that the deflation of the currency will be discussed. I dare say there will be nothing of remedial nature proceed from that conference. The matter has gotten away from them like a runaway horse. It is impossible for them under the present conditions of the law to deflate the currency except by curtailing credit and requiring borrowers who are hoarders to liquidate and thus bring down the prices of necessities.

Mr. McKEOWN. What remedy does the gentleman suggest or what legislation has he to offer?

Mr. KING. If the bankers themselves will not cause the hoarders of necessities to gradually liquidate, a law preventing the renewing of the commercial notes of holders of necessities will accomplish the desired result.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has the gentleman introduced that bill?

Mr. KING. I can not yield longer, for I want to get something in that I got up here for the purpose of getting in.

This matter is going to be an issue in the campaign. It can not be smothered and it can not be done away with. It will be just as important an issue as it has been in prior campaigns. It is forging to the front to-day. What are you asked when you go home? You are asked, "What have you done to reduce the high cost of living?" It will not do to say, "Oh, well, we have not done anything about that, because the matter of supply and demand covers that, and, furthermore, these conditions confront us always after a great war and therefore we are absolutely helpless."

This agitation has gone so far that already there has been suggested to me and to a number of others that there should be a plank inserted in the Republican platform at the convention in Chicago which I will insert at a future point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend to insert in the RECORD information as to whether or not Mr. Hays has approved of that proposed plank in the Republican platform?

Mr. KING. I am very sorry to say that I do not know whether it has been submitted to Mr. Hays or not.

Mr. WINGO. Submitted to his committee of one hundred.

Mr. KING. I have received the following letter from Mr. Fowler:

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 15, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD J. KING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KING: The most important, the most vital, the real issue of 1920 is the relation of the Federal reserve act and the management of the Federal reserve banks to high prices. The impending peril and the way out—that is the real issue.

Evidently alarmed and pleading their utter helplessness and hopelessness, the Federal Reserve Board disclosed in their last bulletin what they themselves declared was an astounding state of facts. They said:

"In the 19 months when we were at war the expansion of national-bank loans was 16 per cent. In the same 19 months commodity prices, Bureau of Labor index, increased 20 per cent.

"From the call for reports of banks March 5 last year to February 28 this year, national-bank loans expanded by $2,303,000,000, or 24 per cent. This was two and one-half times the rate of growth during our participation in the war, with all the tremendous Government loan issues and nearly four times the average yearly rate of the last 30 years, including the four war years. As the national-bank loans are about 45 per cent of the total loans of all banks, this means an expansion for the entire country of about $5,200,000,000, a sum that might well have been considered incredible if it had been predicted a year ago."

This confession confirms the now well-settled opinion that through the operations of the Federal reserve banks since the armistice was signed November, 1918, our currency has constantly depreciated until we now have a 40-cent dollar, and unless this mad inflation is arrested we are going over Niagara Falls to the complete destruction of our credit fabric.

In 1836 one of our most bitter presidential contests occurred over the usurpation of power and political interference on the part of the Second United States Bank. But whatever charges were then made against the Second United States Bank, they were of slight consequence; indeed, they were trivial, compared with the charges against the management of the Federal reserve bank now being made before the Rules Committee of the House by the National and State Bankers' Protective Association, representing, it is said, at least 25,000 banks, coming from every State in the Union. The facts established before the committee by indubitable evidence are unthinkable and could have occurred nowhere except under the Czar of Russia or the autocracy of the Wilson administration.

In 1868 the Republican Party declared against repudiation and in favor of national honor. The first act of Congress signed by President Grant pledged the faith of the Government "to make provisions at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin."

National honor won.

In 1876 the Republican Party declared against "fiat money," "greenbackism," and for the resumption of specie payment.

The resumption of specie payment won.

In 1896 the Republican Party declared against a 50-cent silver dollar—Bryanism—and for the gold standard.

The gold standard won.

I assert that the Federal reserve act and its management involve all that was at stake in the four presidential elections of 1836, 1868, 1876, and 1896.

Will the Republican Party now show the same intelligence, patriotism, and courage it displayed in 1868, 1876, and 1896, or will it, through ignorance or cowardice, or both, permit the country to drift helplessly and hopelessly into the maelstrom of overwhelming commercial disaster? That is the question.

Let the American people note and remember that while Mr. Bryan failed to force upon us a 50-cent silver dollar in 1896, he has succeeded in giving us a 40-cent paper dollar in 1920, for Mr. Bryan, while Secretary of State, prescribed what the Federal reserve notes must be—United States notes or greenbacks—before they were delivered to the Federal reserve banks. In other words, we are up against Bryanism in 1920 precisely as we were in 1896. The question is, Will we meet the issue of Bryanism now as we did in 1896?

Very sincerely, yours,

CHARLES N. FOWLER.

STATEMENT OF CHARLES N. FOWLER, FORMER REPRESENTATIVE FROM NEW JERSEY AND CHAIRMAN OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY, PRESENTED TO THE HOUSE AND PUBLISHED IN THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The proposal is for the inclusion of a sound money plank in the Republican platform to be adopted at Chicago in June.

Currency inflation, due to the practice of the Federal Reserve System in making Federal-reserve notes, issued upon commercial paper available to banks as reserves, upon which further credit expansion is authorized, thus producing more commercial paper to support the issues of more Federal-reserve notes, has brought about a situation which compels the Republican Party again to champion the cause of sound money as it did in 1868, when it declared against repudiation; in 1876, when it declared against greenbackism; and in 1896, when it declared against free silver or Bryanism.

When the Federal reserve act was passed in 1913 the currency amounted to only $34 per capita. To-day it is more than $56 per capita. There has been constant expansion. There has never been contraction. Our currency has, in consequence of this inflation, steadily depreciated until to-day we have a 40-cent dollar, and unless this course of mad expansion is arrested we are going over Niagara Falls to the complete destruction of our credit fabric.

The advisory council of the Federal Reserve Board, I understand, is meeting to-day with those Federal reserve directors chosen from the active banking business world to consider ways and means of checking credit expansion. The only effective way to accomplish that is to end the system which employs an evidence of credit as a bank reserve to support another larger credit extension. While this vicious cycle of currency built upon credit and credit built upon such unsound currency continues, the present financial ills of the country can not be cured, prices can not be brought down and only overwhelming disaster can result.

When the Federal reserve act was placed upon the statute books the country was told that it would provide an elastic currency, responsive to the commercial needs of the Nation. Experience has shown the capacity of the Federal-reserve currency for expansion and its utter lack of power for contraction. In its last bulletin the Federal Reserve Board stated that from March 5, 1919, to February 28, 1920, the banks of the country had expanded their credits about $5,200,000,000, or two and one-half times the rate of expansion during the war and our bond-selling period. The Federal Reserve System can not control such expansion, but its currency issue system actually encourages it.

A nonmember bank to-day makes a loan, for example, of $100,000. It takes the commercial paper representing that loan to the Federal reserve bank or a member bank, rather, and receives for it $100,000 in Federal-reserve notes, on which it pays interest at the rate of 6 per cent. The bank is authorized to employ those $100,000 of Federal-reserve notes, which represent a loan and not gold, which is the only sound basis of currency, as a reserve fund, and the reserve being thus increased by $100,000 of Federal-reserve notes, the bank proceeds to increase its loans from six to ten times that reserve. It is easily seen and understood how this system builds currency upon credit and credit upon currency without end. The 6 per cent interest the bank pays for the Federal-reserve curency is inconsequential in comparison with the profits it can make by extending credits by using those notes as reserve.

While member banks can not employ Federal reserve notes as reserve, their gold reserves, which are all held by the Federal reserve banks, are to-day not one-half of the reserves required before the passage of the Federal reserve act. This cutting away of the reserves, it will be noted, has doubled their extension of credit.

It is interesting to ask where the national bank notes are, where the United States notes are, where the gold certificates or yellow backs are with which we were so familiar in times past. This currency has been driven out of circulation by the Federal reserve notes. It is an economic law, as immutable as the law of gravitation, and now long recognized, that the poorer or cheaper money always drives the better or sounder money out of circulation. Let any man look at the bills he has in his purse or pockets now. Save for an occasional one-dollar bill, he will rarely, if ever, find anything except Federal reserve notes. Yet there are to-day about $750,000,000 of national bank notes and $346,000,000 of United States notes outstanding.

Last year $430,000,000 gold—100-cent dollars—left the country and $560,000,000 of Federal reserve notes—40-cent dollars—were added to this sodden mass of I O U's, making our present situation dangerously unsound.

William J. Bryan, while Secretary of State, refused to allow his following in Congress to support the Federal reserve act until the notes were made Government paper or "greenbacks" before they were delivered to the Federal reserve banks. In other words, we are up against Bryanism to-day precisely as we were in 1896. Then it was a 50-cent silver dollar, now it is a 40-cent paper dollar.

There is only one way out, and that is for the Republican Party once more to champion the cause of sound money, as it did in 1868, 1876, and 1896, and go before the country with this most important, this greatest of all issues and conduct an educational campaign, as it did on those three former occasions, end this system of fiat money, contract the currency, place it upon a sound basis, get credits back to a normal condition, and prices within the reach of the consumers of the land.

The warning against this peril is coming in increasing volume from the bankers of the country. Thousands of State and country bankers have organized and are now in the field challenging the usurpation of power and the tyranny of the Federal Reserve System; but, because that system represents the greatest concentrated money power this country has ever seen, the larger banks which are now dependent upon it and the financiers of the great industrial centers can not afford to risk the enmity of the administration or of the Federal Reserve Board, which can penalize and punish them in one hundred ways. For this reason, therefore, you may expect them all to remain silent, for the present at least, out of business prudence.

As I have said, the one and only way out of it is for the Republican Party to again champion the cause of sound money and a sound financial system. To this end I propose the following plank for the Republican national platform to be adopted at Chicago:

PLANK FOR THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL PLATFORM.

"To the end that the business interests of this country shall cease to be the prey and football of whatever political party may happen to be in power, and that we may free ourselves from the present high prices, due to a greatly depreciated currency, and that we may escape the impending perils and threatening dangers due to the defects of the Federal reserve act, we declare:

"First. That our central banking system should be organized solely for the purpose of aiding and serving the commerce of the country, and therefore should be entirely free from the dictation or influence, even, of the executive department of the Government precisely as our Supreme Court now is, which was organized to aid and serve the ends of justice free, unafraid, and uninfluenced by the executive department of the Government.

"Second. That our central banking system should not itself be the source of overexpansion and lead the way to wild inflation, but should be a conserving, regulating power, checking the tendencies to excess beyond the safe boundaries of the demand and supply of credit, and to this end assert that the gold reserves held by our banks should be adequate and so distributed as to guarantee the soundness of all commercial credits passing through them and all currency credits created by them.

"Third. That the currency of our country outside of our gold coin (and its substitute, the gold certificates), and all our subsidiary currency, which includes all denominations below $5, should not by every conceivable legislative device be made to partake of the nature of essential money (or gold, which is the only true money we have), and the American people be thereby deceived and led to believe that because a debt—a demand for gold (such as our Federal reserve notes are)—is redeemable in gold it is therefore itself gold, or as good as gold, or may be used instead of gold, and consequently is fit to be held as a reserve in our banks.

"Fourth. That our currency outside of our gold coin (and its substitute, the gold certificates), and all our subsidiary currency, which includes all denominations below $5, should partake of the nature of bank credit precisely as the Scotch, Irish, Australian, Canadian, and French bank notes now do, and as the notes of the two United States banks, the notes of the banks of Louisiana, certain banks of Kentucky, Missouri, and Virginia, the State Bank of Indiana, and the State Bank of Iowa, and the Suffolk System of the six New England States did prior to the Civil War.

"We are in favor of such a currency because it is the inherent right of every bank depositor to have it upon his request, and because it is the most economical and yet the soundest currency in the world, its equality with gold being proved every day by its redemption in gold through the clearing houses, precisely as checks and drafts are, and because it always will meet the demands of trade everywhere throughout the United States, but will not exceed the demands of trade."

On March 29, 1910, Hon. Charles N. Fowler, who was for 16 years a Member of Congress from New Jersey, for 14 years a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and for 8 years its chairman, made a speech upon the first draft of the Federal reserve act, which he had drawn.

In the interest of historical truth I read from the title page as follows:

A complete financial and banking system for the United States.

(H. R. 23707.)

The complete organization consists of 28 commercial zones.

The organization of each zone consists of a bankers' council and a board of control.

The 28 commercial zones are individually as strong as all combined, but are absolutely independent of each other commercially, and yet, economically and organically, they are all united and bound together in the Federal reserve bank.

SPEECH OF HON. CHARLES N. FOWLER, OF NEW JERSEY, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MARCH 29, 1910.

A careful reading of this first draft made by him and the act as passed discloses certain fundamental differences which were set forth by Mr. Fowler in some observations he took occasion to make shortly after the passage of the act and were in these words:

If the Federal reserve bank act is to be judged by the principles of banking economics and by those approved bank practices which have been wrought out by experience, and also in the light of those demonstrated perils to both government and commercial credit wherever they have been bound up together, it is fundamentally and structurally unsound and wrong.

First. It is the most gigantic, complete, and potential political machine ever constructed. A legislative enactment that makes it possible for the President to subject, dominate, or even influence the commercial interests of the country by removing every member of the Federal Reserve Board, at any time, without cause, and by empowering the Federal Reserve Board, in turn, to remove at any time without cause all the directors of the 12 Federal reserve banks, should not be tolerated.

Second. The creation of 12 separate, distinct reserve institutions is in utter defiance of all experience, and is at variance with sound principles; and this anomalous structure is sure to break down just at the critical time whenever it may come.

Third. It can not be said that the Federal reserve act bears any natural relation whatever to our experience or conditions, but was purely a foreign device, which was already at the very point of collapse in Germany, when transferred here and superimposed upon our conglomerate situation, making our problem more complex, difficult, and ultimately far more dangerous than before.

Fourth. The Federal reserve act is the most stupendous economic blunder ever committed in the life of this Nation because, while it lays the groundwork for practically unlimited expansion of credit, it also sets in motion those forces which will ultimately drive gold out of the country by the gradual substitution of paper credit, in the form of the United States Federal reserve note, for gold coin. No better device could possibly have been contrived and constructed to put Gresham's law into operation.

Fifth. Not content with the ultimate and unerring effect of the law in gradually displacing gold coin with Government bank debts, the authors of the act to pacify the bitter opponents of the measure, in their ignorance and desperation, greatly reduced the required reserves, although the total cash bank reserves of the country were, at that time, approximately 5 per cent below the average required by the law of safety long established by experience.

Sixth. Though all experience demanded the complete separation of the functions of the United States Treasury from the banking business of the country, after cutting away the foundations of credit and imperiling the whole superstructure of our commerce, and after devising a method for still further weakening the all too slender support of our vast business interests, they tied the Government around the neck of the banks, with the necessary result that both must be made to suffer the consequence of an alliance that all history has shown to be disastrous.

In the light of experience these observations made six years ago have now turned out to be a prophecy.

On the 6th day of February, 1920, delegates representing 8 of the 12 Federal reserve districts, composed mostly, if not entirely, of southern Democrats, met at New Orleans and issued the following protest and banking bill of rights:

Resolutions adopted by assembly of National and State Bankers at New Orleans, La., February 6, 1920.

Be it resolved by this assembly of delegates representing the expressed sentiment of banks of 8 of 12 Federal reserve districts of the United States assembled at New Orleans, La., this 6th day of February, 1920—

First. That we are in favor and heartily approve the purposes of the Federal reserve act. We disagree with certain constructions of said law and propose such changes as experience has shown are desirable and will clarify the meaning of the act.

Second. Be is resolved, That we repel and refute all inferences and allegations that we are in opposition to the Federal Reserve System.

Third. That we do deplore and disapprove most emphatically of what we charge to be serious abuses of the enormous powers granted in the Federal reserve act and in the administration thereof.

Fourth. Be it further resolved, That we deplore and protest most vigorously against the policy of attempted domination by the Federal Reserve Board and banks over nonmember State banks to enforce universal par clearance of checks by methods described by a Federal bank itself as embarrassing, annoying, and expensive to the nonmember banks is cited as an example of such methods, and we denounce the same as both illegal and wrong.

Fifth. Be it further resolved, That in the opinion of the banks here represented the proper administration and necessary amendment of the Federal reserve act are questions for nonpartisan statesmanship, and that whatever political aspects they may assume, if any, will be forced upon the banks by acts of the Federal Reserve Board.

Sixth. Be it further resolved, That in order that light may be thrown upon this important law and its administration, so that its defects may be ascertained and corrected and its inequalities and abuses eliminated, we most respectfully and earnestly urge upon our Congressmen and Senators in particular and upon all Senators and Congressmen without regard to party, to institute an official investigation of the administration of the Federal reserve act since its passage, in general, and with regard specifically to the following details:

(a) Coercive methods, if any there be, to force nonmember State banks to become members.

(b) Substantial competition by Federal reserve banks with their own member banks.

(c) Open market transactions.

(d) The enormous and unexpected earnings of the Federal reserve banks, amounting during the year 1919 to $98,000,000 on a paid-in capital of a little over $87,000,000, or 110 per cent for surplus alone.

(e) The relative salaries and bonuses paid by Federal reserve banks to their officers and employees as compared with positions of similar requirements in privately owned institutions.

(f) Oppressive policies toward member banks, under the guise of corrective measures, to a degree where many such members are afraid to take any position which might be construed by Federal reserve officials as being in opposition to their policies in dread of punitive measures and reprisals.

(g) Attempted destruction of the independence of the great State bank systems as such.

(h) Intimidation, if any there be, of directors of Federal reserve banks to such extent as to prevent many of them from performing the functions imposed upon them by law, and the practices employed in selecting the directors.

(i) Efforts, if any, to force the diversified business of the country, which varies largely in character and custom from section to section, to conform to rigid rules and standards determined upon and announced by the Federal Reserve Board—often contrary to the established customs and channels of trade.

(j) The extent to which inflation of currency by the Federal Reserve Board is responsible for the high cost of living, as charged by Dr. Wiley and other eminent authorities.

(k) The refusal, if any, of Federal reserve banks to rediscount for member banks paper which complied with the law in the most minute particulars, but did not fully comply with some arbitrary ruling of the Federal Reserve Board.

(l) The refusal, if any, of Federal reserve banks to make loans to member banks secured by Liberty bonds when requested to do so.

(m) The unwisdom and conspicuous profligacy of the announced policy of the Federal Reserve System and banks to spend any amount of money to collect checks on nonmember banks greatly in excess of a normal exchange charge, rather than to pay the banks for such service, and by what right the Federal reserve banks now propose to use the surplus, which at least in part belongs to the Government and consequently to the people thereof, for the coercion and oppression of certain citizens thereof.

(n) The method of handling clearance deposit accounts and the "float" connected therewith.

Seventh. Whereas for many years there was great agitation and grave concern manifested throughout the country over the alleged concentration of financial power in the hands of a few men in Wall Street—the so-called "Money Trust"; and

Whereas the Federal Reserve System was held out as the cure for this unhealthy concentration of power, by dividing such financial power and control into 12 widely separated banks in different sections, and in the hands of 12 responsible boards of directors, where such power would be readily responsive to the varying mutations of the public needs and opinion: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress be further called upon to investigate the concentration of power in the hands of the Federal Reserve Board to a greater degree and in the hands of fewer men than could ever have been the case under the old régime, and how and to what extent this power has been usurped and used.

Eighth. And be it further resolved, That adequate assurances be given witnesses testifying in this investigation that they will not be thereafter penalized by reason of such testimony, but will enjoy full immunity from prosecution or persecution, and that such investigating committee be given full power to summon witnesses and compel testimony.

Ninth. And whereas it now appears to be in the minds of certain officials of the Federal Reserve System that authority is granted by the Federal reserve act to the Federal Reserve Board to regulate the conduct of nonmember State banks and to force such banks into business relations with the Federal Reserve System, as is evidenced by their statements in connection with the announcements of the enforced universal par clearance policy.

Therefore be it further resolved, That Congress is hereby petitioned to make appropriate amendment to the Federal reserve act, clarifying the provisions thereof and making it plain that nothing therein contained shall be construed as giving the Federal Reserve System, or the Federal Reserve Board, or the Federal reserve banks any right of control over nonmember State banks, this having been clearly the original intention of the law.

Tenth. And be it further resolved, That Congress is hereby petitioned to pass an appropriate amendment to the Federal reserve law to the effect that Federal reserve banks shall be specifically prohibited from handling either from deposit or for collection checks drawn upon any bank which is not either a member of some Federal reserve bank, this being undoubtedly the purpose of the Congress in the law as enacted. Such prohibition, however, shall not apply to checks given in settlement of obligations due to the Government of the United States.

Eleventh. Be it further resolved, That Congress is requested to make such other and further amendments to said Federal reserve act, as the result of the investigation herein requested may develop to be necessary and desirable, in order that the said act may achieve its original purposes and be of greater benefit and usefulness than heretofore, and so that it may be no longer possible for an instrument of great good to be used as a weapon of oppression. To this end the sentiment of member banks should be ascertained as to eliminating the entire clearing functions of the Federal reserve banks.

Twelfth. Be it further resolved, That all banks in the United States be furnished with a copy of these resolutions and requested to express their opinion thereof. That copies be also sent to the entire membership of the Congress of the United States.

Thirteenth. Be it further resolved, That the American Bankers' Association and all State bankers' associations are hereby called upon to render all possible aid in this movement for an investigation and in securing the other relief herein suggested.

Fourteenth. Be it further resolved, That all State banking departments be requested to take this matter up officially.

National and State Bankers' Protective Association, president, Chas. de B. Claiborne, Whitney-Central National Bank, New Orleans, La. (largest bank in New Orleans); first vice president, Woods Cones, Cones State bank, Pierce, Nebr.; second vice president, Percy L. Lang, Waverly, N. Y.; third vice president, Martin T. Nelson, Citizens' State bank, Ordway, Colo.; fourth vice president, John Hirning, Pierre, S. Dak.; secretary and treasurer, L. R. Adams, Bankers' Trust Co., Atlanta, Ga.; first secretary, J. A. Ormond, Marianna, Fla.; second secretary, L. J. McGinity, Lebanon, S. Dak.; third secretary, J. P. Palmer, Omaha, Nebr.

There is to be an assistant secretary from each Federal reserve district.

Following the meeting of February 6 the organization was extended to cover the whole United States, and the National and State Bankers' Protective Association met at Washington May 3, 4, 5, and 6, and reaffirmed and readopted the foregoing resolutions and have now entered upon a nation-wide campaign of protest and have gone before the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives demanding that Congress shall investigate the whole subject from the passage of the Federal reserve act down to date.

As we have seen, they have resolved that all Senators and Congressmen, without regard to party, institute an official investigation of the administration of the Federal reserve act since its passage in general and with regard specifically to the following details:

They have brought witnesses thousands of miles from various parts of the country and have established with the most indubitable evidence that a rule of absolute tyranny prevails in many parts of the country. The facts disclosed and revelations made are astounding, surpassing all possible belief that such things could exist anywhere outside of Russia under the Czar.

For the information of the public, I shall incorporate some of the testimony given before the Rules Committee.

In the case of the Cones State Bank, of Pierce, Nebr., for example, following the refusal of the officers of that institution to sign an agreement with the Omaha branch of the Federal reserve bank, agents of the Federal reserve bank made a practice of accumulating checks drawn upon the bank by its depositors until, in at least one instance, the amount of the checks was for $10,000 more than the total cash reserve the bank was required by law to maintain, and then of demanding that the bank, without prior notice, pay cash across the counter for the full amount of the checks presented.

The capital of this particular bank is but $50,000 and its total deposits $750,000. On this basis the bank is required by law to maintain a cash balance of $25,000. The Federal reserve bank agent presented at one time checks to the amount of $31,900 to this bank and demanded a full cash payment of that amount, threatening to protest the checks and to discredit the bank with its depositors if this were refused.

A draft upon an Omaha bank, where the Cones State Bank had a reserve deposit, was refused by the Federal reserve agents. They demanded cash and immediate payment. And the "hard-boiled" methods of the Federal reserve agents caused the chairman of the House Rules Committee hearing this testimony to compare their tactics to the banking manners of the late and notorious Jesse James, who flourished in that same region.

The Federal reserve bank agents came to the bank "in a high-powered automobile," according to the affidavits, "armed with revolvers," and displaying them after they entered the bank and demanded the $31,900. A large number of affidavits from the officers of this and other banks were submitted.

A depositor swore to an affidavit that, being a witness of the performance of these "Government men" in demanding this cash payment, he had been alarmed and stampeded into the thought that the Government was withdrawing its money from the bank and that there was a run upon the bank.

There are known to be hundreds of similar cases, probably there are thousands of them, but most of them are afraid to speak.

We have noted also that they have asked for an investigation of the extent to which inflation of the currency by the Federal Reserve Board is responsible for the high cost of living, as charged by Dr. Wiley and other eminent authorities.

It is now generally conceded that the Federal reserve note is only a 40-cent dollar; that at least 60 per cent of our present prices have resulted from the practically unlimited issue of Federal reserve notes, amounting now to $3,300,000,000, or upward of $30 per capita for every man, woman, and child in the United States, and the maladministration of the Federal reserve bank by the Federal Reserve Board. Of the astounding extent of the inflation since the armistice was signed there is no possible doubt, according to the statement of the Federal Reserve Board itself, for in their bulletin of May 1 they say:

A review of the first four months of 1920 indicates very little progress toward a reduction of either commodity prices or credit volume. The best that can be said is that the rate of increase in both has been slowed down. The usual credit liquidation of January and February did not occur this year, and while during February the steadily rising indices of commodity prices halted, or even showed signs of declining, they have resumed their upward course during March and April, accompanied by increasing bank loans, in spite of a decreasing volume both of the Government debt and of Government securities owned or carried by the banks.

In spite, then, of the substantial increase in rates for both short and long credit which followed the January increase in Federal reserve bank rates, no general improvement in either price or credit expansion has since been effected. When we realize that in another few weeks southern harvests will begin, and that in another four months we shall be in the autumn period, when trade and crop moving demand an increased volume of credit, it is important that both bankers and business men should carefully study the situation at once, calmly but frankly, to see what can and should be done to prepare for these demands and to effect, in the meantime, not only a prevention of further credit and price inflation but a measurable reduction of both.

In the 19 months when we were at war, the expansion of national-bank loans was 16 per cent. In the same 19 months commodity prices, Bureau of Labor index, increased 20 per cent.

From the call March 5, last year, to February 28 this year national-bank loans expanded by $2,303,000,000, or 24 per cent. This was two and one-half times the rate of growth during our participation in the war, with all the tremendous Government loan issues and nearly four times the average yearly rate of the last 30 years, including the four war years. As the national-bank loans are about 45 per cent of the total loans of all banks, this means an expansion for the entire country of about $5,200,000,000, a sum that might well have been considered incredible if it had been predicted a year ago.

Can any intelligent man read these words, to say nothing about writing them—if any member of the board did write them—without at least suspecting the cause of this mad inflation?

Let me call your attention to the fact that the amount of gold in the country April 1, 1919, was $3,092,000,000, and that on April 1, 1920, it amounted only to $2,662,000,000. In other words, our loss in gold during the year was $430,000,000.

The amount of Federal reserve notes in circulation April 18, 1919, was $2,698,000,000, while now outstanding April 16, 1920, was $3,260,000,000, or there had been an increase of $561,000,000 during the year just passed.

In other words, we exchanged $430,000,000 of 100-cent dollars for $561,000,000 of 40-cent dollars, and put the greater part of this $561,000,000 of 40-cent dollars, possibly all of them, into the reserves of our banks.

Here was the reserve basis; here was the direct cause of that astounding increase of loans amounting to over $5,000,000,000, "a sum" which the Federal Reserve Board said in their bulletin "might well have been considered incredible if it had been predicted a year ago."

And yet anyone who knew anything about the principles involved could have predicted this increase in bank credit with mathematical certainty. Indeed, under the circumstances it could not possibly have been otherwise.

But will it be objected that the member banks could not use those notes as reserves?

You will find upon investigation that these notes, in obedience to Gresham's law, are constantly crowding the gold out of the member banks, while States like New York and Pennsylvania, the leading financial and commercial States of the Union, have already passed laws providing that their State banks may hold Federal reserve notes as reserves. Of course, if all the State banks are using these notes as reserve, as they have a right to, even without the statutes, these notes, though they may not have been declared to be legal tender, are economically legal tender because used as reserves.

A studied attempt has been made by the Government to make the people believe that these notes are as good as gold and, therefore, are fit for reserves.

The Federal Reserve Board in its bulletin of July, 1916, recommended that these Federal reserve notes be made legal tender, because they urged that they have the power to make them lawful reserves of member banks.

Upon the appearance of that bulletin, Mr. Fowler expressed himself as follows. Now, remember that these words were uttered by him in a speech in 1916, now four years ago. What he than said has more than come true:

ADDRESS ON THE GOLD STANDARD ENDANGERED BY THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK ACT, BY HON. CHARLES N. FOWLER, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FOR 16 YEARS AND CHAIRMAN OF THE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE FOR 8 YEARS, JULY 21, 1916.

Though some of the ends sought by the framers of the Federal reserve bank act were desirable in themselves, the mistakes made and the economic laws violated in the undertaking compel the conclusion that it were a thousandfold better that the act had never been passed.

The framers of the Federal reserve act pretended to seek to give the country a currency that would automatically adjust itself to the ever-varying demands of trade, rising and falling with the tides of commerce, as the seasons came and went. But from the day that the act became operative to this hour there has been one constant, steady stream of circulation poured into the channels of trade, in season and out of season, until we now have $39 per capita of circulation, as against only $34.35 January 1, 1914, when the act actually became operative. The United States Federal reserve bank notes now outstanding aggregate $180,000,000.

There was only $34 per capita when the Federal reserve act was passed in 1913. It is now $56 per capita, or $22 more—almost double what it was when the act was passed. There is just $30 per capita of Federal reserve notes alone now outstanding, which is more than a fulfillment of the prophetic fears expressed in this speech.

If we had had such a bank currency as they have in Canada, the variation from maximum to minimum would range from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 during the summer and fall as compared with the winter months, for the conditions prevailing here justify the conclusion that while in Canada the variation ranges from $4 to $5 per capita throughout the year, our variation would range from $3 to $4 per capita. However, under the Federal reserve bank act there has been no contraction of our circulation whatever, but expansion, expansion, expansion!

He who can not see overwhelming disaster in the continuation of present conditions must be utterly blind to all the lessons of history.

Tragic as are the portents of this mad expansion to any sane mind acquainted with the monetary past, the Federal Reserve Board, not content with the use of the United States Federal reserve notes in 25,000 State banking institutions as reserves, recommended in their bulletin of July, 1916, that these United States Federal reserve bank notes be made legal tender, for they urged an amendment of the Federal reserve act in these words:

"Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members the Federal Reserve Board shall have power from time to time by a general ruling covering all districts alike to permit member banks—

"1. To carry in the Federal reserve banks of their respective districts any portion of their reserves now required by section 19 of this act to be held in their own vaults.

"2. To count as part of their lawful reserve Federal reserve notes of their own district not exceeding in the aggregate an amount equal to 5 per cent of their net demand deposits."

That is, the member banks can make these debts, these demands for gold, a part of their legal reserve, they therefore of necessity become a part of the legal tender of the country.

The astounding thing about this proposal of the Federal Reserve Board is that it will cost the member banks just as much to carry this wind and water reserve, this false pretense of a reserve, as to carry gold itself.

Think of this just a moment. This legislation is urged in the face of the appalling fact that we now have in this country $1,100,000,000 of mere paper promises to pay, which are now being used as bank reserves, that is, there are $750,000,000 national bank notes which are being treated indiscriminately as reserves by all of our State banking institutions and $346,000,000 of United States notes or greenbacks, making a total of $1,100,000,000. In addition to these paper promises there are $500,000,000 of silver certificates, or a total of $1,600,000,000 outside of gold that can be used as reserves, not one single dollar of which is fit to be used as a reserve.

Pass the amendment now proposed by the Federal Reserve Board, and then certainly the caption of the Federal reserve act should be rewritten, and the title should be "An act to increase the United States notes or greenbacks without limit." For this step is the beginning of the end.

How true these words are in the light of the operations of the Federal reserve banks since the armistice was signed November 11, 1918.

UNITED STATES NOTES OR GREENBACKS.

The gold reserve now lodged behind the $346,000,000 United States notes or greenbacks is $150,000,000. This is a reserve of 43.35 per cent. The amount of gold reserve required behind the United States Federal reserve bank notes is only 40 per cent.

An economic lie is just like any other lie in always demanding a bigger and still bigger lie to cover each preceding lie until the whole fabric of lies breaks down.

The attack upon the gold standard through the Federal reserve act is not quite so bold, not quite so obvious; but it is the more dangerous because more subtle and more likely to deceive until it is too late, when we have paid the penalty for our folly in committing this economic crime. This is our peril. This is our certain danger, and overwhelming disaster waits only upon time.

Gresham's omnipotent and never varying law, by which the poorer always drives out the better money, working with the certainty of the law of gravitation, has already been put into operation, and when conditions change and the times are favorable, our gold will be driven out of the country by shiploads, and the balloon of credit now being created by forcing the Federal reserve bank notes into circulation will explode, leaving only a sad recollection of our fools' paradise.

Could a more perfect description be given of present conditions even now?

There are some who ignorantly, and therefore foolishly, say that we do not need all the gold we now have. Note these facts and decide the question for yourself. The amount of gold now being used through the world for monetary purposes is in excess of $8,000,000,000. Our bank liabilities are now approximately 45 per cent of all the bank liabilities of the whole world; therefore if we had our share of the monetary gold we should have more than $3,000,000,000 of gold. But we have only $2,500,000,000, or we are $500,000,000 short of our proper share.

The trouble is that we are in the habit of comparing the gold that we have with that of Great Britain, Germany, Russia, or France, when we should compare what we have with what all the rest of the world has precisely as we are now compelled to compare our bank liabilities with the bank liabilities of all the rest of the world.

SILVER, GREENBACKS, AND FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES ARE ECONOMICALLY IDENTICALLY THE SAME THING.

A 40-cent silver dollar, a United States note or greenback with 43.35 per cent of gold behind it, and a United States Federal reserve note with 40 per cent of gold behind it are economically the same thing, and no man, by any course of sophistical reasoning can point out the slightest difference between them economically. For let it be set down as an eternal truth, that an increase in any one of them will have the same effect economically in the end as a corresponding increase of either of the other two, and that from this deadly peril there can be no possible escape except by discontinuance, as we have already learned, both in the case of greenbacks in 1876 and in the case of free silver in 1893.

RETIREMENT OF GREENBACKS.

Instead of taking steps which must inevitably lead to unlimited issue of United States notes in the form of United States Federal reserve notes or Federal reserve bank notes which are to become a part of the bank reserves of the country as fast as issued, and which the Federal Reserve Board now urge as a part of our legal tender money, we should have taken immediate and positive steps for the retirement of all United States notes or greenbacks outstanding, not only because they are a menace in themselves but because their presence teaches an economic lie—that a debt, that a demand for money, that a demand for gold, can itself be money, can itself be gold, or can even serve the purpose of a gold reserve for which it is itself a demand.

Not only that, but we should have forever fixed by statute a limitation of bank reserve to gold and gold alone.

The Bank of England act of 1844 contained a provision by which the bank could count silver as a part of its reserve up to 25 per cent, but the bank has never recognized anything but gold as fit for a reserve, and the result has been that the Bank of England, following this important, the essential, principle, has demonstrated to the world beyond all possible cavil that if any country hopes ever to become the financial center of the world gold must always be had for the current price of its use, expressed in the rate of interest without interference of forces set in motion by a violation of this all-important law of banking economies—that is, the absence of Gresham's law is essential to the attainment of this ambition.

England learned her lesson from 1800 to 1844, through many most bitter and seemingly never-ending experiences and, finally, overwhelming disaster.

We learned our first lesson from 1791 to 1832, when the slight differential of about 1 per cent in favor of silver drove all of our gold out of the country. We learned our second lessen from 1861 to 1879, when the United States notes or greenbacks kept us off of the gold standard for 18 years. We learned our third lessen from 1879 to 1893, when, through the siren call of free silver, we went to the very precipice of national repudiation. Are the American people such consummate fools as to venture once more into this malestrom of destruction?

THE DEMANDS FOR RESERVES AND THE DEMANDS FOR CURRENCY COME FROM ENTIRELY DIFFERENT SOURCES.

The movement or increase and decrease of gold is related wholly—yes, exclusively—to international commerce. Of course, there is an exception with regard to increase where a country produces gold, but I am speaking now economically of gold as a commercial commodity.

The movement or increase and decrease of currency is related wholly—yes, exclusively—to the demands of domestic trade.

There may be such an export of gold as to bring about acute and rapid liquidation which in turn would call for a far much greater expansion of cash. This demand for cash should be met by a conversion of commercial credits into current credits—cash—an operation that should be left wholly—yes, exclusively—to the banks and should in no way be directly related to the institution that is organized to control the movement of gold.

An apt illustration of the principle here announced, but cumbersome and uselessly expensive, was the conversion of $385,000,000 of commercial credits into current credits—cash—at the outbreak of the European war under the Aldrich-Vreeland Act.

On the other hand, there may be a large import of gold which would enter immediately into the channels of trade and primarily, if not permanently, perform the function of the cash of the country, and therefore correspondingly displace or reduce the amount of currency put into circulation as a natural result of the demands of trade.

The reserves of a country and the currency of a country when strictly performing their respective functions are diametrically the opposite of each other—the one is the redeemer and the other is the redeemed, and nothing whatever should be done to change their relative natures, for by so doing you interfere with the perfect performance of their allotted functions.

NEW YORK FEDERAL RESERVE BANK AN ILLUSTRATION.

While I have not discussed the matter with any member of the board of directors of the New York Federal reserve bank, the appalling danger of identifying these two entirely different elements—reserves and currency—in banking economics, I am confident, has already impressed itself upon the management of the New York Federal reserve bank. For, on July 7, this institution held $31,223,000 in greenbacks and silver certificates, demonstrating to a mathematical certainty that the banks of the country were already discriminating between real money—gold—and pretended money—greenbacks and silver certificates.

If this discrimination has already shown itself in these flush times, when gold is constantly coming into the country and more is promised, what may be expected when hundreds of millions of gold will have to be shipped out of the country—that is the question?

As to the fact, I challenge the board of directors of the New York Federal reserve bank to deny the above allegation. And, if I have stated a fact, I assert that it is their duty in the interest of truth and in the interest of the general welfare of the whole country to come forward at once and make confession of their trouble in keeping the poorer money of the country—greenbacks and silver certificates—from flooding them to the exclusion of the better money—gold.

If I have stated in the foregoing a fact, how could any intelligent man—that is, a man who is informed upon the principles and history of this question—if he is still sane, urge that we add still further to the quantity of the substitutes for gold by making the debts of the Federal reserve banks, their I O U's, a part of the legal tender of the country; that is, make the notes of the Federal Reserve banks legal reserves for all member banks?

But it may be urged that the Federal reserve notes are something more than debts of the Federal reserve banks.

Yes; we well remember that William J. Bryan, then Secretary of State, refused to give his support—that is, the votes he controlled in Congress—to the act unless the notes were issued by the United States Government. That is, that the notes should be the obligations of the Government—greenbacks—before they were turned over to the banks.

Not satisfied with waterlogging the Federal reserve notes with this deadly handicap, in their ignorance Congress further limited their usefulness as currency by throwing around them all the conditions—fatal impediments—under which the notes of the Imperial Bank of Germany were issued, and finally gave them their death blow—as currency—by burying them under a body of rules, regulations, and restrictions that utterly destroyed them for the purpose for which the public supposed they were created, an elastic currency, which would reflect the ever-varying demands of trade, instead of a sodden mass of I O U's ever on the increase, but never decreasing.

AN IRREVOCABLE TRUTH.

Let it be remembered as an eternal economic truth that every act, every paragraph, every sentence, every word, every syllable, that is used to change or convert a true bank credit instrument into paper coin, or make it perform the function of coin, correspondingly and identically to the same degree, destroys its virtue and usefulness as a credit instrument and makes it to the same degree and directly in the same proportion, the deadly and destructive enemy of the very coin whose nature it is made by statute to approximate or assume.

This is the fateful feature of the Federal reserve notes or the Federal reserve bank notes. And the result will be inevitably identical with the consequences which followed this experiment in Great Britain from 1800 to 1844, or during a period of 44 years prior to the passage of the English bank act.

THE THREE GREATEST LESSONS OF FINANCIAL AND BANKING HISTORY.

The three most clearly demonstrated facts, the three established principles of fundamental importance in the financial and banking history of the world, are:

First. That there should be one single central reserve and that reserve should consist of gold, and gold alone, and that the function of creating currency out of credit should not be identified with or a part of the central reserve system.

Second. That the best and cheapest kind of currency in the world is "bank-credit currency," and that it should spring into being in the regular course of business, precisely as checks do, and be redeemed daily at the counter of the bank of issue and through the clearing houses precisely as checks are, for they are identical in principle—both are bank credit, both are I O U's—the one, the depositor's check, being order credit; the other, the bank notes, being current credit.

Third. That there should always be adequate facilities for the quickest possible redemption of all demand debts created in carrying on the trade and commerce of a country, such as the American clearing houses would constitute if located in every economic center and all perfectly coordinated.

These three demonstrated facts, these three great fundamental principles, recognized and followed to their logical conclusion, will unerringly lead us to adopt the "central gold" reserve system of England, the "bank-credit currency" system of Canada, and the clearing-house system of the United States. These three being combined, will give us the most natural, the simplest, soundest, the most economical, and the most efficient banking system in the world, and guarantee to us every natural advantage to become the financial center of the world.

CONVERSION OF COMMERCIAL CREDITS INTO CASH.

The framers of the Federal reserve act pretended to provide for the banks of the country additional credit resources by superimposing upon conditions which were the outgrowth of our own banking experiences a foreign scheme, an alien device wholly unsuited to our peculiar needs which could have been completely and perfectly met by the extension throughout the country of our clearing-house organizations, which are the most perfect banking instrumentalities ever yet developed.

Instead of this alien device, further involved and handicapped by 12 arbitrary locations, largely determined by political pull, where rediscounts might be obtained under the most impracticable set of rules and regulations conceivable, every bank in the United States should have been given the opportunity of obtaining at that credit center where it was in the habit of usually clearing its checks all such additional credit facilities as the exigencies of the seasons and times required, and in accordance with those banking practices which our own banking experience had approved. The business convenience of the banks of the country and the advantages of their customers demand this natural selection of credit centers, of which there are about 50 in the country, instead of the unnatural and arbitrary selection of 12 distinct points, largely determined by political pull.

Can anything more absurd be imagined than that the banks of Louisiana should be compelled to go to Atlanta or Dallas rather than to New Orleans for rediscount accommodations? But this is only a sample of this conglomerate of economic follies and absurd practices.

The framers of the act pretended that they wanted to take the control of the reserves from a few hands.

What they actually did do was to take the reserves held by 367 national banks located in 50 cities and acting as reserve agents for all other banks and place them in 12 banks located in 12 cities. Not only that, but the reserves now held by the 12 Federal reserve banks are controlled by the Federal Reserve Board of seven members, appointed by the President for a limited period of years and removable by the President at will without cause. Again, the Federal Reserve Board of seven members is empowered to remove all the directors of the 12 reserve banks upon cause stated.

Prof. Edward Sherwood Meade, of the University of Pennsylvania, said in 1916:

"The same party which Mr. Bryan led in 1896 against the money power has erected in the Federal Reserve Board a political money power, dominated by the President of the United States, which is far more potent than the imaginary combination of the past.

"The Federal Reserve Board can expand or contract the currency at will and without limit.

"They can fix the rate of interest the country over, raising or lowering it at pleasure.

"They can raise or lower the cash reserves of all the national banks.

"They can expand or contract the credit of every class of business man.

"They hold the power of life and death over every American business."

The London Statist of July 22, 1916, used this language:

"Every Government, the party in power, desires to maintain active trade conditions, not only because active trade helps to make it popular, but also because activity of trade is of benefit to the country, and with a presidential election coming on it is obvious that the present American Government will do all that it can do reasonably to maintain active conditions, and, if necessary, will set free the cash that is accumulating and is unused in the Federal reserve banks."

These certainly are nonpartisan and impartial judgments upon the political aspects of the Federal reserve bank act, and disclose the imminent danger always impending over the banking and business interests of the country so long as this act remains upon the statute books.

The words of the London Statist and Prof. Meade were largely prophetic, but the recent denunciation of the southern bankers at New Orleans was the result of observation and bitter experience and more than confirms the prophetic words of the Statist and professor.

The framers of the act planned and the Federal Reserve Board are doing everything in their power to take all the reserve from all the banks, leaving them nothing but Federal reserve bank notes in their stead, although during the past 25 years all the leading bankers of London, and all the English authorities in banking economics have been urging persistently, in season and out of season, that all banks should carry at least a 10 per cent cash reserve in gold in addition to what they held at the Bank of England. For many years Herr Havenstein, president of the Imperial Bank of Germany, as a result of his harrowing experience in trying to stem the tide of Gresham's law, has been urging identically the same thing upon all the banks of Germany. If this was a wise precaution in both Germany and Great Britain, it is a hundredfold more important in this country, considering our individual, independent banking system, composed as it is of about 30,000 separate units.

Since this was written an ignorant and subservient Congress has passed laws compelling all member banks to carry their reserves with the Federal reserve banks.

THE AMOUNT OF A CENTRAL RESERVE.

Under no circumstances should more than one-half to three-fifths of the required bank reserve, which should always be ample, be centralized, if we hope to maintain a solid foundation for our commercial credits which should be subjected to daily redemption, through our clearing houses in gold coin.

COST OF CURRENCY.

The framers of the Federal reserve act pretended that they would furnish the United States an economic currency, but an exhaustive investigation demonstrates the fact that it will cost the American people twice as much as that of Canada, where, all things considered, they have the best bank currency system in the world. The Federal reserve banking scheme, if made operative throughout the United States, would cost the American people more than $100,000,000 every year than a right banking system would.

UNIFIED SYSTEM CLAIMED.

The framers of the act claimed that they had provided a truly national banking system which all banks would enter immediately as a matter of choice. But just the reverse has happened. Antagonistic and competitive organizations have sprung up all over the country, and the number of banks organized under State laws were seven times greater than those organized under the Federal Reserve System down to January 1, 1916. Down to that date, or within the two years that the law had been in operation, 2,925 banks organized under State laws while only 505 organized with national charters and subjected themselves to the irksome rules of the Federal reserve act. Since January 1, 1916, 60 national banks have left the Federal Reserve System, while only 62 have taken national charters. But if the number of banks that have taken State charters since January 1 maintains the average of the two preceding years, 856 banks have taken State charters, or upon an average of more than 15 to 1 have become State banks. In other words, our banking, instead of becoming more unified and completely nationalized, is rapidly becoming denationalized and correspondingly decentralized and weakened. Moreover, thousands of national banks are now arranging to leave the system as soon as they can do so at the least possible cost and disadvantage to themselves. The hatred of this foreign, this alien, device is intense and well-nigh universal.

Through patriotism during the war, coercion, and fear of persecution many have joined since the war. See bankers' resolutions.

BANK REFORMS DEMANDED.

True bank reform demanded a perfectly coordinated and completely unified system, in which every bank should have become an economic unit of one harmonious whole.

The Federal reserve bank act has produced diametrically the opposite result; the relative number outside the system is gaining rapidly every day by national banks leaving at great loss to themselves and fewer joining each month.

True bank reform demanded that our banking and business interests should be removed from all political influence and control as far and as completely as possible.

The Federal reserve bank is the most pernicious, gigantic, and potential political machine ever constructed through the forms of law.

See bankers' protests and resolutions.

True bank reform demanded that we should have a currency that automatically adjusted itself to the every varying demands of trade, day in and day out, season in and season out, year in and year out, precisely as it does in Canada.

The Federal reserve bank is gradually adding to the quantity of our circulation and correspondingly inflating our credit, a fact that conclusively demonstrates that the Federal reserve notes bear no relation whatever to the currency demands of trade. This fact is rendered obvious since the rediscounts only amount to $20,000,000, while the outstanding Federal reserve notes amount to $180,000,000. (July, 1916.)

See excerpts from bulletin of the Federal Reserve Board, May, 1920.

True bank reform demanded that we should have an adequate single central gold reserve, which should become the economic heart of our financial and banking system, adequate to meet all the extraordinary demands of credit and efficiently and effectively aid in determining the international movements of gold.

The Federal reserve banks have already exhausted the legal margin of credit.

The Federal Reserve Board, confronted with an enigma and an impossible task, finally, in utter disregard of the terms of the act, created, in their desperation, by abstracting funds from the 12 banks, virtually another institution, to perform the major function of a central organism, which in the United States should consist of the entire central reserve, having $1,250,000,000 to $1,500,000,000 of gold, instead of the so-called settlement fund of $100,000,000 for which there is no authority in law.

True bank reform demanded that steps be taken to retire all the United States notes or greenbacks outstanding and forever fix gold alone as a fit reserve for the banks to hold.

The Federal reserve banks are adding to our permissible reserves every day, and promise to increase them without limit if the Federal Reserve Board succeeds in their present legislative purposes. But whether they do or not, all history teaches that the result must be the same in the end. There can be no escape from it, because it is inherent in the very nature of the structure and in the very character of the notes.

True bank reform demanded a banking system founded upon the eternal principles of banking economics and those bank practices which had been tested and approved by 125 years of American banking experience.

The Federal reserve banks were organized in utter defiance of the principles of banking economics and in complete disregard of the lessons taught us by our own experience, and, contrary to the processes of Anglo-Saxon civilization, is an attempt to superimpose upon conditions essentially peculiar to ourselves, a foreign scheme, an alien device wholly unadapted to our particular needs.

The Imperial bank-note system was adopted, although Germany had already these notes, legal tender, as a matter of necessity in 1911.

True bank reform demanded a simple, natural, and adequate central gold reserve, created precisely as it is created by the members of a clearing house and utilized with the same facility and effectiveness through a perfectly coordinated and completely unified national organization of all the clearing houses located at the natural credit centers of the country.

The Federal reserve bank organization is the most complicated, the most conglomerate, the most mixed mess, that ever found expression through the forms of law—a veritable economic monstrosity, the natural offspring of malevolence, exhibited in a legislative effort to destroy New York as our national economic center—

They put all New Jersey in the Philadelphia district and western Connecticut in the Boston district—of partisanship, exhibited by the appointment of Wilson Democrats only on the reserve board—

Down to May, 1920, not a single person had been appointed upon the Federal Reserve Board who was not a Wilson Democrat—of sectionalism by placing 5 of the 12 banks in a section of the country doing only one-fourth of the business—

Richmond, Atlanta, Dallas, Kansas City, and St. Louis—of ignorance of economic law by issuing an unlimited amount of United States Government paper; and of utter disregard of the vital lessons taught us through our own experience in banking by breaking down and displacing a well-nigh perfect banking organism with a mechanism wholly at variance with our demonstrated needs.

True bank reform demanded that our banking system produce the most economical and the safest currency in the world—a currency as cheap as any other bank credit and always as good as gold because currently redeemed in gold through our clearing houses.

The Federal reserve bank issues are the most expensive and the most dangerous currency in the world. This currency costs approximately twice as much as the right kind of a banking currency would, and it is undermining the foundations of our commercial credits because it is being used as bank reserves, thereby driving gold out of the banks and consequently out of the country. History is only again repeating itself. Gresham's deadly law is again vindicating itself.

To-day the whole country is in actual terror because of a threatening commercial catastrophe brought on by an utter disregard of this law.

When all the questions involved are duly considered, it can not be said that there is one single right thing about the Federal reserve bank act; for, while the framers of the act sought to do some things that were right in themselves, through their evident ignorance of economic law and the lessons of history, they have produced a measure which must prove the most stupendous economic blunder ever committed in the commercial life of this Nation, unless its consequences are averted by tearing it from the statute books before it is too late.

To say that the Federal reserve bank act has for the first time in our history so mobilized bank reserves as to prevent future panics is utterly false, because one of the greatest difficulties ever encountered by American banking—the crisis resulting from the outbreak of the European war, August 1, 1914—was met, overcome, and successfully passed by the Aldrich-Vreeland law.

PRESIDENT WILSON CONTRADICTED BY FACTS.

Referring to this great crisis, President Wilson said, at Detroit, July 11, 1916, "It (the Federal reserve bank act) saved the country from a ruinous panic when the war came on."

But his son-in-law, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in reviewing the situation growing out of the European war, used these words in his report to Congress, December 7, 1914:

"This has been accomplished notwithstanding the fact that the Federal Reserve System authorized by the act of December 23, 1913, was at that time only in process of formation, and was unable to render any service in the situation."

In these words Secretary McAdoo admits that the Aldrich-Vreeland law, unaided, carried us through the crisis of 1914.

Is it possible that the President did not know the truth about so important a matter? Is it possible that if he did know the truth, desiring to take advantage of an utterly false statement, he ventured to assume that the American people were such a lot of fools as not to know the facts in the case?

The economic effect of the Aldrich-Vreeland law which, unaided, carried us through the greatest crisis in our history, was to mobilize our bank reserve—the ability to convert commercial credit into cash—just as completely and effectively as the Federal reserve bank could possibly do. And, moreover, the Aldrich-Vreeland law could not have produced, if allowed to remain, any of the fatal results inherent in the Federal reserve act.

THE TWO NECESSARY RESULTS SOUGHT.

When the Democratic Party came into power the American people, through agitation, experience, and discussion, had already arrived at two very distinct and very concrete conclusions.

First, that there should be a general centralization of reserves—gold reserves, I mean.

Second, that there should be a greater adaptability of our bank credit to the ever-varying needs of trade.

But the method of securing these two important, these two essential, ends had not yet been subjected to any intelligent thinking whatever, simply because there had been no intense interest in the method of securing them. There had been no discussions of the subject by which errors would have been eliminated precisely as they were eliminated through the fiery furnace of debate to which the gold standard was subjected in 1896.

So general and universal was the agreement with regard to the centralization of reserves and the adaptation of bank credit to commercial needs that no one of standing who proposed remedial legislation failed to make these two purposes the central ideas of his plans.

Broadly considered from an economic point of view, the country would have been a thousandfold better off to-day to have continued as it was under the Aldrich-Vreeland law until the great reforms demanded could have been worked out through discussion, consideration, and due deliberation.

That necessary discussion, consideration, and deliberation by which the dross of error is eliminated should take place now, and the Republican Party will be untrue to its traditions if it does not join issue with the Democratic Party by attacking the Federal reserve bank act, which is only another form of "Greenbackism," "Free silverism," "Fiatism," "Bryanism."

Speaking of the Federal reserve act, after its passage, William J. Bryan said:

"The provision (in the Federal reserve act) in regard to the Government issue of the notes to be loaned to the banks is the first triumph of the people in connection with currency legislation in a generation. It is hard to overestimate the value of this feature of the bill. In the second place, the bill provides for Government control of this money (he does not know what money is); that is, controlled through a board composed of Government officials selected by the President with the approval of the Senate. This is another distinct triumph of the people, one without which the Government issue of the money (as if a debt could be money) would be largely barren."

No one but an economic idiot or a person who was totally ignorant of the history of banking economics could have uttered these words.

Correctly speaking, our gold coins are the only money we have, all other forms for circulation are nothing but currency which must be redeemed in gold to be kept as good as gold.

William J. Bryan was a "Greenbacker" before he was a "Free Silverite"; but he was always a "Fiatist." It is just as important to defeat William J. Bryan, "Greenbacker," the true author of the Federal reserve bank act in 1916, as it was to defeat William J. Bryan, the "Free Silverite" in 1896. And it is far more important to defeat him now, or his ideas embodied in the Federal reserve bank act, than it was to defeat him in 1900 and 1908 when the people repudiated him with overwhelming majorities.

The Federal reserve bank act is the same old bunco game by which the people are to be deceived and fooled into the belief that the Government can make money out of its debts. It is the very embodiment of the same old false pretense of the Democratic Party that the Government can make something out of nothing by its mere fiat.

The Federal reserve bank act is the very embodiment of that same old insane idea which has cursed the commercial world for centuries—that a debt which must be redeemed in reserve money to prove its goodness is itself good enough to be used as that selfsame reserve. Certainly, if one debt is good enough to be used for bank reserve, then all good debts are good enough to be used for bank reserves. This is the end; this is economic chaos.

If all the commercial nations of the world should enter into a conspiracy for the express purpose of devising some scheme by which they intended ultimately to take away our gold, they could not possibly conjure up anything that would so successfully accomplish their purpose as the Federal reserve act will, for in the end it will literally dynamite the gold out of the country.

Shall the Federal reserve bank act, which is the most subtle, the most deadly attack ever made upon the gold standard, go unchallenged until it culminates in our utter undoing—complete credit destruction, overwhelming commercial disaster? That is the question.

The following article by Mr. Fowler appeared September 17, 1919, in The Street:

HIGH PRICES AND THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

(By Hon. Charles N. Fowler, "the father of the Federal reserve act.")

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Hon. Charles N. Fowler retired from banking to enter Congress. He was a Member of the House of Representatives from New Jersey for 16 years; a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency for 14 years, and its chairman for 8 years.

In a speech in Congress on March 29, 1910, he proposed the establishment of the Federal reserve bank. His bill provided for (a) 28 individual and independent zones, which were all united in the Federal reserve bank; (b) departmental banking—that is, commercial business, savings business, and trust company business; (c) the issuance of notes according to the principle laid down by Alexander Hamilton in the charter of the First United States Bank; and (d) the centralization of 60 per cent of all our gold—just about what we have to-day.

The present article is a reply by Mr. Fowler to the recent statement made by the Hon. W. P. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, to Senator McLEAN, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, which declared that the operations of the Federal reserve banks had not resulted in increasing prices.

Prices have been increased because of some one of the following six reasons or because of the combination of some of them, or, possibly, a combination of all of them:

First. A great demand and short supply.
Second. Increase of wages.
Third. Shorter hours.
Fourth. Reduction of production.
Fifth. Overexpansion of credit.
Sixth. Inflation of the currency.

Passing over the first five, I shall speak only of the sixth, the inflation of the currency.

Prices may be increased by an inflation of the currency such as they now have in Russia, where inflation has nearly wiped out all the value currency ever had and prices are practically without limit. A lump of sugar costs about $5 and a pound of bread about $60 in rubles.

Inflation of the currency has occurred to a greater or lesser extent in all countries affected by the war, even the victorious countries—England, France, Italy, and the United States.

What we are directly and more particularly interested in, however, is to what extent prices have been made by the inflation of our own currency, or so-called money.

WHAT IS MONEY?

It may be well before we proceed any further to fix clearly in our mind what money is. The only true, the only real, money in the United States is the three billions of gold we now have; for gold alone is its own redeemer.

When you have in your possession a $5 gold coin, the United States Government does not owe you anything. That gold piece, hammered into the form of a spike, is worth just as much as when it bore the Government stamp, which added absolutely nothing whatever to its value, as all it possibly could do was to certify to the weight and fineness of the metal, which, in the form of a spike, is worth just as much at the United States Treasury as the $5 gold coin was when it first fell, shining from the United States Mint, with the stamp of the Government upon it.

How different when you have in your possession a Federal reserve note. You then have a Government debt, guaranteed by the bank. You have only a debt, an I O U, a demand for gold which the banks or the Government owe you and must pay you on demand. Therefore, it must be obvious to every intelligent person that the Federal reserve note is not money in any essential sense. It is only currency—a currency medium of exchange—as all our other circulation is, which must be redeemed in gold to be kept as good as gold. With this great fundamental truth constantly before our minds, let us proceed.

OUR CIRCULATION HAS INCREASED $2,376,000,000 IN FIVE YEARS.

When we speak of circulation we mean the amount of currency of the different forms of curency, gold, silver, and paper currency, outside of the United States Treasury and in the hands of the banks and the people. The amount of currency of different kinds in the United States, including the United States Treasury, is always much larger than the amount of circulation, and this distinction should be kept in mind.

On July 1, 1914, our circulation amounted to only $3,402,000,000. Our per capita circulation was $34.35.

On July 1, 1917, our circulation amounted to $4,763,000,000. Our per capita circulation was $45.74. There had been an increase in our circulation of $1,361,000,000.

On August 1, 1918, our circulation amounted to $5,559,000,000, or an increase of $795,000,000. The per capita circulation was then $52.44.

On August 1, 1919, our circulation was $5,778,000,000, or an increase of $219,000,000 and the per capita circulation was $54.40. We had had an increase in our circulation over that of 1914 of $2,376,000,000, or a per capita increase of $20.05.

MR. HARDING'S NEW METHOD.

Mr. Harding, not satisfied with the method by which the Treasury Department arrived at the amount of currency in circulation, fixes a new rule for himself in these words:

"The reserve money held by or for the Federal reserve banks serves, of course, as a basis of credit, but it forms no part of the currency in circulation."

Applying this rule, he presents a tabulated statement showing that the per capita circulation August 1, 1919, was only $45.16, instead of $54.40, the amount fixed by the Treasury Department.

But if the reserves in the Federal banks are to be deducted from the amount of the circulation, then the reserves held by the National and State banks in 1914 should also be deducted from the amount of circulation given by the Government. And instead of $34.35 per capita we should have had only $17.80 per capita, for the reserves then held by the banks amounted to $1,639,000,000 and the circulation, including this amount, was only $3,402,000,000.

Does Mr. Harding think that reserves held by National and State banks should be included in our circulation, but when they have been transferred to the Federal reserve banks that they should be excluded?

The Federal reserve banks, through the operation of the amendment of the Federal reserve act of June 21, 1917, more particularly, have taken from the banks of the country about $1,500,000,000 of gold coin and gold certificates which otherwise would have been held by the banks as reserves. Does it make any difference who holds these reserves so far as the amount of circulation is concerned?

Let us see. If the National and State banks should hold this $1,500,000,000, the circulation outside of the banks—that is, in the hands of the people—would not increase a single dollar. But if the $1,500,000,000 is held by the Federal reserve banks the circulation in the hands of the people might increase to nearly $4,000,000,000 through the issuance of Federal reserve notes in strict accordance with law.

And yet, in the light of this simple truth, Mr. Harding, through a course of reasoning peculiar to himself, in making up his circulation statement for April 1, 1917, included $1,989,000,000 gold coin and gold certificates held by the National and State banks; but when he made up his circulation statement for August 1, 1919, he excluded $2,100,000,000 of gold coin and gold certificates held by the Federal reserve banks.

CASH RESERVES DWINDLING.

For the purpose of demonstrating (a) how slender our bank cash reserves now are, and (b) the exact amount of money in the hands of the people on July 1, 1914, and December 1, 1918, I submit the following statement:

Amount of deposits in and cash held by all banks.

July 1, 1914:
Deposits	$17,066,000,000
Cash held	1,639,000,000
July 1, 1917:
Deposits	24,891,000,000
Cash held	1,502,000,000
July 1, 1918:
Deposits	27,808,000,000
Cash held	896,000,000

The reader should note the startling increase in deposits each year and the tragic decrease in cash held.

It will be observed, first, that the cash held on July 1, 1914, was about 10 per cent of deposits; second, that the cash held July 1, 1917, was about 6 per cent; and third, that the cash held July 1, 1918, was about 3 per cent. In the same ratio it will soon disappear altogether, excepting, of course, Federal reserve notes.

Of the $896,000,000 held in 1918, $129,000,000 was in Federal reserve notes. But I suppose that a cash reserve of only 3 per cent in "chips and wetstones" will not arouse the slightest interest in the minds of the manufacturers of paper currency.

CURRENCY IN THE HANDS OF THE PEOPLE.

The amount of circulation outside of the banks and in the hands of the people July 1, 1914, was only $17.80. The amount of circulation outside of the banks and in the hands of the people July 1, 1918, was $44 per capita, or two and one-half times as much as it was in 1914.

The total amount of our circulation August 1, 1918, was $5,559,000,000 and the amount held by all banks July 1, 1918, was $896,000,000, leaving $4,663,000,000 in the hands of the people, or $44 per capita.

EXPANSION OF FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES.

That the reader may appreciate the real situation let him note and remember that on April 1, 1917, there were only $357,000,000 of Federal reserve notes issued; that on August 1, 1918, $2,024,000,000 had been issued; that on August 1, 1919, $2,705,000,000 had been issued.

INCREASE IN TOTAL AMOUNT OF CURRENCY IN THE COUNTRY.

The total amount of currency in the country July 1, 1914, was only $3,738,000,000. July 1, 1917, there was $5,407,000,000. August 1, 1918, there was $6,896,000,000. August 1, 1919, there was $7,525,000,000. Or there had been an increase in the period of five years $3,787,000,000, of which about $1,100,000,000 was in gold and the balance, or $2,700,000,000, was in Federal reserve notes.

The total amount of currency of all kinds in the country in 1914 was $3,738,000,000. The increase has been $3,787,000,000, or more than 100 per cent in five years.

FACTORS INVOLVED IN CURRENCY INFLATION.

The amount of currency in any country at any given time is of little consequence when considered by itself.

The amount of currency in France prior to the war was upward of $50 per capita, about three times what it was in Great Britain, and yet, if anything, prices were generally a trifle lower in France than they were in Great Britain. The explanation was mainly due to the fact that the people in Great Britain paid practically all their bills by check, while the people of France paid their bills with bank notes.

When considering the question of currency and its influence upon prices we must take into account—

(a) How much currency there is in a country at a given time and of what it consists.

(b) What the increase has been within a given time and of what the increase consists.

(c) What the habits of the people are.

(d) What use is made of the different forms of credit currency as distinguished from the gold currency.

(e) Is gold alone being used for bank reserves; or, are debts, demands for gold (Federal reserve notes, etc.), being used as a basis for more debts, more demands for gold?

(f) To what extent is gold required for reserves?

(g) The banking system of the country.

CIVIL WAR INFLATION.

At the close of the Civil War the exact amount of inflation was determined daily by the sale of the Government credit for gold. At one time it took $2.35 of Government credit to buy $1 of gold. This difference gradually disappeared, and by January 1, 1879, we were again on the gold standard.

OUR INFLATION IS FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

To-day, by agreements with foreign countries and through an arbitrary control of the movement of gold, we have prevented the sale of our circulation for gold; but we are nevertheless on a credit basis, and the inflation due to this fact ranges somewhere from 25 to 50 per cent, and this amount, whatever it is, has been added to the price of everything.

CAUSES OF THE INFLATION.

It may be said, with some truth, that this vast increase of our circulation and the consequent inflation has been due to the necessities of the World War. Even if that were true, it is no less important that we should deflate our currency and get back to the gold standard price as soon as practicable.

But I am one of those who believe that our inflation and the consequent increase of prices are due in a large measure to the following reasons:

(a) To the structure and use of the Federal Reserve Banking System.

(b) To the nature and use of the Federal reserve notes.

When the Federal reserve bank was established it was designed and declared to be a conservative force. It was to take the same place in the United States that the Bank of England occupies in Great Britain. As a matter of fact, its position in certain respects at least, has been just the reverse of that of the Bank of England.

Instead of conserving and controlling credit by the exercise of a constricting influence it has from the very start been booming and expanding credit, acting always as a power of inflation rather than a power of conservation and limitation.

The Bank of England rate of discount has always been, in normal times, higher than the commercial rate of discount, and therefore the bank has always been the guardian and jealous protector of commercial credit, because the bank was its last resort, and it ever stood as a protest to overexpansion.

The Federal reserve bank rate has always been distinctly lower than the commercial rate, and therefore a constant source of expansion and inflation of credit.

AN ECONOMIC LIE THAT MUST LEAD TO COMMERCIAL DISASTER.

But what is a still more serious matter for consideration is the nature and growing use of the Federal reserve notes. They are, primarily, United States notes, or greenbacks, issued by the Government, but, secondarily, guaranteed by the banks. Since the Government never has any considerable amount of liquid assets, and the banks should have little else than liquid assets, the guarantor is incomparably better equipped for liquidation purposes than the maker. The Government's ability to pay lies in the power of taxation, which works slowly. The bank's power to pay lies in collecting current accounts, a resource which responds quickly.

Largely because of the character of these Federal reserve notes, the people have, generally, speaking, come to believe an economic lie, and that is this: That these notes are as good as gold and therefore fit for bank reserves. This fatal fallacy has already found expression in the passage by some of the States of statutes making the Federal reserve notes lawful reserves for their banks. New York and Pennsylvania have both passed such statutes. The economic effect of such use of these notes is to make them legal tender, even though the Federal law has not yet declared them to be legal tender.

According to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, on July 1, 1918, there were 7,705 national banks, with liabilities, outside of capital and surplus, of $10,038,000,000. There were 21,175 State banking institutions, with liabilities, outside of capital and surplus, of $17,750,000,000.

Certainly, these 21,175 State banks will need considerable reserves, and as time goes on and they become accustomed to holding the Federal reserve notes as reserves, and looking to the Federal reserve banks as the cure-all and save-all, they will hold nothing else, except subsidiary coins.

The act of June 21, 1917, by which the Federal reserve banks took over practically all the gold held by the member banks (as a war measure, as I then supposed), will continue to keep them stripped of all true reserves (gold) and drive them to holding as cash reserves only Federal reserve notes.

Few, if any, member banks will think any further than the profits of their institutions. So long as they can exchange their 6 per cent paper for notes and pay 4 per cent interest, thereby making 2 per cent, you will find banks working overtime and often in collusion with each other to keep out their notes.

I knew of several national banks years ago that arranged with trust companies to carry their national-bank notes as reserves, although the profit on the circulation was averaging only about 1 per cent. I remember one trust company that had $3,000,000 bank notes at the bottom of its reserve, and kept them there because of an arrangement with certain national banks.

Bank notes, which are held as reserves and upon which banks can make 2 per cent interest, differ in no way from cheaper or poorer money which can be bought at 98 and the proceeds used to liquidate debts. This constitutes the very essence of Gresham's law.

Let it be remembered that all business is founded upon selfishness, and that banking is the ultrarefinement of business.

In the light of these facts and all the experience of the banking world for hundreds of years, what becomes of such idle words of Mr. Harding when he says: "Reserve notes are not legal tender, nor do they count as reserve money for member banks"?

The member banks have been told and taught that they do not need any reserves, and what they had has been taken away from them by statute. In the light of this fact, what becomes of his words about reserve notes being held as reserves by member banks? Of course, the banks of the country must hold out cash resources for their daily needs. But they are told that it doesn't make any difference whether these cash reserves are gold or demands for gold.

BANK RESERVES ARE ESSENTIAL.

The unsound, the insane idea that banks need not carry any true reserves (gold) has been promulgated so long without a protest that a tragic number of bankers begin to think that it is true. And if this thought continues and prevails, we are now sowing to the wind and the country will reap the whirlwind.

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle had the following in its leading editorial July 19, 1919:

"With a gold reserve of only 35 per cent against deposit liabilities, the absolute minimum allowed by law (this means, be it remembered, that the reserve bank is holding the 13 per cent reserve of the member banks, has only 35 per cent of the 13 per cent in the shape of gold, cutting, therefore, the gold reserve of the member banks in the Federal reserve bank down to the low figure of 4.55 per cent), and a gold reserve of no more than 44 per cent against the Federal reserve notes in actual circulation—or only 4 per cent above the legal minimum—the New York Federal reserve bank is in no position to intervene either in aid of call-loan accommodation or of any other branch of the money market. It has reached the limit of its functioning in that regard. And the sooner that fact is recognized and everyone adjusts his affairs accordingly the better it will be all around."

By this authoritative statement we learn that the member banks of the New York Federal reserve bank are carrying a reserve of only 4.55 per cent, and this in New York, the now boasted financial center of the world.

It is delightful to live in a fool's paradise—as long as it lasts.

NOTES OF IMPERIAL BANK OF GERMANY.

In 1901 precisely the same use of the notes of the Imperial Bank of Germany that is now being made of the Federal reserve notes led me to prophesy that the German Government would be compelled, sooner or later, to make the notes of the Imperial Bank legal tender, and this was done by the German Government in 1911, just 10 years later. Identically the same fate awaits us unless we call a halt and get back to the gold standard by eliminating the wind now in our credit system and changing our opinion of and the consequent use of the Federal reserve notes. Allusion has here been made to the Imperial Bank of Germany because the note-issuing function of the Federal reserve bank is identical with that of the Imperial Bank of Germany and because we are following in her footsteps.

GRESHAM'S LAW.

Gresham's law, by which the poorer money always drives out the better, although temporarily held in suspense by the arbitrary control of gold, is already in force in this country, and when the time comes for it to act—when there is untrammeled commerce in gold—it will be as certain and powerful in its operation as the law of gravitation, and no human device, though it may retard, can avert its inevitable consequences.

But will it be said we need have no fear for the future because, forsooth, the world is our debtor in so great an amount? What would you say about a physician who, because his patient was in the prime of life and in perfect physical condition, told him to do whatever he pleased and if he desired break all the laws of health; or what would you think of a man who ordered a ship built to cross the ocean only on a smooth sea and with favoring winds, instead of one to cross on any kind of a sea and against any kind of wind?

GREAT BRITAIN'S POSITION.

Great Britain is studying day and night, indeed is working overtime, to find out how she can get back to the powerful and all-important position she occupied prior to the war, when she conducted and controlled the only free market for gold in the world.

This incomparable advantage in the world's commerce was maintained by the British bankers, although the Bank of England held only a small amount of gold, ranging from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000. This was comparatively an insignificant quantity of gold, considering the position of the Bank of England in the world's commerce, but this seeming miracle was achieved because they entertained no unsound views about the demands for gold, no insane idea about the nature of a debt. They repudiated the thought that a demand for gold could be treated and used as gold itself. They had learned by hard experience that a strong, unassailable financial position rested more upon sound economic opinion, and what was still more to the purpose, sound economic practices, than upon an unnecessarily huge quantity of gold.

WE CAN TAKE THE LEAD.

Owing to the present condition of the European countries and our own relatively strong position, it would be comparatively easy for us to get this dominant place in the commerce of the globe and make it practically impossible for England or any other country to take it away from us for a long, a very long time to come, or, indeed, ever, unless the world should change beyond the present limits of the imagination.

But this incomparable opportunity may be frittered away and utterly lost by believing this economic lie—that forsooth, because one thing is redeemed in another, therefore they are the same thing; in other words, that because the Federal reserve notes are redeemable in gold, therefore they are fit for bank reserves and that still more dismal, disastrous, fatal but certain end which is sure to follow in the wake of our present practices—fit for legal tender.

WAGE EARNERS ARE THE ONLY SUFFERERS FROM INFLATION.

Let us remember that it is the 90 or 95 per cent of the people who work and toil for wages in some form who are always the real and the greatest, if indeed not the only true sufferers from an inflated currency, for they have no way of protecting themselves, as the manufacturers, merchants, and bankers have. Indeed, the last three almost invariably make a good profit out of those who work for wages. That is just what is happening to-day.

But until the increase of prices due to the inflation of our currency is eliminated we can not, in justice, ask labor to take lower wages.

WHAT IS NECESSARY TO HOLD OUR FOREIGN TRADE?

The present industrial condition of most of all the rest of the world is so deplorable that we may confidently expect, for a short time at least, to furnish it with a vast quantity of manufactured goods, as well as raw material. But with an inflated currency and the consequent abnormally high wages, may we hope to compete in the years to come with the other commercial nations, who, as the result of their sad experiences and vast losses, will be compelled to fight for every dollar's worth of business they can possibly get to pay their taxes alone, to say nothing of lowering their mountains of debt?

Again, is it not true that if we succeed in keeping American labor employed we must export a large part of our manufactured product? Indeed, will it not be necessary for us to find outside consumers for at least one-third, possibly one-half in some lines, of our output? If this is approximately true, our continued prosperity may depend upon our success in foreign trade alone, but to succeed in the outside world our prices must be low enough to get the business. After making every allowance for the greater efficiency of the American workman, must we not also take advantage of those principles in financial and banking economics which Great Britain has long recognized as essential to her commercial success and progress and to her financial leadership throughout the world?

WHAT IS ESSENTIAL TO OUR PERMANENT PROSPERITY?

Without a doubt we are standing at the very threshold of the most prosperous and progressive period in the material life of this Nation. It is for that very reason that we should take steps now to so stengthen the foundations of our financial and banking structure that the commercial fabric which is being built upon it may endure unshaken; that it may not, without any warning whatever, in the hour of our highest hopes and fullest expectations, fall in utter ruin because of the disregard, the disobedience of some economic law that always exacts the fullest penalty when it has been persistently and flagrantly broken.

OUR PROSPERITY GIVEN PERMANENCE.

Our commercial arrangements with our allies and the present arbitrary control of all gold movements are an absolute guaranty at this time that such changes as are necessary can be made in our financial and banking system as will greatly aid, if indeed not insure, the continuance of our foreign trade and put our commercial fabric upon a permanent and unshakable foundation without in the slightest degree checking our present prosperity, but give it rather an increased, a double assurance because of the complete and unbounded confidence these very changes must inspire.

ESSENTIAL FUNDAMENTAL CHANGES.

First. We must place the Federal reserve bank in precisely the position it was originally intended to occupy, so that when business again assumes its natural course this central banking institution may become, indeed, the guardian of our commercial credit and be able truly to conserve the business interests of the country, and, if necessary, check any tendency to overexpansion by the natural process of regulating a rate of interest that should always be higher than the commercial rate, which, in turn, should, under all ordinary circumstances, be determined by the state of trade under the natural law of supply and demand.

Second. We must completely eradicate from the minds of the American people that utterly false conception with regard to the use of any debt, any demand for gold, as a bank reserve, even though that debt, that demand for gold is a United States Government note guaranteed by the banks—the Federal reserve note.

Though different in form, in nature and principle, the Federal reserve note and the private check are identical. Both are debts. Both are demands for gold. Both may be equally good as far as payment goes. Both are certainly equally bad in principle as far as using either of them as a bank reserve goes.

If we shall succeed in establishing clearly and forever in the minds of the American people the radical and irreconcilable difference between gold itself and what is diametrically the opposite—a demand for gold, in whatever form it presents itself, the private check or the Federal reserve note—we shall escape the ever constant perils and ultimate overwhelming disaster that is bound to overtake us in the end if, in fact, we have only a credit foundation upon which we have built a gigantic fabric upon the false assumption that that foundation was gold.

[From the Street, of New York, Apr. 19, 1920.]

THE FEDERAL RESERVE IN THEORY AND PRACTICE.

(By Dr. Arthur Selwyn-Brown, an eminent authority on finance.)

The American currency system is proving to-day to be one of the worst in the world. It is an expansive system without any apparent capacity for contraction. Every week it rises to further pinnacles of inflation, notwithstanding the fact that Congress is being constantly appealed to by the Federal Reserve Board for increased powers for remedying the inflation, which all bankers recognize hangs over the American business world like a dense thundercloud and constantly threatens to deluge the credit structure with destructive floods of debts.

The enormous expansion of Federal reserve bank notes is recognized by everyone to be a fundamental cause of all the high prices, business hardships, and social and industrial unrest throughout the United States. It is also a prime cause of the scarcity and high price of money and the lethargic state of the country's bond markets.

Its paralyzing effects upon American business were shown on March 8, 1920, when Congress was appealed to by American business men to inquire into the scarcity and high cost of capital. The Senate, on that date, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be, and is hereby, directed to advise the Senate what is the cause and justification for the usurious rates of interest on collateral call loans in the financial centers, under what law authorized, and what steps, if any, are required to abate this condition."

These were plain questions, tersely and clearly put. They could have been just as tersely and clearly answered. But honest answers would have constituted a severe arraignment of the Federal Reserve System.

It is evident from the answer supplied by the Federal Reserve Board that the members were embarrassed by the inquiry made by Congress. The answer, practically, amounted to the board's acknowledgment that it could not make an adequate reply. Speaking through its governor, W. P. Harding, the board answered the Senate's inquiries regarding the present usurious rates for call money as follows: "As to the 'cause and justification' of the high rates of interest which it thus appears may legally be charged on collateral call loans in New York, and as to 'steps * * * required to abate this condition,' there is, as is well known, a wide difference of opinion among persons who have given thought and study to the question. Indeed, broad and fundamental questions of general economic and social policy are involved—in the last analysis, the whole question of the utility of speculative dealings in securities and commodities on organized exchanges is involved; and more immediately, the question of the methods and practices of the leading speculative markets of the country, margining, stock manipulation, and kindred matters also susceptible of abuse. As to these, the board has never had occasion officially to form an opinion; the Federal reserve act specifically precludes the purchase or discount by Federal reserve banks of 'notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States.' The board could not undertake to form a judgment upon matters above referred to without study and investigation of such a comprehensive nature as would seriously interfere with the conduct of its regular work, and which, had the board the requisite authority, would require the services of experts and assistants. * * *."

This amusing fallacy of confusion made with such levity by the Federal Reserve Board probably indicates the measure of its fear when it is questioned regarding the condition of our new currency. When the currency of a great nation is permitted to get into such a dangerous state that those who are responsible for its management practice the adroit methods of answering inconvenient questions which the Federal Reserve Board has adopted in several of its replies to specific questions put to it by Congress, it appears to be established prima facie that there is something fundamentally wrong with the basis of the currency. In other words, the excuses that are being urged on behalf of our new currency but serve to condemn it. The fearful threat to investigate the stock markets and machinery of American finance implied in the board's evasive reply appears to have had some influence in Congress. No further questioning of the board has been pursued.

What are the fundamental principles of the Federal Reserve System and what does experience show is wrong with them? These are timely and important questions.

The Federal Reserve System is a bank of issue having 12 central banks in the United States and numerous agencies. Commercial banks are kept associated with each of these reserve banks through voluntary associations. The Federal reserve banks issue the United States currency, which consists of Federal reserve notes. These notes are accepted as money by the American people because they believe that they are backed by a gold cover. As a matter of fact, the notes are just evidences of debt. They are just common promissory notes issued by the bank against collateral, which may consist of: (1) Paper indorsed by member banks and drawn for commercial, industrial, or agricultural purposes or for the purpose of carrying or trading in securities of the United States Government; (2) bills of exchange indorsed by a member bank and bankers' acceptances bought by the Federal reserve bank in the open market; (3) gold and gold certificates.

A gold reserve of not less than 40 per cent must be kept by each Federal reserve bank against its outstanding notes. But means are provided for obviating this provision under certain circumstances.

A currency, or legal-tender money, based upon notes of this character will naturally have great expansibility. Our currency now shows that, as one of the politicians responsible for this phase of the Reserve System very properly explained, the Federal reserve notes can be "drawn for cotton while it is being harvested or while it is in transit for Europe or while it is being manufactured into yarn or while a merchant who purchased the finished article continues to owe the manufacturer thereof, or possibly even while the finished article is being shipped back to the same country from which the raw product originally came." If we change the numerous "ors" in that explanation of the basis of Federal reserve notes into "ands" it will still be correct. Notes may be freely issued against such indebtedness and renewed time and again. Such notes may also remain outstanding long after the values which caused their issuing have been consumed or destroyed.

Experience shows that Federal reserve notes may be issued against I O U's of a much more fragile character. It would be interesting to trace the number of notes issued against paper drawn by promoters of speculative pools in grain, foodstuffs, and industrial corporation stocks and bonds in recent market manipulations. The Federal reserve note does not represent an advance of credit or capital to merchants to enable them to carry on an exchange of goods or services. It is not simply evidence of the existence of any property of corresponding exchange value in terms of money. It is, however, an additional unit of the Nation's currency in its capacity of standard of value. That is one of the reasons why every Federal reserve note which is being issued is tending to force up the prices of commodities. It increases the number of notes in circulation, and every circulating note above the country's business needs cheapens the exchange value of the superfluous notes. As these notes consequently fall in value, prices of commodities rise. There are close reciprocal relations between the cheapening of paper money through superfluous note issuing and the rising of commodity prices. The correspondence between the increase of American commodity prices since 1916 and the issuing of Federal reserve circulation is most pronounced. The limit of commodity price limits appears to be simply the limit put upon the making of the cover paper.

A discerning critic has shown that this amazing state of affairs has arisen through a fallacy brought about by a failure to distinguish between an advance of capital or credit to merchants and an addition to and consequent depreciation of the mass of the country's legal-tender money in its office of regulator of value. In other words, the Nation's standard of value has been sacrificed in order to promote the making of discountable commercial paper.

The Federal Reserve Board is empowered to discount the negotiable instruments of corporations authorized in accordance with provisions of the Federal reserve act to do a foreign banking business, providing that the liabilities outstanding at any one time does not exceed ten times the capital stock and surplus.

This is a new type of American banking institution, which is not operating at present. But when corporations formed for this purpose commence business they will call for further large increases in currency.

The Federal Reserve System clearly is well provided to meet every possible requirement for increasing the currency circulation. What, then, are the provisions for curtailing it and making it sufficiently flexible to meet the simple needs of American business?

The reserve act specifies the following means for contracting circulation: "Any Federal reserve bank may at any time reduce its liability for outstanding Federal reserve notes by depositing with the Federal reserve agent its Federal reserve notes, gold, gold certificates, or lawful money of the United States. Federal reserve notes so deposited shall not be reissued except upon compliance with the conditions of an original issue.

"The Federal reserve agent shall hold such gold, gold certificates, or lawful money available exclusively for exchange for the outstanding Federal reserve notes when offered by the reserve bank of which he is a director. Upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury the Federal Reserve Board shall require the Federal reserve agent to transmit to the Treasurer of the United States so much of the gold held by him as collateral security for Federal reserve notes as may be required for the exclusive purpose of the redemption of such Federal reserve notes * * *."

The writer has italicized the reference to gold with the purpose of drawing attention to the fact that there is nothing in the act calling for the redemption of the notes in gold. If the notes were in point of fact readily redeemable in gold they would be more valuable than they are under present conditions.

An elementary knowledge of the Federal Reserve System will indicate that while it provides for the easy issuing of an abundance of bank notes, its provisions for the contraction of the currency and redemption of the bank notes is perilously cumbersome, slow, and uncertain. There is little resiliency in the currency. It may truly be defined as a ballooning, one-way currency. It is expansive but practically inelastic. Elasticity connotes a giving and taking—a rising and subsidence. The Federal reserve currency only rises. It gives no evidence of contractility. Here we see one of its basic defects. It is incapable of responding to the rhythmic fluctuations of American business.

The references to the Secretary of the Treasury in the quotation referring to the note-redemption proviso indicate another basic defect. The Reserve System seems an integral part of the Government. It appears to be, through its constitution, a political more than a financial institution. The appointment of its officers is a political privilege and the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency are two of the seven members. These important Government officers must exert important influences over the management of the system.

It appears, then, from a review of the constitution, organization, and practical operation of the Federal Reserve System that the principles upon which it is based are as follows: (1) A close corporation with a governing board of seven members appointed and controlled by the Government, two of the members being important Government officers; (2) a series of 12 reserve banks and banking centers with affiliated commercial bank members; (3) a currency consisting, beyond the national metallic money, of Federal reserve bank notes based chiefly upon commercial paper; (4) a slow, inelastic method of currency redemption.

When the panic of 1907 drew attention to the fact that we needed a new currency system, plans were developed for making a thorough survey of the principles of a sound currency. The world's leading currency authorities were consulted, and they advised as to the soundness of principles. When Congress decided to establish a new currency, it was provided with the means for giving the United States the best currency in the world. The principles of a sound currency, like all great principles, were shown to be extremely simple. And there was no novelty about them. They had been well tried out in certain sections of the United States, in Canada, and in many parts of the British Empire. They followed what has been proved a safe and well-beaten path.

Experience has positively shown that a resilient, flexible currency can only be obtained in one way—by basing it on credits originating in the production of commodities and services and extinguished by their consumption and use.

Every nation or business community requires a certain amount of money, credit, or currency for its needs. This amount fluctuates seasonably with trade, industrial, and agricultural conditions. That is the reason why a good currency must be quickly responsive to business demands. It must respond to business, not dominate it as the Federal reserve currency does.

Money has two functions. It provides the means for the legal discharge of debts and provides our standard of values. Credit and money are equally good as media of exchange. Credit may really be said to be the most efficient medium of exchange. Credit is belief that admitted claims to value represent value, are as good as value and are immediately exchangeable for value. It is represented by paper which may be issued in quantities proportional to legitimate commercial needs, and may be made in units of any convenient denominations. It can be made to accommodate itself automatically to every conceivable variety of conditions of exchanging, trading, or credit dealings. In other words, a purely banking credit currency system, like the old Scotch system, or the old New England Suffolk system which was based upon it, and like the British, Australian, and Canadian systems, is the ideal system for a modern highly developed commercial nation like the United States.

A bank credit currency like the Canadian currency was recommended by the world's leading experts as the best suited to the needs of the United States. It is the cheapest as well as the safest form of currency. It grows out of actual business transactions, just as bank checks do, and is redeemed every business day at the banks of issue and through the clearing houses. Indeed, a bank credit currency is simply a form of check currency. It is a current credit currency based on I O U's arising out of actual commercial transactions. A check is a credit order on a bank, whereas a bank credit note, like a Canadian bank note, is a current credit order of a bank. These instruments are merely different forms of bank credit designed to meet the conveniences of business men in different ways.

A bank credit currency calls for a small central gold reserve like those controlled by the Bank of England and the Bank of France.

The legal requirements for the issuing of bank-note currency in Canada are as follows:

(1) Every bank must redeem its notes at its head office and in such commercial centers as are designated by the treasury board whenever tendered for redemption. The redemption cities are the same for all banks. They are the clearing cities of Toronto, Montreal, Halifax, Winnipeg, Victoria, St. John, and Charlottetown.

(2) Each bank must keep on deposit with the minister of finance a sum of lawful money (gold or Dominion notes) equal to 5 per cent of its average circulation; the total so deposited is called the "circulation redemption fund." It is an insurance fund for use, if a case should arise, in redeeming a failed bank's notes.

(3) Bank notes possess first lien upon the assets of a bank.

(4) Bank stockholders are liable to an assessment equal to the par value of their stock.

(5) A bank must send a detailed statement of its assets and liabilities on the 15th day of each month, which covers its last business day of the preceding month. This monthly return must be signed by three of the bank's general officers.

(6) The Canadian Bankers Association, of which each bank is a member, is given the supervision of the issue and cancellation of notes and of the management of the affairs of a failed bank.

(7) The notes of a failed bank draw interest at 5 per cent from the date fixed for their redemption by the minister of finance, who may redeem them out of assets of the bank or out of the circulation redemption fund, or out of each.

Experience has plainly shown that the first requirement is the only necessary one. The simple, effective daily redemption principle is what constitutes the excellence of the Canadian banking and currency system.

Political expediency caused Congress to ignore the advice of currency experts respecting the adoption of a bank credit currency and the divorcing of banking from political control. We were given instead what now appears to be a perfectly unsound, unworkable, and perilous system. Even at the eleventh hour, when dangers are fully apparent, it might be changed. A few simple modifications of the Federal reserve principles could establish a bank credit currency.

Five years' experience with the Federal Reserve System plainly shows the pressing need of entirely taking it out of politics, and changing the unsound principles upon which the system is obviously based.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. PHELAN. And I yield five minutes to the gentleman also.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill under consideration is in the interest of the farmer, and I hope it will pass without amendment. It will permit the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase the bonds of the Federal farm loan banks in such an amount as will enable these banks to care for and close all loans to farmers to which they are now committed, and is but an extension of one of the war emergency acts. It is necessary now because of the problem confronting the farm loan system by reason of the litigation pending before the Supreme Court of the United States attacking the right of the issuance of tax-free bonds. Amendments will, no doubt, be offered to extend the purchase of bonds to provide for loans applied for after March 1, 1920, and to which the banks are not committed; but our Banking and Currency Committee, after very careful consideration and consultation with the Treasury Department and Farm Loan Commission and Members of the House and Senate, have determined that it will not be possible to go further than we have provided in this bill, and we are positive that any attempt to extend its provisions will result in securing no legislation whatever at this session, and we have therefore committed ourselves to the bill as introduced, and are bound to oppose all amendments.

I wish to take this opportunity to correct an erroneous impression that seems to prevail throughout the East and the industrial sections of the country regarding the profits of agriculture. Members of the House from city and industrial districts often refer to the high cost of food products as enriching the farmer; and a few days ago, when Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, advised the country from the floor of the Senate of the profiteers who were making from 100 to 300 per cent, and asked why they were not prosecuted and punished, one of the Washington papers, in an editorial commenting on his astounding statements, referred to the fact that Senator CAPPER represented an agricultural State whose farmers were also making large profits from present conditions and had enjoyed great benefits during the war.

I would like, therefore, to have your attention while I give you the facts to show that the farmers of the Nation are not only not making a fair profit now but that they were treated unfairly and discriminated against all during the war.

The following report of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, April 21, shows that Kansas farmers suffered a loss in their wheat operations in 1919. The average cost of producing an acre of wheat for the crop of 1919 and the average return per acre for wheat sold to December 1—66 per cent of the crop—as shown by reports to the board by 2,040 wheat growers, were as follows:

The State:
Cost per acre	$25.20
Return	24.77
Loss	.43
Eastern division:
Cost per acre	33.75
Return	33.60
Loss	.15
Central division:
Cost per acre	24.60
Return	23.08
Loss	1.52
Western division:
Cost per acre	18.60
Return	20.46
Gain	1.89

These figures do not show the full extent of the loss, because in calculating costs nothing has been charged for the depletion of the soil, nothing has been allowed the farmer in the nature of overtime pay for long working days, and no account has been taken of time lost through the seasonal character of his vocation. As wheat growing is carried on in Kansas these three factors add materially to the cost of production, but with the data available it is impracticable to express their effect in exact figures.

The report of the board is based upon detailed cost statements submitted by 2,040 farmers representing every county in the State, both landowners and tenants, and small as well as large producers. Their aggregate experience in wheat growing in Kansas is 31,792 years, averaging 15½ years. The area of their farms is 491,062 acres. The average cost and the average return per acre for the State were derived from statements prepared for the eastern, central, and western thirds of the State separately, allowance being made for the acreage and yield in each division.

Kansas raised 16 per cent of the Nation's wheat crop last year, and the figures given are the result of the first voluntary effort of any large class of producers, manufacturers, or distributors to show actual costs of service rendered.

When war was declared it was announced that those engaged in agriculture, like those engaged in other industries furnishing the needs of war, would be exempted from service; but this decision was not adhered to, and soon word was sent out to the county exemption boards to "comb the draft lists," and thousands of farmers' sons were taken.

Then the high wages paid by the Government for building the cantonments, for work in the shipyards and on the railroads took the hired men from the farms.

Then a price was set on wheat resulting in a loss of the wheat on hand of 60 to 70 cents a bushel and a loss during the war of $2 to $3 a bushel.

Next a price was set on hogs, and when the price was taken off hogs went up from $17 to $23 per 100 pounds.

No price was set on anything the farmer had to buy, and the cost of horses, harness, machinery, and clothing mounted sky-high.

We offered increased profits on all industry to increase production, except agriculture. Yet when, in spite of these unfair conditions, the farmers were appealed to for an increased production of wheat so our Army and the world could have bread, they loyally responded with an increase of 18 per cent.

Since the war cars have been taken from the agricultural district, which have prevented the farmers from marketing their products, and great quantities of wheat, which were piled on the ground because there was not sufficient storage for it, was damaged and lost.

To-day the Kansas railroads have only 80 per cent of the cars belonging to them, while some eastern roads have as high as 180 per cent.

The cattlemen, by the manipulation of the markets, restriction of credits, and car shortage, have lost from $10 to $30 per head on their cattle.

Do not get the idea that because we are paying from $6 to $8 for potatoes in Washington that the farmers are receiving such a price. He was paid $1 per bushel last fall when the potatoes were put in cold storage; and it was the same with the eggs, butter, and poultry.

Gentlemen, this can not last. Either the farmers must make a fair profit or they will quit farming and land will be idle in the West, as it is in the East. Go out 5 miles from this Capital and you find not over 20 per cent of the land producing anything. Why? Simply because it does not pay to farm it.

In Saline County, one of the best in Kansas, there were in the year 1916 2,341 farmers who were voters, while at the present time there are but 1,508. Yet in the city of Salina, in that county, the population increased from 9,688 in 1910 to 15,085 in 1920, showing that the farmers are moving to the towns.

The history of the world shows that a nation begins to decline when its agriculture wanes; a country must produce its own food.

Manufacture increases values, but what is taken from the soil or the mine creates and increases the supply. It is the "making of two blades of grass grow where but one grew before" that counts most.

The boys can not be kept on the farms by talking of improving environments; what farming needs is to be made profitable, and the boys will not forsake the land; prosperity will create the environment desired.

Gentlemen, I want to plead for legislation to help agriculture. If I remain in Congress I expect to ask you to pass laws to make farming more profitable. Remember that about one-third of our population is engaged in agricultural pursuits and that about one-fourth of all our national wealth is so invested. Let us be fair and just to those who produce the food that feeds the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to use a little time now?

Mr. PHELAN. I will use all the time that I am going to use.

Mr. Chairman, in the framing of this rural-credit act I was always opposed to a proposition similar to what is proposed in the amendment offered here to-day. I opposed it from the beginning and was glad when the bill was reported without any such proposition in it. I think it is not the right kind of legislation under ordinary and normal conditions. I am in favor of the amendment offered here to-day, and I hope it will pass, because we are not facing normal conditions; we are facing a somewhat extraordinary situation. The farm loan act has given us a successful system of rural credits. The system has worked better and been more successful than its advocates hoped within this short time. There has been, however, within a year opposition in the courts, and the allegation has been made that the act is unconstitutional. The matter came up last July, and finally got into the Supreme Court last January. It was rather hoped that some decision would be rendered in February or shortly thereafter. The Supreme Court, however, recently has asked for a reargument, so that nothing can be done about a decision until next fall at the earliest.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will in just one minute.

In January or thereabouts the Farm Loan Board, seeing what the situation might be, made provision, and finally sent announcement, I think, on the 4th of February, to the various farm banks not to make any more commitments for mortgages.

With some question pending as to the ultimate results of the litigation as to whether or not the act was constitutional, the board felt—and I think rightly felt—that there would be some trouble in disposing of the bonds. In other words, they felt that the public would not readily respond to the purchase of farm bonds while the question of the constitutionality of the act was unsettled. The Farm Loan Board for that reason gave orders that the banks should no longer make commitments to prospective borrowers. There had been, however, commitments made prior to that. Borrowers had come up and had been promised that loans would be made, and in some cases the mortgages had been taken and, as seems to be the custom in some of the States, the mortgage deeds had been actually recorded, although the money had not been paid over.

The purpose of this act is to enable the farm-loan banks to obtain funds wherewith to meet those obligations which they have to meet upon the commitments which they can not very well avoid to the men who have come to the system to borrow money. Because of the unusual and, as I said before, the extraordinary situation, I believe that this act ought to pass. If the money is not obtained in this way it seems that there is no way in which it can be obtained.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. In one minute. Not only on account of the necessity of giving a square deal to those to whom commitments have been made, but for the maintenance and progress of our agriculture, I think conditions warrant this kind of legislation to-day, and I hope that the House will promptly pass, and that subsequently the Senate will promptly pass, this resolution and take care of the situation until the Supreme Court has made a decision.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. There is one thing in connection with which I am in some doubt; a thing in connection with this legislation that I would like to have cleared up. I understand the investigation of the Committee on Banking and Currency disclosed the fact that the head of a farm-loan bank in Indiana had borrowed money on his own responsibility from the banks of the State to the extent of about $5,000,000. Is it the purpose of this legislation to furnish funds to this man who on his own responsibility created these obligations which he is now unable to meet out of any moneys that may be supplied as the result of this legislation?

Mr. PHELAN. I know of no such situation existing. If it does exist, I know nothing about it.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that such a situation does exist, and I understand the information upon which——

Mr. PHELAN. No. This exists——

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman assert that no such situation as I have described exists?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the situation?

Mr. PHELAN. It is mentioned in the letter of Judge Lobdell to the chairman of the committee. In some cases, in anticipation of a decision by the Supreme Court, to meet the situation existing, the banks did borrow money for a short period of time, giving mortgages as security, or using their mortgages as security. In other words, the land banks—I think with two exceptions—borrowed from commercial banks, the ordinary commercial loans.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I mean.

Mr. PHELAN. But it is my understanding that that was done with the knowledge of the Federal Reserve Board; that it was done simply to meet a situation that could hardly be met otherwise, in their opinion.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the money to be supplied through the medium of this legislation to meet such cases?

Mr. PHELAN. That represents only a small amount.

Mr. MADDEN. What is it?

Mr. PHELAN. My recollection is that it is $8,000,000. No; it is $16,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Borrowed from commercial banks?

Mr. PHELAN. That is my recollection, that it is $16,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, the question that I wanted to know about was whether the money was to be supplied out of the Treasury of the United States after this legislation is enacted with which to enable the men who borrowed this money to pay back the loans which they had made from commercial banks?

Mr. PHELAN. It is hardly accurate to say "the men who borrowed the money." It was the banks that borrowed the money. What we anticipate is this: As the Government takes up the bonds and supplies the banks with funds, the banks will use those funds to make loans on commitments already made, and also to pay up the indebtedness incurred, which in some cases is due on the 1st of June, to the banks—commercial banks.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is generally very conservative and very wise in legislation of this sort, think that it is good business for the Government of the United States to be called upon to supply money to meet obligations thus created?

Mr. PHELAN. I think under present conditions that it is the wisest and most expedient thing to do. As I told the gentleman, and as the gentleman probably knows, there was nobody who was stronger in his opposition to this kind of a proposition in the rural credits bill than I was, and I think I had as much to do as anybody else in keeping it out of the bill as enacted. But we are in a situation to-day where I think it would work serious harm, if not disaster, not alone to the Federal loan system but to other things, if we did not take care of this situation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman let me ask him another question?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I will be glad if the gentleman would, and I will try to answer.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think if the proper vision had been exercised on that Farm Loan Bank Board they would have been able to dispose of the $136,000,000 of bonds which they now have on hand and which they purchased in times gone by, and thus be able to meet the emergencies that now exist without further legislation?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not believe—I doubt—if the Farm Loan Board could have taken measures whereby it could get funds to loan the farmer. They might have stopped the loaning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 10 minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. It is true, is it not, that the only court that has passed on the constitutionality of the Federal farm loan act has held that that act is constitutional?

Mr. PHELAN. That is my understanding.

Mr. TINCHER. And the question pending in the Supreme Court is not only as to the constitutionality of the Federal farm loan act but also as to the constitutionality of the farm-loan banks?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asked the question whether the Federal Farm Loan Board could not have disposed of the $136,000,000 of bonds now on hand. I suppose he referred to the $136,000,000 that the Treasury now has on hand? I suppose the gentleman refers to the $136,000,000 worth of bonds that are in the United States Treasury.

Mr. PHELAN. I did not go into that because I thought my time had expired. There is approximately $136,000,000 in bonds now in the United States Treasury under the farm-loan system, and the reason that they are there can hardly be charged up to the farm-loan system, and ought not to be. The situation is this: At the time the farm-loan banks desired to put out bonds constituting at least a part of the $136,000,000 the Secretary of the Treasury was interested in the floating of the Liberty loans and was very anxious that the farm-loan bonds should not be put on the market, because he wanted no competition with the Liberty bonds. Indeed, I think the Treasury Department was absolutely right. Therefore it held back on the farm-loan system from issuing bonds in the ordinary business way. The policy was pursued to help the Liberty-bond sales and not to help the farm-loan system. Inasmuch as that had been done for the welfare of the country, the temporary measure heretofore referred to was put on the statute books whereby the Secretary of the Treasury could buy a limited number of bonds for a year or two years and hold them up to a certain time.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], when before the Rules Committee asking for this rule, stated that he tried to buy some bonds of the Treasury Department and they explained that they would not sell them because they were not selling them in competition with the Liberty bonds. Has the gentleman found any conflict of law between the activities of the Farm Loan Board and the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman means in administration?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. None that I know of.

Mr. FESS. The Federal Reserve Board controls the whole banking situation.

Mr. PHELAN. No. The Federal Reserve Board has no jurisdiction over the farm-loan system. They are separate and independent.

Mr. FESS. What was the significance of the remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts a moment ago that it was done under permission of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. PHELAN. If I said the Federal Reserve Board it was a slip of the tongue. These bonds were held back at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury and subsequently Congress passed a law permitting the Secretary to buy these bonds in limited numbers.

Mr. FESS. Are we suffering any inconvenience by having two sources of authority, one the general banking business and the other the farm-loan banks?

Mr. PHELAN. No; it is better that we have the two.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, the report on this resolution includes a letter from Judge Lobdell, the farm loan commissioner, and also one from the Secretary of the Treasury, giving full information as to what the purpose of this joint resolution is. The Federal farm-loan system is not a Government system. That matter ought to be put into everybody's head. A great many people talk about it as if it were and say that they can not get loans from the Government banks. There are no Government banks. The Government, it is true, furnished most of the revolving fund or original capital for the Federal land banks, but they are not Government banks; they are privately owned, cooperatively owned. The original Government capital will be paid back in the course of a few years, if the Supreme Court does not decide the act unconstitutional. Judge Lobdell's letter gives a brief history of the litigation, showing that the court of original jurisdiction declared the act constitutional, from which appeal was taken. He also tells about the last issue of farm-loan bonds, which were sold out in 10 days in July, before the suit to test the constitutionality of the act was brought, and states that the bonds sold then produced enough money to last the system until about the 1st of February.

On the 4th of February the Federal Farm Loan Board directed the land banks not to approve any more loans except subject to the determination of the Supreme Court; but it was supposed then that the Supreme Court would decide in the course of a short time, and they had already approved several millions of loans and had actually taken over some $8,000,000 of mortgages. Week after week went along, and finally, on the 26th of April, the court, instead of deciding the case, asked for a reargument of the case, which made it practically impossible to sell any more bonds.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman have any doubt whatever as to the effect of the decision of the Supreme Court on the payment of the bonds?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the Supreme Court should declare the act unconstitutional, would that mean that the men who have borrowed money will not have to pay it or can not be sued for its return?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no. I suppose if the act should be declared unconstitutional the Federal land banks will simply be corporations in liquidation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And if they sell bonds now they will be paid. Suppose some one wanted to buy some of these bonds, how can they do it?

Mr. PLATT. The bonds outstanding have just this difference: They are included in the revenue act as exempt from taxation, and their exemption from taxation does not depend on the farm-loan act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Bonds sold now would have the same status and legality as the bonds issued and sold heretofore. The mere fact that the matter is pending in the Supreme Court would not affect the validity of the bonds now issued any more than it would affect bonds issued heretofore. I would like to know how, if anyone wanted to buy these bonds, they could buy them? Sometimes I have had a dollar I would like to invest in these bonds, but I did not know how to get them.

Mr. PLATT. They are held pretty closely. The last issue was all sold out in 10 days.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That sale was carried on by bond brokers, and not by the Government, and you could not buy except at a higher rate of interest than the Government was paying.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman means a higher price.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A higher price, because, of course, the nominal rate of interest would be the same.

Mr. PLATT. They can occasionally be purchased in the open market.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; by paying more than par for them.

Mr. PLATT. No; below par now, I think. I have seen quotations, I think, a little below par, but they hold up well under the circumstances.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would be interesting to know whether, if the Government buys these bonds, it is an entire contribution not to be returned or whether the Government can enforce the collection of the bonds; and that applies also to the bonds now in the hands of the public, if the Supreme Court should declare the act unconstitutional. If the committee has not given consideration to the subject, they have not given consideration to the most important question involved.

Mr. PLATT. As I have said to the gentleman, the Federal land banks would be considered corporations in liquidation, unquestionably, and the security is good.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They would not be any more corporations as to bonds already issued than as to bonds that will be issued now or hereafter. There is no distinction in the law between one kind and the other. If they are good, they are good; if they are not good, they are not valid.

Mr. PLATT. The marketability of the bond is ruined by the decision or lack of decision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is upon the theory that the bonds may never be paid; that they would not be able to collect the money which has been loaned to the farmer from the farmer. If you will dispel that theory, there will be no trouble in selling the bonds.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, I think that is not the theory at all. I think that the theory is that any bonds sold hereafter might be taxable, whereas those already sold are exempt from taxation.

Mr. MORGAN. Would not the revenue act apply to bonds issued from now on?

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe it would.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The mere fact that the case is pending in the Supreme Court does not change the law. The law is the same with respect to the bonds already issued and the bonds now to be issued. There is no change in the law. An argument in the Supreme Court does not decide the matter.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. But the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States some weeks ago ordered a reargument closed the market, so far as the investor is concerned, because he said that he will not buy the bonds until he finds out what their legal status is.

Mr. PLATT. That is the point.

Mr. WINGO. It is not a question of the law; it is a question of the mind of the man who is in the investment market.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If you will satisfy his mind that these bonds will be eventually paid, he will be satisfied and he will buy the bonds. That applies to bonds already in existence and to bonds issued now. There is no difference in legal status.

Mr. WINGO. I have never heard of any lawyer or investor who declines to purchase them because he thinks he might not be able to collect on them. I have never heard of any lawyer who doubts at all but that the courts of equity would hold, if the Supreme Court should hold the act to be unconstitutional, other than they have always decided in similar cases, and permit the holders of the bonds to collect them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Committee on Banking and Currency by reporting this resolution throws doubt on the whole thing. Instead of saying that these bonds are good and will be collected, you propose to say to the people who already have them, "Your bonds probably are not good, but the Government is going to buy these bonds and stand the loss, if there is any." This action casts a cloud upon them.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose the Federal land banks could sell bonds on a high enough rate of interest to take the risk into consideration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This does not change the rate of interest.

Mr. PLATT. The Supreme Court's action changes the rate of interest.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all.

Mr. PLATT. It changes public sentiment so that 4½ per cent bonds which you could sell at par you can not sell now.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But this very action throws doubt upon the collection of the bond.

Mr. PLATT. It does not seem so to me. The matter in doubt is the tax exemption.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. These bonds now to be issued will be in the same position as to tax exemption as bonds already issued. Why not try to have that question met?

Mr. PLATT. But those already out have been purchased upon the assumption that they are exempt, and from now on nobody knows whether they will be.

Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House, and in connection with the question of the stability of the Federal land banks, I want to present a few figures. The banks had made mortgage loans up to April 30 of $336,240,586. That was an increase over the loans of March 31 of only $1,453,000, while the normal growth, or at least the growth shown last fall and up to about January 31 was about $16,000,000 each month. Amortization payments on April 30 had amounted to $3,876,732, and about $250,000 is coming back to the land banks each month in these payments on the mortgages. Delinquent amortization payments in all amounted to only $211,662. Outstanding bonds amount to about $296,000,000, and there are $19,355,100 of farm loan bonds carried in the April statement as unsold. It would appear as if a few had been sold to somebody in some way, for the March 31 statement shows $21,764,000 on hand and unsold, and if an issue of 5 per cent bonds were made I am not altogether sure that investors could not be found who would buy a considerable number of them. I hope that will be tried, for I do not personally think the Treasury of the United States should buy these bonds if it can possibly be avoided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has asked for a reargument of the case involving the constitutionality of the Federal farm-loan act; and

Whereas the reargument of the case will postpone a decision until next October at the earliest; and

Whereas the Federal land banks are now and it is feared will be unable under these circumstances to sell bonds to meet outstanding commitments for loans to farmers pending a final decision: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 8, 1918, entitled "An act to amend section 32 of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916," be, and the same hereby are, extended to the fiscal years ending June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1921, to the extent that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized, as by the terms of said act, to purchase during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1921, or either of them, any bonds which he might have purchased during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, or either of them, under the provisions of the original act.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the preamble.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the question on the preamble will come after the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. WINGO. Is not the first question upon the committee amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not now in order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, insert: "Provided, That he shall purchase no bonds issued against loans approved after March 1, 1920."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I fear that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the action of the committee throws some doubt on whether or not the bonds could ever be collected if the Supreme Court should decide adversely the case that is now pending will create a wrong impression, and I do not want that impression to go abroad. The committee does not do that. The committee in the preamble sets out that the board is unable to sell the bonds. An investor does not want to buy anything when he does not know exactly what is going to be the law covering the investment, when it is challenged and pending in the Supreme Court. Naturally he will say, "I will buy some other investment; I will not invest my money in this particular class of bonds." The last sale of bonds was about last July. The board then thought that that sale of bonds would take care of all of the business for one year, but we find that the business is such that the funds expired along in February or March. At that time we found that there were several classes of commitments. First, there were mortgages that had been given by farmers whose loans had been approved—the farmers had given a mortgage, which is of record—and yet the banks are without funds to give the farmer the money. Next, loans that have been finally approved, the farmers have relied upon them, the bank itself had approved the loan, and all that remains is to put the mortgage on record and pay the money.

Next, where the banks—and that is what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was referring to awhile ago—are controlled by hard-headed business men—and that is true of every one of these land banks; there is not a better class of men in America than the men the board selected as the head of the banks, some Republicans and some Democrats, no politics permitted to enter into it—these hard-headed business men, instead of asking the board to sell bonds in dribs, what did they do? They arranged a line of credit with commercial banks to take care of their current needs, and it is contemplated they would clean them up at the next bond issue. That is a practical thing that every hard-headed business man in this House will approve instead of condemning. Now, they ran out of funds in March. Here is the Supreme Court hanging fire upon this decision, and they found themselves without a market for the bonds. What did the board do? They immediately declined to take any further business, or, that is, ordered the banks not to take any new business. Now, the board comes before the committee and says, "Here we have stopped as soon as we found we could not sell the bonds on account of the uncertainty of the bond market by reason of this pending case, but we have made certain commitments which the banks are in honor bound to clean up." Now, it is a good, sound proposition, and they asked the committee to clean up the commitments. Now, the committee does not come and ask you to go into the proposition of the United States Treasury financing these Federal land banks. We simply authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, under the emergency war act which permitted him to purchase bonds and under the act we present here, while the total amount that the Secretary of the Treasury might buy would be $64,000,000, yet the total amount that he will buy under another limitation which says that he is not permitted to purchase a single bond that is issued against loans approved after March 1, will limit it to between $32,000,000 and $40,000,000, so as to tide them over until the Supreme Court decides.

Suppose the Supreme Court should hold some parts of the act or the whole act to be invalid? I will not stop to discuss the legal proposition. Every lawyer on the floor of this House knows that you can collect these bonds. He knows there are decisions that are on all fours by which the taxpayers of a county have been compelled by a Federal court to meet the obligations under similar cincumstances, and it is not a question of whether the bonds will be finally paid. It is a question of tiding these banks over the hiatus after March 1, 1920, until the law is settled and they will have a market for their bonds. It is simply a businesslike proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, the effect of this legislation will not be to permit these land banks to continue the ordinary course of their business in the future pending the decision of this case, but it will only permit the Treasury to buy certain bonds as were based upon loans made prior to March 1.

Mr. WINGO. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for two minutes more only.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the proposition: The committee tried to reflect the sentiment of the House. I will be frank with you and say that personally I am willing to authorize the continuance of the business by the farm land banks and purchase of their bonds by the Treasury. The committee knew the sentiment of the House and they decided that the House had recognized the Treasury is in a straitened condition, and they said that all the House would support is a proposition to clean up the commitments of the banks where farmers had their mortgage already on record, where the commercial banks relied upon the credit of these banks for maturing paper, where they had made loans approved and given which were relied upon; in other words, clean up the commitments and not do any more new business. That is the view the committee took simply because we thought we reflected the sentiment of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. But will not the effect of this postponement by the Supreme Court of this decision be practically to disband the organization of all these land banks scattered throughout the country which will remain idle——

Mr. WINGO. Yes; because they have already disbanded and they have already discharged some of their forces.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Why do some of these bonds draw 4½ and the others 5 per cent?

Mr. WINGO. The act covers the question of bond issues very clear, if the gentleman will get it. I do not recall just now why it was unless it was the market; but as I recall, it was the market that fixed it, and the provision of law required them to let the farmer have it at 1 per cent less than the last bond sale rate of interest.

Mr. MORGAN. My understanding is the Federal land bank bonds have been all issued at 4½ per cent, while the joint-stock bonds are issued at 5 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. There is one 5 per cent Federal land bank issue.

Mr. WINGO. My mind is not clear at the moment, but as I recollect we first issued, and the gentleman from New York can correct me, 4½ Federal land bank bonds. Then we had one other Federal loan issue——

Mr. PLATT. One was about a year ago, before the Victory loan, and that was at 5 per cent.

Mr. WINGO. Right before the Victory loan. The gentleman from Illinois is referring, I think, to the joint-stock land bank bonds.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. OLIVER. This bill is not intended to authorize the purchase of bonds issued by the joint-stock banks?

Mr. WINGO. No; it does not include that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I would like to ask the gentleman if he will yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will yield.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Is there any necessity for the issuance of any more bonds than have been suggested by the gentleman under the proviso limiting it to March 1, 1920?

Mr. WINGO. Well, it is owing to the gentleman's viewpoint. If you simply want to clean up the commitments, why of course the amendment of the committee will do that.

If you want to sustain these banks and permit them to continue their business in their individual capacity pending the decision, then you would throw it wide open and authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to go on and purchase bonds just as much as is necessary to meet the business.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. If the condition of the market is such as we think it is now with reference to these bonds, and if such a condition should continue, it would require the Secretary of the Treasury to carry all of the loans that should be made through these banks which were necessary to be financed by bonds. Is that correct?

Mr. WINGO. I do not anticipate that.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Is this correct from the gentleman's standpoint?

Mr. WINGO. Possibly I do not grasp the gentleman's question.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I will get back the other way. If this condition as to the decision should continue for an additional year, the gentleman states that still the bonds that should be sold if they become due in that time—which, of course, is impossible by their terms—could be collected in the ordinary course?

Mr. WINGO. I think the equity side of any Federal court in the United States would enforce the collection of these bonds against the farmers who gave their mortgages and against their stock in the banks, and if they attempted to raise the question of the validity of the act, having received the benefit of the act, they would have to pay their note for which they had received the cash and benefits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MORGAN moves to amend the committee amendment on page 2, line 12, by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and inserting the following:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, at any time during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to purchase at par and accrued interest, at the option and offer of the owner thereof, any farm loan bond or bonds issued by any Federal land bank during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, not exceeding in the aggregate $100,000,000, and issued against loans approved subsequent to March 1, 1920.

"Every Federal land bank, whose bonds have been purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury under the foregoing provision, shall, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, redeem the bonds so purchased by delivering to the Secretary of the Treasury in exchange for such bond or bonds other farm-loan bonds of equal amount par value, bearing such rate or rates of interest and payable at such time and on such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the bonds so redeemed by any Federal land bank shall be canceled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. PLATT. I make a point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the point of order?

Mr. PLATT. The amendment goes far beyond the purposes of the bill and is not germane. It undertakes to sustain the value of bonds, and provides for the purchase of bonds by the Treasury Department from any persons that own them. For instance, if I happen to have some farm-loan bonds and they go down in price, I am privileged to sell them to the Treasury.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It only applies to bonds issued during the year 1921.

Mr. PLATT. Even the fiscal year 1920 has not ended yet.

Mr. MORGAN. This applies only to bonds issued during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. It does not apply to any other bonds at all.

Mr. PLATT. It applies to the purchase of bonds from private owners, just the same.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman is mistaken. It does not go that far. It just applies to bonds issued during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. PLATT. It says "at the option and offer of the owner thereof." Who is the owner?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the additional point of order that it introduces a new subject entirely that was not embraced in the provisions of the bill, and not germane either to the section of the bill to which it is offered as a part or to the bill itself.

The CHAIRMAN. That is practically the same point of order as made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. This amendment provides for the issuance of bonds. The resolution itself does not provide for the issuance of any Federal land-bank bonds. It simply provides for the purchase by the Treasury of bonds already issued. The gentleman's amendment provides for the continuing of the issuance of bonds and keeping up their value. It goes way beyond anything contemplated in the joint resolution offered. Also the second paragraph of this amendment seems to authorize the issue of United States Government bonds—two series of United States Government bonds, if I understand it.

Mr. MORGAN. No; it does not.

Mr. PLATT. Where is the money to come from?

Mr. MORGAN. Where is the money to come from in your bill? It comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. It speaks of redeeming bonds.

Mr. MORGAN. Of Federal land banks. The second paragraph only applies to Federal land banks issuing bonds. I know the gentleman wants to be fair. As to the second section, the assumption is this: We will suppose that during the year 1922, which is the second year, it turns out that the Secretary of the Treasury has to buy some of these bonds that have been sold under this provision, if presented. That bond which the Government buys may be a bond that may sell under par by reason of the interest rate. So the Federal land bank, on the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, under the second paragraph, would issue a new bond and exchange for the old bond that the Secretary already under the provision of your act——

Mr. PLATT. Who is going to issue those bonds?

Mr. MORGAN. The Federal land bank issues a new exchange for the Federal land bank bond which the Secretary buys under paragraph 1, and it is to be issued at the rate of interest provided for by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury will have authority to ask that those Federal land banks issue new bonds on such terms and conditions and at such rate of interest as will make the Government good and whole.

Mr. PLATT. It is perfectly evident, Mr. Chairman, that the purpose of this amendment is to issue new bonds and exchange bonds, and apparently to keep up the market price, as near as I can make out. It goes way beyond the purposes of the joint resolution, not only in extending it to 1922 and providing that new bonds may be purchased by the Treasury, but in authorizing the issues of bonds, something which, in order to do, you would have to amend an entirely different section of the Federal farm loan act.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] state the section of the farm-loan act to which he refers, the one which it would be necessary to amend in order that this provision might be germane?

Mr. PLATT. I have not the Federal farm-loan act with me, not expecting any such question as that, and can not recall the numbers of the bond sections.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. PHELAN. I think it is clear the amendment is not germane, and is entirely beyond the scope of the bill now pending before the committee. The resolution provides means whereby the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase bonds from the Federal land banks. He may purchase bonds from the Federal land banks. In contemplation these are bonds that are to be issued by the land banks. In the first paragraph of the gentleman's amendment provision is made whereby bonds are to be purchased from the owners of the bonds. That means, I presume, and certainly includes, everybody all over the United States who has a bond. It refers to bonds which have already been issued and not, as the original resolution pending before the House provides, the land banks, on bonds to be issued. The first distinction, therefore, is that in the case of the resolution pending before the House the bonds are to be bought from the land banks on bonds hereafter to be issued. In the gentleman's amendment they are to be bought from the owner of the bonds, and they are bonds which have already been issued.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And it is mandatory, too.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes. In addition to that, some light will be thrown on the subject if you examine the purposes of the resolution now pending before the House. The purpose of the resolution before the House is to enable the land banks to meet their obligations, or at any rate to meet their promises and commitments, whereas the purpose contained in the first paragraph of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is not to take care of any commitments, but to take care of owners of bonds who perhaps desire to dispose of them.

So much for the first paragraph. Now, the second paragraph introduces an entirely new proposition. In the act passed two or three years ago and extended by the resolution now before the House provision is made for the redemption of these bonds by the ordinary redemption process, namely, that the farm-land banks, after a certain period of time or at a certain point of time, shall buy back these bonds, and it is provided in the act what they shall pay. They are supposed to pay back money, or currency, or something that operates as money or currency, whereas in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, as I stated, an entirely new element appears. Payment may be made not by the use of cash or money or currency but by other bonds. I think, therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is clear that the gentleman's amendment is entirely out of order. And I make the additional point of order that this amendment has been offered, I think, as an amendment to an amendment already pending, and hence is not in order, for that reason, as an amendment to the pending resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I think my amendment to the committee amendment is clearly germane and in order, and it is in order because it is in harmony with the purpose of this act, as shown by the "whereases."

The gentleman's resolution is introduced by a number of "whereases," which indicate that at the present time, by reason of certain litigation, the Federal land banks are unable to sell their bonds.

Now, then, the object of paragraph 1 of my amendment is to enact a provision which will enable the Federal land banks to sell their bonds. Now, what does it do? It is an amendment to the committee amendment. The committee amendment limits the purchase of bonds to the bonds issued against loans approved March 1 last. My amendment is an amendment to that amendment and provides that under certain circumstances bonds may be issued. It provides that during the fiscal year of 1922 the owner of bonds issued and purchased during the fiscal year 1921 may, at his option, have the same redeemed or purchased at the Treasury at par value with accrued interest. A bond issued by Federal land banks with this privilege would sell at this time, without regard to the uncertainty of pending litigation. This would enable the land banks to function. Of course, that carries out the very purpose of this act, to bring Federal land-bank bonds to a position where the Federal land banks can sell them. There could be no demands on the Treasury until during the fiscal year of 1922.

Now, then, investors would buy those bonds if my amendment would become a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall be glad if the Chair will.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is if under the Federal farm loan act the Secretary of the Treasury had any jurisdiction to purchase from anybody except the farm loan banks themselves any of the bonds that he might have purchased during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919? I think that the Federal land bank act and the act of January 18, 1918, apply only to authorize the Secretary to purchase bonds issued from the Federal land banks.

Mr. MORGAN. I think that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, will the gentleman address himself to that particular point, and give to the Chair the reasons for his contention that the authorization of the purchase from owners generally is germane to a provision of law allowing purchases only from one source, namely, the Federal land banks?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Now, then, it seems to me there is nothing illogical in the claim that if you authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to buy bonds of one city, an amendment authorizing him to buy bonds of another city would be germane. If you authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to buy the bonds of England, it seems to me germane to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to buy the bonds of France; and much more so if you authorize the Secretary to buy the bonds of the Federal land banks, a bond that has been issued by the Federal land bank, it would be germane to authorize the Secretary to buy the bond of the individual to whom the Federal land bank sold that bond.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. In a moment; and especially so, Mr. Chairman, when the object and purpose to be accomplished are in absolute harmony.

Now I yield.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is familiar with the long line of decisions by Speakers of the House to the effect that where a bill provides for one building in one city you can not offer an amendment for a building in another city, but if it contains two or more an amendment would be in order; so that his contention is unsound in his claim that if it were in order to authorize an issue of English bonds it would also be in order to authorize an issue of French bonds. And, besides that, the gentleman overlooks the fact that the original act authorizes the purchase from the Federal land bank, whereas the gentleman's amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase these bonds from the public.

Mr. MORGAN. I insist that that would be germane, because, if you pass an act or amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds of the Federal land banks, the object being to provide the means whereby these Federal land banks might function in the interest of the Government and in the interest of agriculture, then an amendment which would modify it so that it would add to it the power to purchase of individuals the same bonds issued by the Federal land bank is not only, it seems to me, germane according to the wording of the provision but absolutely and certainly in harmony with the spirit of the resolution and the object to be attained thereby.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me for just a word on this?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma has overlooked the whole philosophy of the bill and his own amendment. The bill is what? It does not seek to amend existing law, because that law has expired. This bill is a peculiarly worded bill. It undertakes to say that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to do something in a manner provided by an act that has already expired.

It undertakes to say that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to do something with reference to an act that has already expired. So it can not be said that anything is in order if it seeks to amend a statute that has already expired. The pending bill does not seek to amend a statute.

Let us see what is the purpose, the letter, and spirit of the pending bill. It is to extend the Federal farm loan act to June 30, 1921; the preamble states that it is feared that the Federal land banks will be unable to sell bonds to meet the outstanding commitments for loans to the farmers pending the final decision of the Supreme Court. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to buy bonds from the land banks to a certain extent to meet these payments under certain restrictions.

Now, in the first section of the gentleman's amendment, does it provide for the relief of farmers for the sale of bonds? No; it authorizes the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury of bonds in the open market, and that might defeat the very purposes of the bill. A man owning $100,000,000 worth of bonds might go to the Secretary of the Treasury and say that this authorization is a mandate of Congress, and before the Federal land banks could offer their bonds he might compel the Secretary of the Treasury to buy his bonds.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman wants to be fair, I hope. The entire issue is limited to $100,000,000.

Mr. WINGO. I am fair. It is a logical conclusion of the language of the gentleman's amendment. He does not intend it, but the Chair can not take the intention of the gentleman from Oklahoma. He must take the language as it is. In the first section it provides for the purchase of bonds in the open market.

The second section provides what? That it authorizes the redemption of the bonds in cash to the original holder? No; it authorizes exchange of bonds. There is no such provision in the emergency law which has expired, and no such provision in the pending bill. So I say for these two reasons the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma is not germane either to the pending amendment or to the pending bill, and it fails on both points.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The pending resolution, for certain reasons set forth in the preamble, seeks to extend the life of the Federal farm loan act and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase certain farm loan bonds. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase certain farm loan bonds in the open market and not from the Federal farm loan bank, as provided by existing legislation and by the resolution now pending before the committee.

The point of order has been made that the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma is not germane. The amendment, of course, must be germane to the subject of the resolution itself, and it must also be germane to the section to which it is offered.

The preamble sets forth the purpose of the resolution in the following language:

> Whereas the Federal land banks are now and it is feared will be unable under these circumstances to sell bonds to meet outstanding commitments for loans to farmers pending the final decision: Therefore be it resolved—

And so forth.

So the preamble itself shows that the purpose of this resolution is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase these bonds from the land banks in order to relieve the land banks, and the purpose as set forth in the preamble and the resolution is not apparently to relieve the owners. There is not any very close precedent which the Chair has been able to find on this proposition, but the Chair does think that the argument advanced by the gentleman from Oklahoma is not in accordance with the precedents that exist, namely, that where legislation authorizes the purchase of bonds of one city an amendment authorizing the purchase of bonds of another city would be germane, because that, in the Chair's view, is directly contrary to existing precedents. The Chair thinks that in this amendment the gentleman from Oklahoma seeks to go beyond the scope of the resolution and to introduce in it a new purpose not set forth in the preamble and not set forth in any part of the resolution, and that the provision to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to buy bonds generally in the open market is not germane to the provision authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase from a particular source, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. If a point of order should be made that the time has expired on this particular amendment, would I be permitted to do that after the gentleman concludes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman would be in order in offering the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think this legislation ought to be passed, but I do not think the resolution goes far enough. This law relieves a situation that is very pressing and a situation that confronts the farmers who have applied for loans and put on record their mortgages and are unable to get the money or to have their mortgages released. But here is what it will do if you do not go further with the legislation: Those that are opposed to the farm-loan legislation are going to accomplish the thing they started out to do when they started this litigation. They do not hope to win this lawsuit, but they are doing what they started out to do. In the first place, some of these private loan agents go over the country telling the farmer when he mentions borrowing money from the farm-loan bank that he can never get his money, that there is so much red tape about it, and why does he want to make an application for money when the agent can give him his money in 30 days or 3 weeks or as soon as the papers are fixed up, while if he goes to the farm-loan bank he will not get his money for a year.

This legislation is good so far as it goes. You are going to take care of the loans that have been approved of up to March, 1920, but you are going to close down on loans from there on, and you are going to demoralize the organization of your farm-loan banks, and let the public then become the prey of the fellows who have been charging the excessively high rates of interest. This farm-loan legislation has reduced the interest rates. The mere fact that it is on the statute books has reduced the interest rates in Oklahoma from 10 per cent to 6 and 7 per cent. I think this legislation ought to go further. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, this statute has not been declared unconstitutional. The Government has won its suit so far. The Congress of the United States ought to back up its own legislation, and you ought not to permit these men, by bringing this litigation, to do the very thing that you want to avoid having done.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows that the Treasury is borrowing money at 5½ per cent. Would the gentleman want the Treasury to borrow money at 5½ per cent and buy farm-loan bonds that yield only 4½ per cent?

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman can regulate that by legislation. If the Treasury of the United States has to pay 5½ per cent for its money, of course the private individual is going to have to pay more for his money. Interest rates are going to rise all over the country, and the man who could get money for 6½ per cent from the farm-loan banks would have to pay the private individual 10 per cent, if they keep up their rates and commissions as they have in the past prior to the enactment of the farm-loan act.

Mr. PLATT. But the gentleman has not yet answered my question.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think it is to the better interest of the Government to take care of this situation now, rather than let the entire business be demoralized, and pay out these large sums in salaries down here for these men with nothing for them to do?

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the Government can borrow money at a higher rate of interest and loan it to some private individual at a lower rate of interest.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not think that that would be good business, but the gentleman knows that that could be corrected.

Mr. PLATT. How could it be corrected? Does the gentleman mean that we can make people loan money to the Government at a lower rate?

Mr. McKEOWN. We can raise our rate to the borrower, can we not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Has the gentleman any idea of the volume of applications that will not be taken care of?

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not know the volume of applications, but I say this, that the farm-loan banks and associations are just beginning to get into operation in my country, and in my district the farmers are just getting hold and organizing, and now they will be absolutely demoralized, and you will have to go in there and do all of this work over again. You give this farm-loan act the black eye and it will take years and years to recover from it. The farmer will lose absolute confidence in it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Would not the joint-stock land banks in any way help the situation?

Mr. McKEOWN. They do not seem to be able to help the situation. One thing that is the trouble now and that has been the trouble right along is the delay in getting the money. The farmers will come in and organize their associations and send off their papers and wait a long time to get a return on their loans. That is demoralizing, because there is no good business in that.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the committee amendment is now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment and any germane amendment to the committee amendment would be in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to oppose the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will vote down this committee amendment, of course they will accomplish something really worth while for the Federal land banks and for the farmers who need these loans. The bill as introduced by the chairman of the committee is all right. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, within the limit of $200,000,000 and at his discretion, to buy these bonds, issued by the Federal land banks, but the committee has amended the bill as introduced by placing a proviso, found in lines 11 and 12, to the effect that the Secretary of the Treasury shall purchase no bonds issued against loans approved after March 1, 1920. That only provides relief for a comparatively few men, who were fortunate enough to have their applications approved prior to March 1, but in principle, if you can authorize, and do authorize, the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $30,000,000 worth of these bonds, where the applications came in before March 1—in principle you authorize the purchase of bonds necessary for these banks to do business through the next six or eight or nine months. If it is wrong to purchase bonds on applications issued after March 1, it is wrong to purchase them on applications received and acted upon before March 1.

If you will vote down this committee amendment, you will have passed a law through this House that is worth while to the farmers of the country, and you will have done something that will tend to increase the credit facilities sufficiently to in a measure add to the productive power of the farmers. More than that, unless you give these banks power to make loans, the private mortgage companies will raise their rates during the next nine months. Therefore, you ought to do this to protect our farmers from the increased rates which will have to be paid by those whose mortgages are expiring between now and the next nine months, and with the high rates of interest prevailing those mortgages will not be renewed at the old rates. If you want to help the farmer; if you really desire to expand agriculture; if it is your real purpose to increase food production and reduce the cost of food to people who live in the cities and towns, then vote down this committee amendment, which restricts the purchase of bonds issued against loans approved prior to March 1, 1920.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to change the figures "1920," in line 12, page 2, to "1921."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the figures "1920" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1921."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment is based upon the difficulty which has just been alluded to by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN]. The Supreme Court of the United States has postponed until next October the reargument of this case involving the legality of the farm loan act. In all probability the court will have rendered its decision by the 1st of March, 1921; but if the amendment as offered by the committee shall be adopted it will be utterly impossible for these Federal farm loan banks or Federal land banks to function with respect to any new business whatever between now and the time the decision of the court shall be rendered.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Just for a brief question.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows that the Federal land banks have been instructed to take no business since the 4th of February pending the determination of the Supreme Court. They can not make any more loans.

Mr. BARKLEY. Those instructions can be withdrawn. They do not operate as unchangeably as the laws of the Medes and Persians. The authorities which give the instructions can withdraw the instructions. But so far as I personally am concerned, I can see no difference between the obligation of the Government to those who applied for loans of money prior to March 1, 1920, and to those who may seek to borrow money between March 1, 1920, and March 1, 1921.

Mr. PHELAN. If the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman see any difference between an obligation I owe to a man to whom I have made a promise and an obligation to a man to whom I have made no promise?

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, the obligation in these two instances is moral. There is no binding legal obligation on the land banks to loan money unless they have it, and what I want them to do is to loan money to those who have applied and to those who may apply from now on.

Now, unless this amendment shall be adopted, as I suggested in my question to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], the result will be that these Federal land banks, scattered all over the United States, will cease to operate. A few days ago the president of the Federal land bank of Louisville, Ky., was in the city of Washington, and he said that unless some relief came to him the Federal land bank system would be compelled to discharge practically all of its force, all of its paid agents, all of its investigators, all the officers of the Federal land banks, pending the decision of the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of this law. Now, if that result shall come about, it will not only demoralize the present activities of the Federal land banks, but compel them to begin from the very bottom when the court does decide the case and start in again to do business of loaning money to the farmers of this country, and it will be extremely unfortunate, as I believe, for the Federal land banks to be compelled to go out of business from now until the date when the Supreme Court shall determine this case by reason of any failure on the part of Congress to give them any authority or the Treasury any authority to cover the period between now and the date of the decision.

Mr. PLATT. I want to say to the gentleman this proviso was put in here at the very urgent solicitation of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the Secretary of the Treasury is a member of the gentleman's own party——

Mr. BARKLEY. I have very great respect for those authorities, but it does not change my opinion as to this amendment.

Mr. PLATT. And wanted a more stringent one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield? I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not quite get the amendment offered by the gentleman, and I wish he would repeat it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment which I offered simply extends the period from March 1, 1920, which has already gone by, to March 1, 1921, basing that amendment upon the probability of the court deciding the case between now and the 1st of next March.

Mr. MORGAN. In other words, in line 12 the amendment is to strike out "1920" and to insert "1921"?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, that is a very good amendment, and I hope it will be carried.

Mr. BARKLEY. In certain sections of the country, and particularly in that section of the country from which I come, the product of the farm is very largely exported. The money crop of large sections of Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and some parts of Ohio and other States depends largely upon the foreign market in order that it may bring a price sufficient to enable the farmer to live. Now, on account of the fall in foreign exchange, the market has absolutely gone to pieces. The bottom has dropped out of the market, and there is no sale at the present time for farm products that found their market in the countries of Europe, and those farmers are compelled to borrow money in order that they may hold their crop until the prices go up, or until they can make a different crop out of which they can obtain the necessaries of life.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if they are compelled to go to banks or private lenders of money and pay exorbitant rates of interest, they are put not only to a disadvantage on that account but at a double disadvantage on account of the cheapness of their product, and this amendment will enable these Federal farm land banks to extend assistance to those farmers who are thus situated between now and the 1st of next March; and I can not see, either legally or morally, where we are under any greater obligation to those who got in prior to March 1, 1920, than to those who come in hereafter. I want them all protected.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows the Federal board here in Washington instructed the land banks to make no commitments after March 1, or a little before that, and that those who are in before that are in in good faith. If you allow them to get in now they may be doing a business which may be unconstitutional.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will not be any more unconstitutional than that which has been authorized. They will either go up together or down together.

Mr. PLATT. There is no authority here for the Treasury to buy bonds. If an outsider wants to do it and take the risk, it is all right.

Mr. BARKLEY. The very reason why this bill is brought in is because private investors will not buy those that have already been committed.

Mr. PLATT. There is no obligation on the Treasury in any legal way, then, to take care of those who went in in good faith before notice was given, but they should not go on and continue it indefinitely after the notice is given.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume that anyone who comes in under the Federal farm loan act comes in in good faith.

Mr. PLATT. Those who come in now do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we extend the time until next March, they will not have notice, because the time will have been extended in which the Treasury will come to their assistance or purchase these bonds that will be issued between now and next March.

Mr. PLATT. If the court declares the law unconstitutional between now and next March, what then?

Mr. BARKLEY. Then the law and the amendments to it and everything done under them would go along together.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment.

I hope the committee will not vote on the amendments without giving them a moment's consideration as to their seriousness. This amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, who is usually careful in offering amendments and careful in considering legislation, appeals to me as a departure from his usual rule. For instance, the amendment to section 32, that we are reenacting to-day, authorized the purchase on the part of the Government of $200,000,000 worth of bonds, $100,000,000 a year for two years. Now, under that act we have purchased over $136,000,000 worth of bonds. So we have something like $60,000,000 with which to purchase bonds. It is shown in the report on this bill, and it is a fact, that practically that amount of money will be required to make good our obligations up to the 1st of March of this year.

Now, what would be the idea in extending the provisions to the 1st of March, 1921? We would not have any money. The amendment carried here would not provide a dollar to carry out the provisions next year. The banks decided last January, the Federal farm loan banks, that they would not be hypocrites about this thing, and that they would not do business until the court decided as to whether they were within the Constitution or not. So they practically suspended. But there is an obligation outstanding. The appropriation was authorized by a former Congress, and this committee has simply brought in a bill here to authorize the closing up of that proposition. I say that to strike out the amendment itself or to amend it by extending it until March, 1921, would be the height of folly. That would not accomplish the operating of these banks. You can not operate them for a year on less than $10,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Replying to the gentleman's first suggestion, it would not be germane to this committee amendment to offer an amendment to increase the amount available for this purpose, and therefore could not be offered in connection with my amendment, but if my amendment should be adopted it would be an authorization which could hereafter be taken care of by Congress.

Mr. TINCHER. If you go ahead and adopt that legislation, that would be for this Government to finance the Federal farm-loan banks for another year. I tell you what would happen: The Secretary of the Treasury, who is not overly friendly to even this, will not do a thing. He has practically said so in his letter which appears in the report on this bill. So we may as well be candid with the farmers, of whom we are friends, and say to them that this is all the help we can give them. The banks have been practically suspended since last January. The next amendment, according to your statement, would be to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to buy $200,000,000 or more bonds so that they could operate until next March, and that legislation, according to the report here, would not only meet with the disapproval of the Secretary of the Treasury but would meet with a veto, and we would not do what we want to do for these farmers. As for the farmer, I do not believe in praying for him and then not giving him anything. This is all we can do for him under the present circumstances. If we follow the advice of the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, I think the organization will be maintained, and if the law is upheld we will still have those banks.

Mr. Chairman, I have worked hard for this bill. I have had conferences with Mr. Lobdell and Mr. Lever of the Farm Loan Board. I have gone to the different committees of the House; was before the Rules Committee to help get the rule. If this bill passes there will be $60,000,000 available. This will clean up the loans that the banks have made, and it will be a help. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is really in favor of appropriating money and having the banks go ahead for the next year, I will vote for this measure, but to adopt his amendment to this bill would not help one bit, as we would not have the money, as he admits himself, to carry it out. The thing I am afraid of is that if we adopt his amendment we will displease the Secretary of the Treasury. His statement is here with the report, which is plain and concise. He briefly says he will use the balance of the $200,000,000 but no more. I believe in taking this $60,000,000, and then I will go as far as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], or the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], or anyone else in trying to get an appropriation so that these banks can function while the case is pending; but the officers of the Federal farm-loan bank tell me, and the Secretary of the Treasury says in this report, that they do not consider that good policy.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the officers of the Federal farm-loan bank are friendly to it. I know when they ask us to do something for the bank that they are trying to preserve it. But when it comes to the amendments offered here on the floor by Members who are not in touch with the matter, I can not always tell whether they are friendly or unfriendly to the Federal farm-loan bank. However, anyone can see at a glance that this amendment changing the time without adding money is an unfriendly amendment, and could have no other effect than to complicate the matter, make grief for the bill in the other branch of Congress, and make grief for it with the Secretary of the Treasury, who will have to furnish the money to buy the bonds. And it seems to me that it is very plain that the real friends of the Federal farm-loan bank that want to see it continue to succeed will not vote to make the bill impracticable when it is passed.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be now closed.

Mr. MORGAN. I object. I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the debate on this amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the debate on this amendment be now closed.

Mr. PLATT. I will amend that by saying five minutes.

Mr. WINGO. By whom is it to be used? Certainly not by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN]. He has made three speeches.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose you are getting tired of my speeches.

Mr. WINGO. I am not; but I think the House may get tired of them.

Mr. MORGAN. I would not be surprised, but this is a matter of very great importance to thousands of farmers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORGAN. The motion for closing the debate in five minutes applies to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, does it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It applies only, the Chair thinks, to the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to detain the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Let us vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MORGAN. Was not I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was recognized, but the Chair understood the gentleman to say he did not care to use his time.

Mr. MORGAN. I said I did not like to detain the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. MORGAN. I know that I have occupied considerable time on this bill, but I feel like I am discharging my duty. A few minutes ago I spoke against the committee amendment. Since that time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has moved to amend it by striking out "1920" and inserting "1921." Of course, if the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky can be carried, then I would have no objection to the committee amendment as amended. I think there is no danger of doing any great harm by carrying this amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. There is one thing that I would like to have the gentleman explain to the House. The Government to-day, as I understand it, is obliged to pay 5½ per cent on what money it borrows.

Mr. MORGAN. That is on short-time certificates; yes.

Mr. PHELAN. The Government bonds are selling on the open market at——

Mr. MORGAN. That has been repeated several times. It has been repeated here that the Government is paying 5½ per cent interest, but that is on short-time bonds and short-time certificates. The Government is not paying 5½ per cent on any long-time bonds. But even if it were, that has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. PHELAN. Why not?

Mr. MORGAN. Simply because the object of this amendment, the whole object of the resolution brought in, is to help agriculture, and if you do not have that purpose in view you ought not to have brought it in here. If you can help agriculture a little you can help it more, and you can not make a sound argument in favor of the resolution that you have reported that does not apply to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. You can not say you can help a little but what you can say you can help a little more, and especially that you can help in a substantial manner. This your resolution will not do. You are illogical and inconsistent and unfair in your argument.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the gentleman recall that in the Federal farm-loan act there was an absolute prohibition on the part of the system to issuing a bond carrying greater than 5 per cent interest, so that no bank can issue to the Government even a bond which will pay more than 5 per cent?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I am not asking that. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky does not ask that.

Mr. PHELAN. I am asking you.

Mr. MORGAN. The objection I have to the resolution reported by the committee is that it does not go far enough. It covers only loans closed and approved prior to March 1, 1920. If it is right to take money out of the Treasury to help those whose loans were approved prior to March 1, 1920, it is not wrong to help those applying thereafter. I want, if possible, to make some arrangement to enable these banks to go on and transact business.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the committee amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate on the pending committee amendment do now close. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 351) extending the provisions of an act amending section 32 of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, to June 30, 1921, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to move to recommit with instructions to amend the provision which is known as the committee amendment. At what time will that motion be in order?

The SPEAKER. After the engrossment of the bill. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the preamble be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the preamble be stricken out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit this resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to report it back to the House forthwith, with an amendment changing the figures from "1920" to "1921," in line 12 on page 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY offers a motion to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report it back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment: On page 2, line 12, strike out the figures "1920" and insert the figures "1921."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, that identical amendment was just voted down in committee. Is it in order to move that in a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It is in the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that motion to recommit, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to recommit the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 57.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Obviously there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of the motion to recommit will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 151, answered "present" 1, not voting 155, as follows:

Mr. BURKE with Mr. DREWRY.

Mr. HILL with Mr. BENSON.
Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON with Mr. SEARS.
Mr. MERRITT with Mr. SMITH of New York.
Mr. MANN of Illinois with Mr. GALLIVAN.
Mr. HULINGS with Mr. SABATH.
Mr. PORTER with Mr. STEVENSON.
Mr. REBER with Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina.
Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. WOODS of Virginia.
Mr. BOWERS with Mr. HAMILL.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on passing the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. PLATT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

COLD-STORAGE BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9521, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference on the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, is this the bill where the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And there is but one amendment?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JUUL. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not a certain amendment in which I am vitally interested is still in the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; because everything after the enacting clause is stricken out.

Mr. JUUL. Is the substance of the amendment in the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. It will be in conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, and Mr. YOUNG of Texas.

MUSCLE SHOALS NITRATE PLANT NO. 2.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMON. Gentlemen of the House, I have asked a minute to read a special invitation to the Members of the House of Representatives, as follows:

SPECIAL INVITATION TO MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND MEMBERS OF THEIR FAMILIES.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Board of Farm Organizations, the National Grange, and the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America, through their Washington representatives, cordially invite you to see a motion picture of the Muscle Shoals nitrate plant No. 2, showing the plant from the beginning of construction to the period of its operation in the production of cyanamide and ammonium nitrate for explosives.

This motion picture was taken and made available by the Bureau of Economics and approved by the officials of the War Department.

Col. Burns and Maj. Gaillard, of the Nitrate Division of the War Department, have kindly consented to be present each evening and explain the military side of nitrate plant No. 2, and answer any questions Members of the House may ask.

Washington representatives of the farmers' organizations will be present each evening to explain the agricultural and fertilizer side of the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals.

There will also be shown an interesting motion picture of the Roosevelt Dam and growing crops in the Salt River Valley, Ariz., illustrating what this dam has done for arid lands in contrast with what nitrate plant No. 2 may do for lands requiring fertilizer.

These motion pictures will be displayed in the majority caucus room of the House Office Building at 8 p. m. on the evenings of May 17, 18, and 19.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MORGAN and Mr. PLATT were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks by Mr. SMITH of Michigan is as follows:

[Michigan Cooperative Crop Reporting Service. Michigan Department of State, Division of Agriculture. United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Crop Estimates. Offices: Rooms 201–207, Post Office Building.]

LANSING, MICH., May 14, 1920.

The number of men that have left the farms of Michigan during the past three years is three times as great as the number of Michigan men that died or were killed in the Civil War. It would require the present male population over 15 years of age of Lansing and Flint to replace them. There are enough vacant farmhouses in Michigan to conveniently house the population of Grand Rapids. The number of farmhouses vacated within the past 12 months could easily accommodate all of the people in the city of Jackson with homes.

Eight and seventy-four one hundredths per cent of the farms of the State are wholly idle this year, an area of approximately 1,668,000 acres, equal to about five ordinary counties. The total men and boys over 15 years of age on the farms of the State is 230,000, or 82.5 acres to be worked by each man or boy.

These figures are based upon a complete survey made during the past four weeks by the Michigan Crop Reporting Service, under the joint supervision of Mr. Coleman C. Vaughan, secretary of state, and Verne H. Church, field agent, United States Bureau of Crop Estimates, and aided by the office of the superintendent of public instruction. A blank was mailed to each rural school director asking for a report upon the farms of his school district. The compilation of these reports shows that 18,232 farms are idle this year, as compared with 11,831 last year. While the abandonment, which in many cases is temporary because of the lack of tenant farmers, is least in the best farming sections, it is found to be a community movement. Many districts show no abandonment, but where families began leaving the act seems to be contagious until, in some cases, one-third to one-half of the school district had migrated to the city. In the south-central district only 4.7 per cent of the farms are idle, and in some counties only 3 per cent. In the northwest district of the Lower Peninsula 19.4 per cent are idle, and occasional counties report 25 per cent or more.

This abandonment does not tell the whole story. A large percentage of men on farms are past 50 years of age and without help. The average size of farms is 91.5 acres, and there are but 11 men and boys to each 10 farms, or but one man or boy to each 82.5 acres, with many of these unable to do a full man's work. There are 30,300 vacant houses on farms, 10,000 of which have been vacated within the last year.

Of the 276,000 men on farms three years ago, 46,000 have since left; 20,000 of them during the past year. This unprecedented exodus from farms indicates that city and industrial life have become more profitable and satisfactory than farm life. A recent preliminary survey conducted by the State farm bureau shows similar and comparable results, and that there would be a decrease of 15.8 per cent in the acreage of cultivated crops this year as a result. Its report also shows that the number of dairy cattle has decreased 11.3 per cent during the past year.

As Michigan is only typical of the condition found in most of the other States, it is evident that the production of farm crops will decline as long as the present situation continues, and as long as the cost of producing these crops follows so closely the price the farmer receives. With a steadily decreasing supply and increasing demand, the price of food will continue to advance.

The only remedy is a reversal of present conditions through an increase in the number of food producers and a corresponding decrease in the number of nonproducers of food. This reversal will only come when the remuneration for growing food crops becomes as great in proportion, taking into account investment, risk, and labor, as that of other occupations, and when farm life takes on attractiveness equal to that of city life.

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to report a disagreement on the Army reorganization bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to reach an agreement thereon.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to sections 59 to 68, inclusive, of the Senate amendments to the House bill and concur in the same with an amendment to read as follows:

SEC. —. Strength of the National Guard of the United States: The maximum strength of the National Guard of the United States, as established under the provisions of this act, and that may be organized in any State in time of peace shall be equal to 800 officers and enlisted men for each Senator and Representative in Congress and a number, to be determined by the President, for each Territory and the District of Columbia: Provided, That in States which have but one Representative in Congress the maximum strength of the National Guard of the United States therein organized shall be determined by the President: Provided further, That the word Territory, as used in this act relative to the National Guard of the United States, shall include and apply to Hawaii, Alaska, Porto Rico, and the Canal Zone. Except as otherwise specifically prescribed herein, the organization of the National Guard of the United States, including the composition of all units thereof, the location of such units, and the assignment of such units to the brigades, divisions, and corps of the Army of the United States, shall be as provided in sections — and — of this act.

SEC. —. Enlistment in the National Guard of the United States: Whenever any State or Territory shall have provided by law for enlistment in the troops of such State or Territory of all persons resident in such State or Territory who enlist in the National Guard of the United States, and shall have otherwise complied with the conditions of this act for the keeping of State or Territorial troops, any person resident in such State or Territory, and liable for military service in time of war, except enlisted men of the Regular Army and the enlisted Reserve Corps, may, within the limits as to number provided by section — of this act, be voluntarily enlisted in the National Guard of the United States, and while serving therein shall be exempted from other military service: Provided, That such person shall at the same time and by the same enlistment contract enlist in the troops of the State or Territory of his residence: Provided further, That the period for which such person enlists in the troops of the State or Territory shall be such that his State or Territory enlistment will terminate concurrently with his Federal enlistment. Such enlistment in the National Guard of the United States shall be for a period of three years, except as specifically provided for in section — of this act, with the privilege of reenlisting for additional periods of not less than one nor more than three years. The qualifications for enlistment in the National Guard of the United States shall be the same as those prescribed for enlistment in the Regular Army, subject to such modifications as the President may direct. Enlisted men in the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall, with their consent, be recognized as members of the National Guard of the United States under the provisions of this act for the unexpired portion of their present enlistment contracts. All persons enlisting for service in the National Guard of the United States shall sign an enlistment contract and take and subscribe to an oath in the following form:

"I do hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted this —— day of ———, 19—, as a soldier in the National Guard of the United States and in the troops of the (State) (Territory) of ——— for the period of three years under conditions prescribed by law, unless sooner discharged by proper authority, and I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America, and that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and of the officers appointed over me according to law and the rules and Articles of War. And I do solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the (State) (Territory) of ———, and to obey the orders of the governor thereof subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States."

An elisted man discharged from service in the National Guard of the United States shall receive a discharge in writing, in such form and with such classification as is, or shall be, prescribed for enlisted men of the Regular Army. In time of peace discharges may be given prior to the expiration of terms of enlistment under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

SEC. —. Officers of the National Guard of the United States: The Secretary of War may detail or assign officers of the Regular Army to duty with the National Guard of the United States according to the requirements of the service, and in time of peace shall assign officers of the reserve personnel, with their consent, to duty with organizations of the National Guard of the United States in each State or Territory upon the recommendation of the governor of the State or Territory concerned, and upon the grant to such officers of State or Territorial commission in their respective grades by the governor of such State or Territory, when such State or Territory shall by law have duly authorized such action upon the part of the governor thereof and shall have otherwise complied with the conditions of this act for the keeping of State or Territorial troops. In the District of Columbia such officers shall be assigned upon the recommendation of the commanding general of the National Guard of the United States in said District: Provided, That no officer of the Regular Army shall be assigned to the command of any organization of the National Guard of the United States, entirely comprised within the limits of any State except with the approval of the governor thereof. The commanding officers and staffs of organizations of the National Guard of the United States composed of troops from two or more States shall be assigned from the Regular Army or reserve personnel of the Army under regulations prepared as prescribed in section — of this act. Officers so detailed or assigned may accept such State or Territorial commissions, with the permission of the President and terminable in his discretion, without vacating their commissions in the Regular Army or Officers' Reserve Corps or being prejudiced in their relative or lineal standing therein. No person shall be commissioned as an officer of the National Guard of the United States unless such person holds a commission in the Regular Army or Officers' Reserve Corps. All persons hereafter to be commissioned as officers in the National Guard of the United States shall, upon being commissioned under the provisions of this act, take and subscribe to the following oath:

"I, ——— ———, having been appointed a ——— in the National Guard of the United States, do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ——— in the National Guard of the United States upon which I am about to enter. I do further solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the State of ——— and to obey the orders of the governor thereof, subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States, so help me God."

SEC. —. Discipline and training of the National Guard of the United States: The discipline and training of the National Guard of the United States shall conform to the system which is now or may hereafter be prescribed for the Regular Army. Each company, troop, battery, and detachment in the National Guard of the United States shall assemble for drill and instruction, including indoor target practice, not less than 48 times each year, and shall, in addition thereto, participate in encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, including outdoor target practice, at least 15 days in training each year, including target practice, unless such company, troop, battery, or detachment shall have been excused from participation in any part thereof by the Secretary of War, or shall at the time prescribed therefor be under the orders of the governor of the State or Territory as provided for in section — of this act.

All offices and employees of the United States and of the District of Columbia who shall be members of the National Guard of the United States shall be entitled to leave of absence from their respective duties, without loss of pay, time, or efficiency rating, on all days during which they shall be engaged in field or coast-defense training ordered or authorized under the provisions of this act.

SEC. —. Liability of the National Guard of the United States for service: When Congress shall have authorized the use of the land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of the Regular Army, the President may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, call into active service for the period of the emergency, unless sooner relieved, the whole or any part of the National Guard of the United States: Provided, That when necessary in order to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrections, or to repel invasions, the President may, in his discretion and under the same conditions as permit the calling out of the National Guard of the several States or Territories, call into active service the whole or any part of the National Guard of the United States to serve solely within the United States, for such period as he may direct. Officers and enlisted men called into active service under the terms of this section shall have the same pay and allowances as officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army of the same grades and same prior service.

SEC. —. Maintenance of other troops by the States: The consent of Congress is hereby given to each of the States to maintain troops in time of peace: Provided, That the State concerned shall first make provision therefor by legislative enactment in no respect contrary to, and in all respects in harmony with, the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no troops shall be thus maintained except such as belong to the units of the National Guard of the United States comprised within the limits of such State: Provided further, That the States and Territories in time of peace, and subject to such regulations as to expense and property accountability as may be prescribed by the President, shall be entitled to use as State or Territorial troops under the direct orders of the governor of the State or Territory, and for such purpose as State or Territorial militia might legally be used, so much of the National Guard of the United States within their respective borders as has been enlisted in the troops of the State or Territory and commissioned by the governor thereof in accordance with the terms of this act and as is not at the time in active service under a call by the President: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance by the States and Territories of State or Territorial militia, State police, or State constabulary.

SEC. —. Pay for the National Guard of the United States: Captains and lieutenants belonging to organizations of the National Guard of the United States shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly base pay prescribed for officers of the Regular Army of their grades, for each regular drill or other period of instruction authorized by the Secretary of War, not exceeding five in any one calendar month at which they shall have been officially present for the required period, and at which not less than 50 per cent of the commissioned strength and at least 60 per cent of the enlisted strength attend and participate for at least one and one-half hours. Captains commanding organizations shall receive $240 per annum in addition to the drill pay herein prescribed. Officers above the grade of captain shall receive not more than $500 per annum, and officers below the grade of major, not belonging to organizations, shall receive not more than four-thirtieths of the monthly base pay of their grades, for satisfactory performance of their appropriate duties, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Each enlisted man belonging to an organization of the National Guard of the United States shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the initial monthly pay of his grade in the Regular Army for each drill ordered for his organization at which he is officially present, and in which he participates for not less than one and one-half hours, not exceeding five in any one calendar month; but no enlisted man shall receive any pay under the provisions of this section for any month in which he shall have attended less than 60 per cent of the drills or other exercises prescribed for his organization. Periods of actual military duty equivalent to the drills herein prescribed may be accepted in lieu of such drills when so provided by the Secretary of War. Pay under the provisions of this section shall not accrue to any person during a period when he shall be lawfully entitled to the same pay as a member of the Regular Army of corresponding grade.

SEC. —. The National Guard of the United States subject to laws governing the Regular Army: The National Guard of the United States, except when on duty as State troops pursuant to orders from competent State authority, shall be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to officers and enlisted men whose permanent retention in active military service is not contemplated by existing law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have read sections 59 to 68, which are sought to be amended by this amendment?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, while this verbiage seems to be rather long——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that the sections 59 to 68 be reported.

Mr. BLANTON. We would like to have them read so that we can understand what we are voting on.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KAHN. Reserving the right to object, of course the bill has been printed, and I imagine most of the Members of the House are familiar with those sections. The language of the proposed amendment is rather long, and yet the principle involved is very short, and the entire matter can be explained in five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it is right and proper for the membership of this House to be called upon to vote upon matters of such extensive preparation as are embraced in these proposed amendments, especially when we have not had sections 59 to 68 read, and to know what we are voting upon?

Mr. KAHN. The bill has been printed for several weeks.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but we do not know at this time what those sections are without looking them up.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will allow me, and if the House will bear with me for five minutes and let me explain the amendment, and after that if the House desires and still wants the sections read, I will have no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. It has taken 15 minutes to read the proposed amendment.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I want to say that I think the substance can be explained in a very few minutes, but there are many Members who would like to study the proposition as it has been read here from the Clerk's desk. I do not think that we will save any time by proceeding here to-night. I am willing to expedite the matter, but I suggest to the gentleman that if he will ask to suspend with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, and take this matter up at an earlier hour even, it will suit me, and I think that we can dispose of it very quickly.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, would this matter be in order the first thing to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, if further consideration of it is dispensed with now? To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday and ordinarily that would intervene. The conferees have been in session for four weeks. If we can dispose of this matter this evening, we can probably get a complete agreement upon the bill so that the reorganization measure may be brought before the House and passed before the end of this week.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of this conference report without its being first printed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that it had been printed, but the Chair thinks that no consent has been given. Debate, however, has proceeded.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Chair has not given any opportunity for objection.

The SPEAKER. Anyone can raise the point at any moment.

Mr. CRAMTON. I make the point now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it is too late now. The Chair thinks that debate has commenced.

Mr. CRAMTON. But there was no opportunity given by the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas to withhold his point of order for the moment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I say that the Chair has not submitted the question at any time to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the conference report had been printed. It has recently been called to his attention that it has not been printed. Of course, no point of order was raised against its being considered at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that he should first hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought a point of order would take precedence over the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the matter can only be taken up by suspension of the rules. The Speaker has not asked unanimous consent for that purpose. Hence the proceedings up to this point have simply been out of order, to which objection could have been made at any time. I now make the point of order that the report not having been printed its consideration, without unanimous consent, is out of order. It is a matter of the very greatest importance.

The SPEAKER. The only question in the mind of the Chair is as to whether debate having proceeded, it is not now too late to make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Two points of order can not be pending at the same time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, if it should develop that the House was under the misapprehension that the Speaker was under, that this conference report had been printed, would the point of order be barred against its consideration at this time merely because some men had asked questions about it?

The SPEAKER. The only question in the mind of the Chair is as to whether debate having proceeded, it is now subject to the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Chair that the recollection of the Chair is faulty about whether debate has been begun. There has been some miscellaneous talk back and forth about something or other, but there never has been a word said about the matter pending in the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California merely presented the report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California presented a conference report which reports a disagreement. Ordinarily under the rule that report should have been ordered printed, but the gentleman from California was recognized to offer a motion to recede and concur with an amendment. Consideration of that motion has already been begun. It would seem that if the point was not raised prior to the consideration of some motion on a conference report that should properly have been printed under the rules, after consideration begins, it is then too late to raise the question that it has not been printed under the rule.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman think it would be fair to the House? The House was under the same impression that the Speaker was, that this is a conference report called up in the regular way—that is, that it had been heretofore presented and printed under the rules. The Members of the House generally were of that opinion—certainly I was—and I submit that it is not fair to the House to have it considered in this way at this time. Without charging that there is any intention at all to do so, it amounts to the same thing as sharp practice to call this matter up against objection.

Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, may I make this further statement——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, of course in submitting the motion it is equivalent to a request for instruction. Such a request does not require to be printed before it can be taken up. As chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I felt that this matter could be explained in a very short time. It is equivalent to a request for instruction.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not a fact that notwithstanding all the verbiage that has been read here as a part of this report a large part of it is existing law?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And the change that is proposed is simply a small part, and the other part, the larger part, is given with it so as to make the places where the changes come understandable.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition in order to make a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am of opinion that the committee was within its rights in submitting the matter as it has presented it. I think there is very little question as to that; but evidently the gentlemen of the House do not understand the amendments, and I am of the opinion that the matter ought to go over. It is very important, however, that the conference report be agreed to as soon as possible, because the passage of the Army appropriation bill depends upon the agreement upon this bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the matter may be taken up in the morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MASON. What objection could there be if we were to take it up in the morning after now having the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs explain the amendment? I think it would be very useful.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think we would prefer to hear that explanation after we have had an opportunity to read the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAYBURN. Calendar Wednesday has been set aside especially——

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold it for just a moment——

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it.

Mr. MONDELL. Until I make a unanimous-consent request? Does the gentleman from Missouri withhold his motion?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. If this matter were to go over at this time, would it be in order on Thursday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees no reason why it would not be in order at any moment on Thursday.

Mr. MONDELL. It would be the business on Thursday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 65, noes 132.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 154, answered "present" 1, not voting 158, as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. BENSON.

Mr. TEMPLE with Mr. GALLIVAN.

Mr. BUTLER with Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. TOWNER with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. REBER with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. EVANS of Nevada.

Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. CARAWAY.

Mr. GOOD with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana with Mr. HOLLAND.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. BLACK.

Mr. ANDERSON with Mr. EAGAN.

Mr. GOULD with Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi.

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. IGOE.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. MAHER.

Mr. EDMONDS with Mr. GARD.

Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. RANDALL of California.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. COPLEY with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. ELLSWORTH with Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. GODDYKOONTZ with Mr. BRUMBAUGH.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois with Mr. STEDMAN.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. FLOOD, and I withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday may be transferred from Wednesday to Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that business in order to-morrow, Calendar Wednesday, be transferred until Thursday. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. And that Calendar Wednesday business be dispensed with for to-morrow.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman contemplate any other business than this conference report to-morrow in case he obtains unanimous consent?

Mr. MONDELL. There are some other matters that will come up. One is the purchase of a hospital site on Wisconsin Avenue, and, I think, following that another rule, providing for some Hawaiian land matters.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is that practically all the gentleman thinks of?

Mr. MONDELL. That is all I have in mind now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, was it not at one time held that you can not do away with Calendar Wednesday by unanimous consent?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; we have done that frequently.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood that there was once such a ruling.

The SPEAKER. If it can be done away with by a two-thirds vote, the Chair thinks much more it can be done away with by unanimous consent. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question. Is this Army bill coming up to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The first thing?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. HOWARD, informed me last night that he could not be here on account of important matters, and asked me to say that if he were here he would have voted for House joint resolution 371, authorizing the purchase of Federal land-bank bonds.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD two memoranda, one prepared for the Senate in advocacy of the Senate clauses of the military measure and another memorandum prepared by an officer of the Army against the Senate provisions which are proposed here. It will set both sides of the proposition fairly before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether either of the statements will set forth the point of view of the National Guard of the country?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think one of them will set it forth fully.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is it by a National Guard officer?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are both by Regular Army officers, but one of them is friendly to the organization of the National Guard under the militia clause of the Constitution.

Mr. CRAMTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. CRAMTON. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the objection. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I insert herewith the memoranda referred to:

MEMORANDUM OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT TO H. R. 12775, TO AMEND THE "NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT," RELATING TO THE NATIONAL GUARD AS A PART OF THE CITIZEN ARMY IN TIME OF PEACE.

The object of the National Guard provisions in the Senate bill is to make the National Guard a part of the Army of the United States, organized and trained in time of peace under uniform Federal authority, so that it can be mobilized as such immediately in the event of a national emergency without change of status, at the same time preserving its use by the States under the orders of the governor as State troops and not as militia.

A further object of the bill is to establish a national military policy which will enable the War Department in time of peace to organize all of those military units which will be required immediately upon mobilization in the event of a national emergency proclaimed by Congress. It is the conception of the bill, based upon our traditional military policy, that only a limited number of these units can be formed from the authorized personnel of the Regular Army, and that the bulk of them must be composed of citizen soldiers. Such of these citizen soldiers as may voluntarily assume an obligation to serve their respective States as well as the Federal Government (an obligation identical with that now assumed by all National Guard men) will be organized in the new National Guard, while the remainder of the units required for immediate mobilization will be formed in the Organized Reserves and will be composed of those citizen soldiers who obligate themselves to serve only in a serious national emergency.

The Army of the United States as a whole, including the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves, will thus be organized in time of peace and officers and men of the Citizen Army will be definitely assigned to local units formed at or near their homes, either in the National Guard or the Organized Reserves, depending upon the character of their obligation.

In order to facilitate the initial organization of the Citizen Army veterans of the war may enroll voluntarily under liberal terms, as to length of service and discharge, either in the National Guard of the United States or in the Organized Reserves, and it is provided that the war-time divisions and other units of the National Guard and the National Army shall be preserved and perpetuated so far as practicable in the Citizen Army.

In order to solve the complicated problems of organization, readjustment, and distribution involved in the initial establishment of the Citizen Army the bill provides that selected veteran officers of the National Guard, the National Army, and the Officers' Reserve Corps shall participate with the General Staff in the solution of these problems. The effect of these measures will be to establish in time of peace a military organization sufficient for initial mobilization, territorially distributed, and provided even in the Organized Reserves with a corps of officers and noncommissioned officers assigned to their several local units and prepared to receive the man power of the Nation in the event of national emergency.

This constitutes a settled national military policy and a complete organization established in time of peace. But it can not be carried into effect so long as the National Guard retains its present status under the militia clauses of the Constitution. This is true for the following reasons:

1. In its present constitutional status the National Guard can be used only to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrections, and to repel invasions. It can not be used for general military purposes, and therefore can not be included as such in general plans for the national defense. Its individual members were used in the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, and the recent World War, but only after a change of status involving a rupture of peace-time organization and the delay incidental to a complete reorganization and readjustment of personnel. It is fair to assume that in the future, as in the past, we will generally need citizen soldiers for purposes other than those authorized by the Constitution for the militia.

2. It can not be given the uniform training required in an efficient national military force because under the Constitution the authority to train it is expressly reserved to the several States.

3. It can not be provided with an officer corps trained under uniform standards and imbued with a uniform tactical doctrine, because the appointment and training of its officers is expressly reserved to the several States. Congress may prescribe standards as a qualification for armory pay, but until the Federal Government has the power to train, it can not ascertain whether these standards have actually been attained.

4. It can not be organized in higher tactical units such as the division except in a few very large States, because as a rule the components of the National Guard divisions must include contingents from several States. So long as these contingents remain militia there can be no authority, either Federal or State, for the appointment of a divisional commander or headquarters. The State of New York can perpetuate the Twenty-seventh Division and the State of Pennsylvania can perpetuate the Twenty-eighth Division, but under the militia status there can be no effective means of perpetuating the Twenty-sixth Division of New England, because none of the New England States is populous enough to maintain a complete division. Under the reconstitution of the National Guard, Illinois and Ohio and perhaps one or two other States may be able to maintain divisions, but the National Guard of most States, such as Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, the Carolinas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Colorado, Washington, and Oregon, can never be incorporated into effective divisional teams in time of peace so long as the National Guard remains under the militia status. This means not only that they can not perpetuate their relation to their war-time divisions, but also that they can not be effectively organized or trained for full military service in time of peace.

5. Its officers in their capacity as militia officers can not be called into active service in time of peace in order to perfect their military training through attendance at the special or general service schools. Under the Constitution they can be called into the service only in order to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrection or to repel invasion. And it is only under such circumstances that they are subject to the President as Commander in Chief or to any of his military subordinates. They would not be bound to obey the orders of Army officers of superior rank and they would have no right to issue orders to Army officers of inferior rank or to enlisted men. They might receive instruction at such institutions under a sort of gentlemen's agreement, but they would not be subject to military discipline. Though bearing military commissions from their respective governors, they would not belong to the officer corps of the Army. They would be bound by no military obligations and entitled to no military rights, as would a reserve officer in the same circumstances.

It is competent for Congress to make qualification at appropriate military schools a requirement for the promotion of reserve officers of high rank. But it can impose no such condition upon militia officers, because the constitutional Commander in Chief has no power to require their attendance at such schools; and even if he had such a power with reference to a militia officer, its exercise would curtail the appointing power of the governor.

6. Notwithstanding the importance of giving National Guard officers a representation on the General Staff, if the National Guard is to be reorganized as an important element in the peace organization of our national defense system, their detail to the General Staff as such would have no constitutional sanction. The National Guard Militia is a part of the Army of the United States only when called into the Federal service for certain specified purposes, and none of its individuals can be called into the military service of the United States except for such purposes. National Guard Militia officers if attached to the General Staff could not be so attached as such. They would be civilian employees without any military status. Under the unlimited powers "to raise and support armies" and "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land forces" it would be quite competent for Congress, in its discretion, to attach representatives of the Boy Scouts or the Women's Christian Temperance Union or the Salvation Army to the General Staff or to place a representative of the Knights of Pythias at the head of a bureau of the War Department, but it is specifically denied the power under the Constitution to make any such disposition of militia officers, except when the militia is constitutionally in the service of the United States.

7. Even when the Militia National Guard is called out for the limited purposes specified in the Constitution, its passage into the Federal service involves a transfer from 50 separate jurisdictions to a single Federal jurisdiction. Though trained, organized, officered, governed, and disciplined under many different standards, it must now suddenly and without any preparation therefor come under the command of the President as Commander in Chief, a command which must be exercised through a military hierarchy entirely unaccustomed to deal with the practical difficulties that confront the citizen soldier.

8. Under the existing system the National Guard is trained and governed under 50 separate and independent jurisdictions. When called into Federal service on the outbreak of war it must not only change its constitutional status but its officers and men must come under a new and unaccustomed single standard of administration, discipline, and training. This is necessary in order to incorporate it as a component of an effective national army. This not only requires reorganization, but must always involve a serious hardship on officers who have had no opportunity to qualify for military command under uniform Federal standards in time of peace. If the National Guard were organized as a part of the Army in time of peace, its training would be standardized and its officers of all grades would be qualified under uniform Federal requirements which would be recognized upon mobilization. Under such circumstances all officers would be recognized as qualified when commissioned in their respective grades and a progressive system of promotion based on tested qualification for each successive step would be developed. This would avoid the necessity of eliminating many officers, especially in the higher grades, who under the existing system can not be subjected to authoritative tests of efficiency until a sudden emergency brings them the full responsibility of high command in the Army of the United States in war.

In review of the above considerations it may be said that a citizen army formed under the militia clauses of the Constitution can not be prepared in peace for effective service in war. This is true for the following principal reasons:

(a) It can not be used for general military purposes as such, but must be reorganized in a new constitutional status before it can be employed as a war force.

(b) Its officers and men can not be trained in peace under uniform Federal standards.

(c) Its officers can not be recognized as a part of the Army in time of peace and therefore can not participate as such in determining their proper relation to the national military policy.

These defects in the national military organization can be corrected only by relieving the National Guard of its militia status and by reorganizing it as a citizen force under the power to raise and support armies. It remains to be seen whether this can be accomplished without depriving the States of the right to use the National Guard for State purposes.

Under the Senate bill the National Guard is to be organized and trained under the power to raise and support armies. It thus becomes a national force but Congress authorizes the States to use it precisely as they may now use it under the direct orders of the several governors, but as State troops and not as militia. The power of Congress to make such a disposition is implied in Article I, section 10, of the Constitution, which says: "No State shall, without the consent of Congress * * * keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace."

As the force thus becomes a Federal force, all details of its organization and training and all rules and regulations governing the appointment of its officers are under complete Federal control, except in so far as Congress may deem it wise to delegate any portion of this authority to the States. But recognizing that the National Guard within any State is to be under the orders of the governor as State troops, the bill very properly provides that no officer shall be assigned to any unit of the National Guard within the limits of any State except with the approval of the governor. The National Guard is to be a part of the citizen army and all of its officers must qualify as reserve officers of the Army of the United States. All officers of the National Guard are made eligible for appointment as reserve officers, as are all veterans of the war, and provisions are included for enabling all other qualified persons, whether members of the National Guard or not, to become reserve officers. This will create a large corps of reserve officers within each State. Any of these will be eligible for appointment in the National Guard, but none of them can be so appointed except with the approval of the governor. This assures a uniform standard of military efficiency, at the same time preserving the reasonable right of the governor to control the selection of these reserve officers who, under the terms of the bill, are to command State troops under his orders.

It has been suggested that the adoption of the Senate plan would bring the National Guard completely under the control of the War Department, and that this in practice would mean an antagonistic and unsympathetic control by officers of the Regular Army. Policies affecting the organization, training, and mobilization of the National Guard as an integral part of the Army of the United States must, indeed, be based upon recommendations of the General Staff, which is charged by law with the preparation of plans for the national defense. But under the Senate plan National Guard and other reserve officers will participate with the General Staff in the preparation of all policies and regulations affecting the organization, distribution, and training of the citizen army and all policies and regulations affecting the appointment, promotion, assignment, and discharge of reserve officers, including National Guard officers. This will assure the solution of the great problem of national defense by professional and citizen officers working together at the same table with full appreciation of every aspect of the problem.

COMMENTS ON THE ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL, REFERRING TO MEMORANDUM ON THE SENATE AMENDMENT TO H. R. 12775, TO AMEND THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT, RELATING TO THE NATIONAL GUARD AS A PART OF THE CITIZEN ARMY IN TIME OF PEACE.

This memorandum has been read with considerable interest, and is a very clever misstatement of facts, evidently framed by some one ignorant of the provisions of the act of June 3, 1916, and with ideas prejudiced against the National Guard as it now exists. It is fair to assume that whoever framed this memorandum has been very much impressed with the part played by the National Guard as it now exists in the military forces of this Nation. It perhaps is the result of some Regular officer's observation, who has been able to grasp the wonderful development in the National Guard since 1898, as shown in the mobilization of 1916 and the great World War through which we have just passed. Without doubt he is convinced that the great part of our military forces will never be found in the Regular Army, but must come through our citizen soldiery. He, therefore, is striving to absorb into our Regular forces the National Guard which heretofore, previous to the present World War, has been held by Regular officers in disrepute; in other words, he is striving to steal their glory.

The first paragraph shows ignorance of present law, because the National Guard to-day is a constituent part of the military force of the United States, just as much as the Permanent Establishment, and he assumes to state therein that it is not. The change of status to which he refers results from the application of section 111 of the present act, which, under the Constitution, is by no means a necessity. Furthermore, the Kahn bill provides a change in this section of the law which will remove the objections raised in the memorandum. There is not a point raised throughout this entire memorandum which can not be met by a modification of the act of June 3, 1916, except the base upon which it is raised, namely, the present National Guard is maintained under the militia provisions of the Constitution, whereas the force which he is advocating would be maintained under the provisions to raise and support armies.

On page 2, in paragraph No. 1, the statements are erroneous, because the National Guard can be used by the governor, as the commander in chief, for all trouble within the State for which the governor is responsible or accountable to the citizens of the State. In framing this paragraph he has started upon an erroneous basis which, it is regretted, has prevailed for many years in this country, namely, the limitations upon the use of the National Guard or Organized Militia. The Constitution will allow the use of this force for any purpose for which the Regular Army can be used if the President so desires. There is not a word in the Constitution which would justify the sending of a Regular Army beyond the limits of the United States which would not apply with equal force to the National Guard, and if the Commander in Chief can send a Regular Army to foreign territory in the interests of our common defense, there is no doubt whatever that he has similar power with respect to the Organized Militia. The use of military forces as contemplated in our Constitution is for no other purpose than for our common defense. The best defense of a nation in case of war is to attack the enemy on his own territory.

In paragraph No. 2 he omits to state in this paragraph that the training which the States must carry out shall be according to the discipline prescribed by Congress. Therefore there are no 50 separate systems of training—there is one, and that one is the one prescribed by Congress. There are, of course, 50 separate States carrying out this training, but the entire control of training is in the hands of Congress and not in the hands of the States. There can be no more comprehensive term used for giving over to Congress the instruction of the National Guard than the terms that appear in the Constitution reserving to the States the training of the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

With respect to paragraph No. 3, the only thing which is exclusively reserved to the States is the appointment of the officer, yet the right of the Federal Government to prescribe the organization, arming, and equipment of the National Guard has been so interpreted in the act of June 3, 1916, without protest from the States, as to convey to the Federal Government the right to see that unfit officers shall not be members of the National Guard and only fit officers shall be members. Because the National Guard is not fully developed, or even approximately developed, under the act of June 3, 1916, is no reason for condemning the act of June 3, 1916, particularly by officers or citizens who are ignorant of the splendid provisions of that act.

Paragraph No. 4. This statement is erroneous because under the militia clause of the Constitution it is an established fact that tactical units of divisions have been formed from the National Guard, and they have been formed into the divisions required by the War Department, namely, 16 divisions, and they fought in France with great credit. Furthermore, the National Guard furnished more divisions than was originally contemplated by the War Department in that the Forty-second Division was formed, and also the nucleus for a colored division; yet the War Department originaly contemplated only 16 divisions from that force. The statement that divisions can not be formed from troops of more than one State is absolutely absurd and disproved by our experience of the recent war, and is being disproved at the present time by the reorganization of the National Guard under the act of June 3, 1916. Whenever a division is called together, formed from numerous States, there certainly are sufficient regular officers with war experience to control and command the division thus formed, and perhaps to much greater advantage than could occur if the division commander was an officer of the National Guard of any particular State. It is possible the commander might be more efficient.

On page 3, numbered paragraph 5, the President can call any portion of the Organized Militia which he desires into service, or all of it, and if he desires to call officers of the National Guard for duty this can be done. The attendance at schools at the present time is left optional with the student officer and perhaps properly so. The despotic power of seizing a citizen soldier from his usual vocation at any time which may be dictated by the policy of the General Staff is believed inadvisable during times of peace. Such a policy would render military training absolutely obnoxious and distasteful to the great mass of our American citizens, and certainly would not be an American institution. It would partake of Prussian methods. Under the present law any National Guard officer who desires to attend a service school and is fitted therefor and is able to spare the time from his usual vocation, can be sent for such instruction so far as the appropriations made by Congress will permit. This is the present law, and it is in direct accord with American principles. It has been strongly advocated by the people interested in the development of the National Guard that National Guard officers be appointed from officers of the Federal Reserve Corps, and the objections to this procedure has emanated from the permanent establishment rather than from the National Guard. It is the permanent establishment which raises the great cry of "incompatibility," yet in the next voice they are crying, "Let us have one Army." The barriers which are erected by the interpretations of the Judge Advocate General's Department are more or less artificial, and they are not in the interest of developing one Army. They are more properly intended to create obstacles in the federalization of our National Guard units and to guide our military forces in divergent channels. If this policy is changed there need be no change in our present law of any importance in this regard.

There have been furnished to members of the military committee provisions of law which would so amend the act of June 3, 1916, as to make it necessary for all officers of the National Guard to pass the examinations required for Federal Reserve officers. All it needs is passage by Congress to correct the conditions mentioned in this paragraph.

With respect to paragraph numbered 6, the President, if he sees fit, can call a National Guard officer for duty, and without doubt the patriotism in the National Guard officer would never let him hesitate in replying to a call for duty upon the General Staff. The contentions in this paragraph is a bugaboo which can be dismissed with almost a smile.

On page 4, paragraph 7, the points raised in this paragraph emanate from ignorance of the law and the handling of the National Guard at the present time. Under the act of June 3, 1916, as has been suggested in the Kahn bill, the transfer from 50 separate States or jurisdictions to a single Federal jurisdiction, is effected by the issuance of an order—not a very difficult method at the present time. Furthermore, as has been brought forth before in these comments, every one of these organizations, even though under 50 separate jurisdictions, must be trained according to one discipline. There was no trouble whatever in providing organizations at the beginning of the recent World War; there was no particular trouble in throwing them into divisions and brigades other than the troubles which were required by the General Staff, because the entire divisional organization was changed upon the eve of war. This was no fault of the National Guard, but rather the fault of the wise men in the War Department who should have had a proper divisional organization devised during times of peace for the organization of the National Guard. The delay in organization of National Guard divisions was due almost entirely to the breaking up of the divisions originally planned and forming therefrom an entirely different divisional organization. This was the confusion; this was the delay, and the fault, if any, rests on the General Staff or War Department.

With respect to page 4, paragraph No. 8, the change into a single standard of administration was accomplished in a satisfactory manner at the beginning of the World War, and it will be very much easier done on future occasions. The writer here attempts to belittle the act of June 3, 1916, and he does not realize that the act was never applied. There was too limited a time intervening between the passage of that act and the draft for the War Department to perfect the act in its application. The ignorance of the author of this memorandum is shown by the following argument: "If the National Guard were organized as a part of the Army in time of peace its training would be standardized and its officers of all grades would be qualified under uniform Federal requirements which would be recognized upon mobilization." This is exactly what is contemplated and laid down in law by the act of June 3, 1916, and yet the author desires to change that law. The whole attention of the Militia Bureau is being concentrated upon the very subjects which he brings forth on page 4.

In connection with his following principal reasons, with respect to "(a)"—can any sane American agree to this statement when they consider the part played in the recent World War by the National Guard? It was reorganized, but on account of the unexpected demands by the War Department a new constitutional status under section 111 of the act of June 3, 1916, was assumed, which status was assumed by the issue of a proclamation on the muster of the troops and inspection of the equipment. The provisions already suggested to Congress to be inserted in a new section 111 will absolutely cut out the inspection of men and equipment. The change in the constitutional status will be simply by a proclamation of the President. With respect to reason "(b)," this is absurd, because it is being accomplished at the present time. The only reason that a defect can be claimed in this respect is due to the fact that Federal standards are not uniform; they are constantly changing, and the National Guard in many cases are trained as near Federal standards as any human intellect can devise. In reason "(c)" the man, citizen, or Regular officer who fails to recognize officers of the National Guard in time of peace as a part of our national military force needs education; he is groping away back in the times, perhaps of the Revolution, and needs to be informed as to the progress made in this force. Every one of the defects mentioned can be met squarely by the act of June 3, 1916, when modified as has been suggested to several members of the Military Committee.

Attention is again called to the fact that the National Guard and all our forces in the Senate bill become federalized, and, so far as our system of government is concerned, this is a dangerous procedure. It is a procedure which anyone who is thoroughly familiar with our form of government will protest against, because it is following closely along the lines of despotism, Prussianism, and autocracy, which are the deadly enemies of Americanism. The provision in the Senate bill for the governor of a State to issue orders to Federal troops is certainly unconstitutional, even though it be placed upon the statute books in the form of law.

On page 5 a discussion occurs. "This assures a uniform standard of military efficiency, at the same time preserving the reasonable right of the governor to control the selection of these reserve officers who, under the terms of the bill, are to command State troops under his orders." A uniform standard of military efficiency is already assured under the present law, and if the War Department would remove the artificial barriers maintained by decisions of the Judge Advocate General between the Regular Army and the National Guard, which is a constituent part of our national forces, the present bill can readily be modified to insure a uniform standard of military efficiency by limiting the appointment of officers by the governor to those officers who duly qualify under the examinations prescribed for the Federal Reserve Officers' Corps. This change is desired by those interested in the development of the National Guard and is frustrated by the attitude of the War Department.

With respect to the last paragraph in this memorandum, at the present time there can be no denying that there is a strong antagonism among the citizens toward the Regular Army. It is an open secret that certain influential members of the Regular Army believed that section 111 of the act of June 3, 1916, as interpreted, if put in force, would absolutely destroy the National Guard at the termination of the World War; perhaps they were animated by sympathy and affection; but if so, they had a very peculiar way of showing such feelings. The training of the National Guard is now based upon recommendations of the General Staff, but unfortunately such recommendations are not always in the best interests of our national force nor of the National Guard. It appears frequently that the recommendations are of such a nature as to render it almost impossible for the proper development of a National Guard in this country, and until the General Staff receives some education concerning the National Guard and information upon its present status and the laws which govern it and the problems which confront it, there will never be a sympathetic handling of the National Guard problem of this country by the General Staff. By the calling of officers of the National Guard into conference with the General Staff for certain periods of time when National Guard matters are to be considered, no doubt far better results can be obtained than have been obtained in the past, provided the members of the General Staff are in a receptive mood. This condition and mixture of National Guard officers and professional officers can be secured without a bit of trouble under the present laws, provided Congress makes the necessary appropriations.

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be withdrawn so that it may be printed under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California submits the report on H. R. 12775, to be printed under the rules.

The following is the conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12775) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1916, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to reach an agreement thereon.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives at a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to H. R. 12775, to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, submit the following statement:

The two Houses were unable to come to an agreement on the Senate amendment. The particular points of disagreement are the provisions regarding the reorganization of the National Guard. The National Guard provisions of the bill as it passed the House are those contained in the national defense act of June 3, 1916, amended at the suggestion of officers of the National Guard and the Militia Bureau to remedy certain defects which four years of operation under the said national defense act had developed. The Senate amendment to the House bill, H. R. 12775, relating to the National Guard provides for its organization under the Army clauses of the Constitution of the United States.

After a full and free discussion, the Senate conferees proposed to the House conferees that the former would accept practically the substance of the House provisions of H. R. 12775 relating to the National Guard, provided the House conferees would add to the bill the substance of the Senate provisions relating to the National Guard amended as hereinafter stated, so as to authorize each State to determine for itself whether its National Guard should remain as now organized under the national defense act or by an affirmative act of its legislature adopt the National Guard organized under the Army clauses as provided in the amendments hereinafter stated. In other words, the language of the proposed compromise would allow the legislature in each State to determine whether its National Guard should remain as now provided by law under the militia clause of the Constitution or whether it should be reorganized under the Army clauses as provided in the amendment hereinafter proposed, with the distinct understanding that no feature of the change should be carried into effect until the necessary enabling legislataion has been passed by the State.

The language of the proposed compromise is as follows, to wit:

"SEC. —. Strength of the National Guard of the United States: The maximum strength of the National Guard of the United States, as established under the provisions of this act, and that may be organized in any State in time of peace, shall be equal to 800 officers and enlisted men for each Senator and Representative in Congress, and a number to be determined by the President for each Territory and the District of Columbia: Provided, That in States which have but one Representative in Congress the maximum strength of the National Guard of the United States therein organized shall be determined by the President: Provided further, That the word Territory as used in this act relative to the National Guard of the United States shall include and apply to Hawaii, Alaska, Porto Rico, and the Canal Zone. Except as otherwise specifically prescribed herein, the organization of the National Guard of the United States, including the composition of all units thereof, the location of such units, and the assignment of such units to the brigades, divisions, and corps of the Army of the United States shall be as provided in sections — and — of this act.

"SEC. —. Enlistments in the National Guard of the United States: Whenever any State or Territory shall have provided by law for enlistment in the troops of such State or Territory, of all persons resident in such State or Territory who enlist in the National Guard of the United States, and shall have otherwise complied with the conditions of this act for the keeping of State or Territorial troops, any person, resident in such State or Territory, and liable for military service in time of war, except enlisted men of the Regular Army and the enlisted reserve corps, may, within the limits as to number provided by section — of this act, be voluntarily enlisted in the National Guard of the United States, and, while serving therein, shall be exempted from other military service: Provided, That such person shall at the same time and by the same enlistment contract enlist in the troops of the State or Territory of his residence: Provided further, That the period for which such person enlists in the troops of the State or Territory shall be such that his State or Territory enlistment will terminate concurrently with his Federal enlistment. Such enlistment in the National Guard of the United States shall be for a period of three years, except as specifically provided for in section — of this act, with the privilege of reenlisting for additional periods of not less than one or more than three years. The qualifications for enlistment in the National Guard of the United States shall be the same as those prescribed for enlistment in the Regular Army subject to such modifications as the President may direct. Enlisted men in the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall, with their consent, be recognized as members of the National Guard of the United States under the provisions of this act for the unexpired portion of their present enlistment contracts. All persons enlisting for service in the National Guard of the United States shall sign an enlistment contract and take and subscribe to an oath in the following form:

"'I do hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted this —— day of ———, 19—, as a soldier in the National Guard of the United States and in the troops of the (State) (Territory) of ——— for the period of three years under conditions prescribed by law, unless sooner discharged by proper authority; and I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America, and that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and of the officers appointed over me according to law and the rules and Articles of War; and I do solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the (State) (Territory) of ——— and to obey the orders of the governor thereof subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States.'

"An enlisted man discharged from service in the National Guard of the United States shall receive a discharge in writing, in such form and with such classification as is or shall be prescribed for enlisted men of the Regular Army. In time of peace discharges may be given prior to the expiration of terms of enlistment under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. —. Officers of the National Guard of the United States: The Secretary of War may detail or assign officers of the Regular Army to duty with the National Guard of the United States according to the requirements of the service, and, in time of peace, shall assign officers of the reserve personnel, with their consent, to duty with organizations of the National Guard of the United States in each State or Territory upon the recommendation of the governor of the State or Territory concerned and upon the grant to such officers of State or Territorial commission in their respective grades by the governor of such State or Territory, when such State or Territory shall by law have duly authorized such action upon the part of the governor thereof and shall have otherwise complied with the conditions of this act for the keeping of State or Territorial troops. In the District of Columbia such officers shall be assigned upon the recommendation of the commanding general of the National Guard of the United States in said District: Provided, That no officer of the Regular Army shall be assigned to the command of any organization of the National Guard of the United States entirely comprised within the limits of any State except with the approval of the governor thereof. The commanding officers and staffs of organizations of the National Guard of the United States composed of troops from two or more States shall be assigned from the Regular Army or reserve personnel of the Army under regulations prepared as prescribed in section — of this act. Officers so detailed or assigned may accept such State or Territorial commissions, with the permission of the President and terminable in his discretion, without vacating their commissions in the Regular Army or Officers' Reserve Corps or being prejudiced in their relative or lineal standing therein. No person shall be commissioned as an officer of the National Guard of the United States unless such person holds a commission in the Regular Army or Officers' Reserve Corps. All persons hereafter to be commissioned as officers in the National Guard of the United States shall, upon being commissioned under the provisions of this act, take and subscribe to the following oath:

"'I, ——— ———, having been appointed a ——— in the National Guard of the United States, do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States; that I take this obligation freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office of ——— in the National Guard of the United States upon which I am about to enter. I do further solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the State of ——— and to obey the orders of the governor thereof, subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States, so help me God.'

"SEC. —. Discipline and training of the National Guard of the United States: The discipline and training of the National Guard of the United States shall conform to the system which is now or may hereafter be prescribed for the Regular Army. Each company, troop, battery, and detachment in the National Guard of the United States shall assemble for drill and instruction, including indoor target practice, not less than forty-eight times each year, and shall, in addition thereto, participate in encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, including outdoor target practice, at least fifteen days in training each year, including target practice, unless such company, troop, battery, or detachment shall have been excused from participation in any part thereof by the Secretary of War, or shall at the time prescribed therefor be under the orders of the governor of the State or Territory, as provided for in section — of this act.

"All officers and employees of the United States and of the District of Columbia who shall be members of the National Guard of the United States shall be entitled to leave of absence from their respective duties, without loss of pay, time, or efficiency rating, on all days during which they shall be engaged in field or coast-defense training ordered or authorized under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. —. Liability of the National Guard of the United States for service: When Congress shall have authorized the use of the land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of the Regular Army, the President may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, call into active service for the period of the emergency, unless sooner relieved, the whole or any part of the National Guard of the United States: Provided, That when necessary in order to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrections, or to repel invasions, the President may, in his discretion and under the same conditions as permit the calling out of the National Guard of the several States or Territories, call into active service the whole or any part of the National Guard of the United States to serve solely within the United States, for such period as he may direct. Officers and enlisted men called into active service under the terms of this section shall have the same pay and allowances as officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army of the same grades and same prior service.

"SEC. —. Maintenance of troops by the States: The consent of Congress is hereby given to each of the States to maintain troops in time of peace: Provided, That the State concerned shall first make provision therefor by legislative enactment in no respect contrary to, and in all respects in harmony with, the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no troops shall be thus maintained except such as belong to the units of the National Guard of the United States comprised within the limits of such State: Provided further, That the States and Territories in time of peace, and subject to such regulations as to expense and property accountability as may be prescribed by the President, shall be entitled to use as State or Territorial troops under the direct orders of the governor of the State or Territory, and for such purpose as State or Territorial militia might legally be used, so much of the National Guard of the United States within their respective borders as has been enlisted in the troops of the State or Territory and commissioned by the governor thereof in accordance with the terms of this act and as is not at the time in active service under a call by the President: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall prevent the organization and maintenance by the States and Territories of State or Territorial militia, State police, or State constabulary.

"SEC. —. Pay for the National Guard of the United States: Captains and lieutenants belonging to organizations of the National Guard of the United States shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly base pay prescribed for officers of the Regular Army of their grades for each regular drill or other period of instruction authorized by the Secretary of War, not exceeding five in any one calendar month, at which they shall have been officially present for the required period, and at which not less than 50 per centum of the commissioned strength and at least 60 per centum of the enlisted strength attend and participate for at least one and one-half hours. Captains commanding organizations shall receive $240 per annum in addition to the drill pay herein prescribed. Officers above the grade of captain shall receive not more than $500 per annum, and officers below the grade of major not belonging to organizations shall receive not more than four-thirtieths of the monthly base pay of their grades for satisfactory performance of their appropriate duties, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

"Each enlisted man belonging to an organization of the National Guard of the United States shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the initial monthly pay of his grade in the Regular Army for each drill ordered for his organization at which he is officially present, and in which he participates for not less than one and one-half hours, not exceeding five in any one calendar month; but no enlisted man shall receive any pay under the provisions of this section for any month in which he shall have attended less than 60 per centum of the drills or other exercises prescribed for his organization. Periods of actual military duty equivalent to the drills herein prescribed may be accepted in lieu of such drills when so provided by the Secretary of War. Pay under the provisions of this section shall not accrue to any person during a period when he shall be lawfully entitled to the same pay as a member of the Regular Army of corresponding grade.

"SEC. —. The National Guard of the United States subject to laws governing the Regular Army: The National Guard of the United States, except when on duty as State troops pursuant to orders from competent State authority, shall be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to officers and enlisted men whose permanent retention in active military service is not contemplated by existing law."

JOHN C. MCKENZIE,
S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California withdraws his motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to revise and extend the remarks which I made on the farm-loan bill this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on vocational training in the Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Do I understand that the motion submitted some time ago by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] will appear in the RECORD, notwithstanding it has now been withdrawn by him?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JUUL. Can a request for unanimous consent be repeated after it has been denied, within a reasonable time?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. JUUL. Then I make a unanimous-consent request that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] be permitted to print the two documents he referred to.

The SPEAKER. That has already been granted.

Mr. JUUL. I beg the Chair's pardon; I did not know that.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1699. An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 19, 1920.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to face the new spiritual problems of to-day. While our thoughts will be engaged in the routine matters of our daily task there shall be within us, as in every day, the conflicts, the aspirations, and the decisions of great spiritual events in our spirits. We pray that Thy hand may guide us, that Thy truth may be our law, Thy honor our glory, that to-day we may follow the light of Thy truth as it shines upon our pathway. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

COLLECTION OF REVENUE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an alternative estimate of appropriations required by the Treasury Department for the expenses of collecting revenue from customs for the fiscal year 1921 in the sum of $11,800,000 in lieu of the original estimate for this purpose submitted in the Book of Estimates for the year 1921, $10,300,000, being a net increase of $1,500,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9781) to amend section 217 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of, and deception with respect to, cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan, and Mr. YOUNG of Texas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13108) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BUTLER, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. PADGETT, and Mr. RIORDAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 351) extending the provisions of an act amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act approved July 17, 1916, to June 30, 1921, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees of the classified civil service, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Colorado Springs, reading as follows:

> This body has gone on record as opposing bonuses for soldiers and sailors, especially cash bonuses. It is felt that greater efforts should be made to provide for disabled men and their dependents and for the payment of bills for their care.

I move that the telegram be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from former Gov. Hadley, of Missouri, in connection with a letter, which I received this morning.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> BOULDER, COLO., May 18, 1920.
> Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER,
> Care of Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
> Know through personal observation that large and prosperous tungsten industries here are now out of operation, account competition of Chinese tungsten, and that they can exist only with benefit protective tariff as provided by House bill now pending before Senate. I feel this measure is in harmony with the traditions and policy of the Republican Party and necessary for preservation of industry most important to this State.

> HERBERT S. HADLEY.

Mr. COLT presented a memorial of the Albanian Society of Lonsdale, R. I., remonstrating against the awarding to Greece of the southern Albanian Provinces of Koritza and Argyrocastro, and praying that a hearing be granted to representatives of Albania, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KNOX presented petitions of sundry citizens of West Chester, Pittsburgh, and Reading, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of maternity and infancy, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of John W. Jackson Post, No. 27, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pa., and a petition of Robert Bryan Post, No. 80, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to the people of the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the congregation of the Church of the Brethren of Woodbury, Pa., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for the parole of Federal prisoners, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Division No. 3, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Patton, Pa., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia Bourse, of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to enable persons who served in the World War and who are disabled or sick in consequence of their service, as well as the dependents of those who lost their lives, to build homes and obtain vocational training, and remonstrating against the granting of a general cash bonus without discrimination, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Board of Commerce of Detroit, Mich., and a petition of the Real Estate Exchange of Kalamazoo, Mich., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Women's Club of East Lansing, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for vocational education, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of the Board of Commerce of Detroit, Mich., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of Ira D. MacLachlan Post, No. 3, American Legion, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation granting a bonus to ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Lansing, Mich., and a memorial of the Board of Commerce of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to compel shoe manufacturers to stamp the cost of the shoe on the sole thereof, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of Victory Grange, No. 1099, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ludington, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to farmers the right of collective bargaining, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3969) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to waive the age limit for admission to the United States Naval Academy, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 608) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4361) to provide for the relief of certain officers of the Naval Reserve Force, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 609) thereon.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3212) for the relief of legal representative of George E. Payne, deceased, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 610) thereon.

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11398) for the creation of the Custer State Park Game Sanctuary, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3743) for the relief of W. R. Grace & Co., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 611) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. FRANCE on the 6th instant, relative to the use of any portion of the public highway fronting any hotel or apartment hotel, railroad terminal, restaurant, theater, or other place of public amusement in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 14100) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. The bill is in the exact form in which it passed the Senate before, except for the omission of section 8, the item to which the President objected, and in consequence of which he vetoed the bill. The bill has been passed by the House, carefully checked, and has also received the close checking of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. I ask unanimous consent that without having it read the bill may be placed upon its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in relation to section 8, which was stricken from the former bill on account of it having been vetoed by the President of the United States.

I am going to offer an amendment to the sundry civil bill to take care of the printing of the 156 Government publications that the Joint Committee on Printing have authorized to be printed. I hope there will be no objection to it on the ground that it is general legislation, because without such an amendment no publications could be printed after June 30 of this year.

I again state that I think the President was misled in his veto of the legislative bill on account of section 8.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13665) granting the consent of Congress to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, between sections 16 and 21, township 15 north, range 19 east, in the State of Oklahoma, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between sections 16 and 21, township 15 north, range 19 east, near the town of Fort Gibson, in the county of Muskogee, in the State of Oklahoma, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13666) granting the consent of Congress to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, in section 18, township 12 north, range 21 east, in the State of Oklahoma, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in section 18, township 12 north, range 21 east, near the town of Webbers Falls, in the county of Muskogee, in the State of Oklahoma, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF TENTS.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Grand Army of the Republic of the State of Indiana are to hold their annual encampment at Bloomington on the 25th of May. They desire the loan of tents and cots from the Quartermaster's Department of the Army. The War Department can not furnish them without the authorization of Congress. The House has already passed a joint resolution loaning them the cots, tents, and blankets. It has not been the custom of the Senate to extend the loan of blankets or bedding, and I have not the authority of the Military Affairs Committee to ask that blankets be included in this joint resolution. With the elimination of the words "and blankets," I report the joint resolution and ask immediate consideration, inasmuch as if it is not considered at this time it will be of no avail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution just reported by him from the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, after the word "tents," to strike out the comma and insert the word "and," and in line 8, after the word "cots," to strike out "and blankets," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, in his discretion, to Paul E. Slocumb Post, No. 85, Grand Army of the Republic, Bloomington, in the State encampment to be held at Bloomington, Ind., May 25, 26, and 27, 1920, the necessary tents and cots, as may be agreed upon by said post and the War Department: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered to the commander of said Paul E. Slocumb Post at such time as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the commander of said post: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering said equipment, shall take from the commander of said post a good and sufficient security for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole to be without expense to the United States Government.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to Paul E. Slocumb Post, No. 85, Grand Army of the Republic, Bloomington, Ind., necessary tents and cots for use at the State encampment to be held at said city May 25, 26, and 27, 1920."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GASTONIA, N. C.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, a few days ago, in my absence, the Senate passed the bill (S. 4332) to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building, and it was sent to the House of Representatives. I promised some of my constituents that I would not urge the consideration of the bill until they could be heard upon it. I therefore enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. It relates to a public building at Gastonia, N. C. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 4411) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Pembina, N. Dak., and Kittson, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4412) granting an increase of pension to William Walker (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4413) granting an increase of pension to Otto N. Burge (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) providing for monthly payment of pensions; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KING submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the survey of the Green River and its tributaries and the Price River, in Duchesne, Uintah, Carbon, Emery, and Grant Counties, Utah, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM J. JOHNSON.

On motion of Mr. SMOOT, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 3360, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, granting an increase of pension to William J. Johnson, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CLAIMS OF SIOUX INDIANS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SPENCER. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 400) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims. The House has been kind enough to accept the Senate bill with the single addition of allowing claims arising out of lands to be also presented to the Court of Claims. I ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING). The conference report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 400) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: After the word "funds," in section 1, insert the words "or lands"; and before the comma, in the same line, insert the words "or band or bands thereof"; and the Senate agree to the same.

SELDEN P. SPENCER,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FREDERICK W. DALLINGER,
HARRY L. GANDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

TUNGSTEN ORES.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, as it will probably be impossible for me to be present at the time the Senate takes up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide revenue for the Government and to promote the production of tungsten ores and manufactures thereof in the United States, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments this morning in order that I may express some views relating to that measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, in considering the provisions of House bill 4437, which is intended to promote the production of tungsten ores and the manufactures thereof in the United States, it should be borne in mind that tungsten is an element having properties which are not possessed by any other metallic substance.

Tungsten has been chiefly useful as a toughening and hardening alloy in the manufacture of steel, and particularly in the production of so-called high-speed steel, which is used for the cutting of various steel products, including munitions of war, automobile parts, and machinery generally. This high-speed steel may be used at such speed and pressure as to render the tool itself red-hot without losing its temper or cutting edge. A tool of this material will perform at least five times the amount of work per hour as may be turned out with the ordinary tool which contains no tungsten. It has been estimated that a saving of $200 on each automobile may be made by the manufacturer through the use of high-speed tungsten steel tools.

It was found absolutely necessary to use this class of tool steel to turn out guns of all calibers and the various sizes of explosive shells used during the Great War, as without this particular material manufacturers would have found it impossible to produce these articles at anything like the rate demanded. Tungsten-alloy steels contain from 3 to 18 per cent of tungsten and about 95 per cent of the tungsten consumed in the United States is used in making standard high-speed steel, which contains 18 per cent of tungsten.

Tungsten is also used in permanent magnet steel, valve steel for aeroplane and automobile engines, wireless amplifiers, Roentgen-ray apparatus, spark-plug contact points, electric-light filaments, and in other articles, while tungstic acid and tungstate are used in the dye and chemical industries.

Although never personally interested financially in the tungsten business, I have been in position to note from time to time the development of the industry, particularly in the State of Colorado. The first discovery of tungsten in quantity in the United States was made in the year 1900 in Boulder County, Colo. During the 10 years which followed Colorado produced practically all the tungsten ore mined in this country. From 1910 to 1913, inclusive, she produced 70 per cent of the ores mined in the United States, averaging 929 tons per year for that four-year period. Since 1914 the output of California and Colorado has been about equal.

Under the stimulus of advanced prices and the foreign demand due to the war, the production for the year 1915 in the United States amounted to 2,332 tons. It increased in 1916 to 5,923 tons and in 1917 to 6,144 tons. This heavy increase in output was partly due to the inducement of high prices caused by war necessities and partly to the urgent request of our Government officials for increased production. The mining of tungsten was thus tremendously stimulated and the refining of the raw materials fully established. Without this domestic output our munition plants would have been compelled to slow down their operations to 20 per cent of normal at a most critical stage of the war, and our manufacture of automobiles and other war supplies would have been curtailed to a similar extent.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PHIPPS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. KNOX. Was the increased production in the last two years caused by the discovery of new fields, or is all the ore still produced in Colorado and California?

Mr. PHIPPS. Partly so, but largely to the development of the mines which had previously been discovered in Colorado and California. The new discoveries I will speak of a little later; they were largely in Nevada and Arizona.

The demand for tungsten led not only to the development of producing mines but also to further discoveries of the mineral in 13 States of the Union and in Alaska. This includes 76 known deposits in California and 42 in Nevada, many of which are not sufficiently opened up to be placed in the producing class. In Colorado, where tungsten was first mined commercially in the United States, there are thousands of acres of tungsten ground, some of which has only been worked on the surface and much of which has never been prospected. Many of these undeveloped properties and much of this unprospected territory would no doubt become productive if the industry is stabilized so as to warrant the investment of capital.

It should be noted that while the increasing demand for tungsten began at the outbreak of the war in 1914, we only increased our output of ore by about 800 tons during the following year; and it was not until the second year that our output showed a satisfactory increase. In the meantime the efforts of Colorado and California miners were supplemented chiefly by those of Nevada and Arizona, where new discoveries of the mineral had been made. The large contact metamorphic deposits of Nevada and Arizona were not developed in time to be of much service during the war. One of these finds, known as the Tungsten Reef Mines, promises to be one of the largest producing properties in this country, and it is probable that in the future both Nevada and Arizona will outrank California and Colorado as producing States.

The Nevada properties have been equipped with extensive mining and concentrating plants, but these were only in operation about two months before the slump in the late fall of 1918. The Arizona property had been provided with a large concentrating plant, which was delivered on the ground, but has not been erected on account of market conditions for the material.

Production in the United States during the year 1918 continued at a high level until the signing of the armistice in November of that year, when a decided reaction set in, caused by cessation of the demand and by heavy importations of foreign ores, chiefly ore from China, particularly that which did not have to be mined but could be picked up from the ground by cheap coolie labor.

Prior to the war Germany was in absolute control of the tungsten refining industries, as very little was being refined in the United States or England. American ores were shipped to Germany, reduced there, and returned to us in the forms of ferrotungsten and tungsten powder.

The heavy importations of foreign tungsten, commencing before the signing of the armistice, resulted in a complete cessation of mining in this country, and, although a year and a half has elapsed since the shutdown, every tungsten mine in the United States remains closed.

These mines, like others, must be kept free of water; and the owners of the properties have all been under the expense of keeping the water pumped out of their mines, waiting until changed conditions will enable them to reopen. In fact, many of them are now wondering whether or not they are justified in incurring this expense, as it is only through relief such as will be afforded by the proposed legislation that they may hope to operate their properties again.

If the industry falls into decay through failure to enact proper legislation and these mines are allowed to fill up with water, it is evident it would take at least two years to bring production up to a tonnage approximating our needs, and during such time we would be dependent upon a foreign supply which might be withheld, as it was in 1914.

The world production of tungsten reached 36,000 tons in 1918, of which over one-half was furnished by Asiatic countries and only about 5,000 tons by the United States.

The present normal need of the United States is variously estimated at from 5,000 to 7,500 tons, and we know that our production for the past year has been negligible.

The lesson of the war demonstrated that, under necessity and with all possible insistence, our output of tungsten ore increased to a point where we were practically self-supporting for our normal requirement, but we should not overlook the fact that discoveries of new deposits have been made to an extent that assures a production beyond that we have so far attained. There seems to be no question but that the mines in the United States can produce annually not only the tungsten needed at present for our own use but any increases which may be required. We can no longer secure an adequate supply of tungsten ore by picking it up from the surface of the ground, but must mine for it by sinking shafts and driving drifts, which entail a large investment for any efficient plant. To properly develop a tungsten mine an outlay of at least $150,000 is required, and to this must be added a concentrating plant which, for a 200-ton capacity mill, will cost about $200,000.

Therefore in order to operate a large mining property it is necessary to make a heavy initial investment for development of the mine and the concentration of the ore, as the ore can not be shipped in the state in which it is mined. This is, of course, particularly true in the cases of deposits carrying a very small metallic content. Owners of mining properties are not justified in investing the sums of money necessary to develop and operate their properties, nor can they finance same, unless there is some assurance that they will have a stable market for their output; and the experience of the past 18 months, with all of our available mines closed down and no new deposits being looked for, demonstrates the necessity for a moderate measure of protection to enable this comparatively new industry to develop.

The refining plants which receive the ore from the mines in its concentrated form and transform it into the products such as ferrotungsten for use by the manufacturers of steel are now being closed down, because tungsten is being shipped in by foreign producers in the refined forms, and our manufacturers of high-speed tool steel are also seriously feeling the pressure of foreign competition, as they find their market falling away from them on account of the low prices being quoted by their foreign competitors.

The distribution of Asiatic tungsten has always been controlled by England and Japan, and during the recent war England placed an embargo on all forms of tungsten, which action had the effect of cutting off our supply of the refined product.

Since that embargo was removed, in the latter part of 1918, large quantities of Asiatic and Chilean ores were brought into the United States, and the price of tungsten fell from $25 per unit to $7.50 per unit.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate have had exhaustive hearings, taking testimony from representatives of all branches of the tungsten industry. These witnesses have presented certified or sworn statements, which have been made a part of the record of the hearings held and show the production costs in the United States and in China, and upon this evidence the Finance Committee has worked out the rates of duty which are considered necessary to reestablish and develop the tungsten industry in the United States. The bill as it passed the House provided for a duty of $10 per unit on tungsten ore and a corresponding compensatory duty on the manufactured products of tungsten.

The Finance Committee has amended the bill, reducing the rate of duty to $9 per unit, and has reduced the compensatory duties of the manufactured products in like proportion.

The testimony referred to all goes to show that the tungsten industry can not be maintained in the United States at any lower rates of duty than provided in the bill as amended, and that, with these rates of duty, we are starting on a competitive basis with Asiatic ores.

The Finance Committee has proposed an amendment under which these rates of duty would only apply for a period of three years from the passage of this act, and it is believed that during this trial period the industry will so develop as to enable the mines to produce at lower costs than would prevail at present.

It is very important to this country in time of peace as well as in war time that the tungsten industry be made to supply adequately our needs, so that we may not be dependent upon other countries for our supply.

The production of tungsten has never been a stabilized industry in the United States, owing to price fluctuations, and for that reason it has been difficult to secure the capital necessary for development. It was only during the war period, when prices became high and the needs of our Government for this important metal in our munitions program became imperative, that capital could be induced to develop the industry. The duty provided in this bill will permit the resumption of mining in this country, will stabilize prices for the product, encourage the investment of capital for the development of tungsten mines, and within a short period the United States will be, so far as its supply of tungsten is concerned, industrially independent.

RESTRICTION ON FUNERAL DONATIONS.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, in addition to the troubles we have during our lifetime, I have read in the newspapers recently an item which indicates that our executors, administrators, heirs, and assigns are likely to have some trouble with our bodies after we are dead. The item to which I refer reads as follows:

URGE UNION-MADE COFFINS—SAN JOSE CARPENTERS PROPOSE TO AMEND BROTHERHOOD CONSTITUTION.

A proposal that members of carpenters' unions must be buried only in caskets bearing the union label was received at labor headquarters here yesterday. The proposal comes from Local Union 262, at San Jose, Calif., and is in the form of an amendment to the constitution of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America. It reads:

"No members, legal heirs, or wife's legal heirs will be entitled to funeral donation unless the deceased is buried in a coffin or casket bearing the label of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America."

Mr. President, I call this fanaticism run mad. It does seem to me that people's bodies should be allowed to rest in peace.

REGULATION OF COLD STORAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of, and deception with respect to, cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of coal-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 10378, the shipping bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

PAY OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, before the Senate begins the consideration of the shipping bill, I wish to make a few observations on another subject.

The other day the Postmaster General called my attention to the fact that during the past 10 months the postal business in the city of New York increased 37 per cent over the business of last year, and that in the city of Chicago it increased over 50 per cent. This statement, and the fact that perhaps, like other Senators, I am receiving numerous resolutions passed by business organizations throughout the State of New York, and letters by the mail bag full, prompt me to call the attention of the Senate to a very serious condition affecting the Postal Service of the country.

With as much emphasis as possible I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to the alarming condition now confronting the Postal Service. Something must be done and done quickly if a complete breakdown is to be averted, if, in fact, such a condition is not now hard upon us. From every part of the country comes practically the same depressing story of delayed mails, unreliable, infrequent, and abandoned service, congestion of mails for varying periods in terminal and city post offices, and insufficient and inefficient help to man the service. All kinds of expedients are resorted to in an effort to keep the mails moving, but the older and experienced employees are slowly losing heart, and that fine spirit of enthusiasm which formerly gave the people such an efficient mail service has almost entirely vanished.

Complaint is general and it burdens every mail. The business people of the country are aroused over conditions in the Postal Service and they are insistently protesting and petitioning to Congress for relief. They want service and they are not getting it. They know that the business of the country must wait on the mails. A penurious postal policy under existing conditions is the most dangerous economy conceivable, because for every dollar now withheld in failing to provide proper postal facilities means a loss amounting to thousands of other dollars in delayed and dislocated business processes. Generally speaking, we agree that increased production is the most pressing need of the hour, yet it is an idle fancy to expect production to increase or business to go full speed ahead with a broken Postal Service. This is the prospect now facing the people unless appropriate steps are at once taken to restore the Postal Service to something of its former efficiency.

What is the matter with the Postal Service? What is responsible for existing conditions? Answering my own question, I will state that it requires high-grade employees to specialize in postal work, and to-day, with the post office offering less wages than paid ordinary labor, there are precious few employees of any kind that can be induced to enroll in the Postal Service. From 40 to 60 cents an hour holds out little attraction for high-grade men when on every hand 75 cents an hour and more is being paid unskilled labor. Moreover, it takes years to train expert postal workers. This indispensable class of employees are resigning by wholesale, and postal officials are now compelled to accept whatever labor they can recruit, most of whom leave the service long before being qualified to perform their work efficiently. In consequence, the service suffers in exact proportion to its dearth of competent help.

Demoralization in the Postal Service is not confined to any particular part of the country. Practically the same conditions prevail everywhere. The Postal Service was at one time regarded as an attractive field of employment. Now, under present conditions, it is being shunned. As a case in point, two civil-service examinations in the Brooklyn post office held April 10 and 24, 1920, brought out a total of 6 applicants for the position of city letter carrier and 36 for post-office clerks. A few years ago a similar examination would have attracted hundreds of applicants. On May 1 the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] read to the Senate a protest from the business men of Milwaukee, Wis., calling attention to disquieting service conditions in that city. On March 29, 1920, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] submitted a detailed statement to the Senate showing the distressing service conditions prevailing in a number of Ohio cities, which he explained were due to the great exodus of competent men from the service and the impossibility of securing others in their stead on the basis of present postal salaries. Postal conditions in the State of Michigan are even more aggravated, according to reports coming from that section, and the Chamber of Commerce of Detroit has repeatedly protested against the wretched service accorded the patrons of the Detroit post office.

An inquiry covering the entire country would only give further proof of how sadly the service has suffered, and this condition, bad as it is, continues daily to grow worse. It is a serious situation.

It is the duty of Congress to give this subject their immediate attention. The people are entitled to an efficient Postal Service. The postal employees are entitled to a living wage. We can not have one without granting the other. The postal employees are not responsible for the 40 to 50 per cent wage reduction that they have suffered in the past few years, on account of the advancing prices, but that they have suffered such a reduction none will deny. Now, with no prospect of relief in sight, they are being forced out of the service because of more inviting inducements in civil industry and because of their inability to live upon their present salaries. The workers are the chief sufferers now; but if present conditions in the post office are permitted to continue, it will be the people and the service that will be the greatest losers in the end.

A great deal has been said in Congress during the present session regarding the inability of the Government to successfully compete with private industry in the matter of wages. This is a serious admission, and whether true or not the Government, at least, can not expect to operate a great business like the Postal Service without paying its employees not only a living wage, but one that will somewhat approach the prevailing wage standards in ordinary civil occupations. If the Government can not so manage its affairs as to do this, we may as well resign ourselves to an appalling breakdown in the Postal Service.

It is a sad commentary on the Government to see it laying down principles of employment to be scrupulously followed by employers in private industry and yet signally failing to observe these same principles itself. Through proclamation of the President on April 8, 1918, governmental approval was given to the principle of "the living wage" in the following declaration:

1. The right of all workers, including common labor, to a living wage is hereby declared.
2. In fixing wages, minimum rates of pay shall be established which will insure the subsistence of the worker and his family in health and reasonable comfort.

Postal employees are skilled and specialized in their particular calling. They are trained workers. In the light of the proclamation of the President, they, nevertheless, not only fail to receive a living wage according to all accepted standards, but their compensation in many instances has actually fallen far below the danger line of subsistence. Remaining in the Postal Service is with them no longer a matter of choice, but they are literally driven from its ranks by the force of economic pressure. It is this state of affairs, the low wage rate in the Postal Service and all the consequent evil that follows in its wake, that is responsible for the present demoralized service conditions. This is a situation that is bad for business, worse for the people, and utterly unjust to the employees. There is but one remedy that will fit the needs of the occasion, and that is to increase the salaries of postal employees at once, and in such measure as will attract and hold sufficient competent employees to properly man the service, and restore to such employees some part of the heavy wage reduction they have already suffered. This is the policy that should be followed. An increase in postal salaries should be granted at once. It will be false economy to do otherwise.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that there is every prospect that the express service of the country is on the eve of breaking down and July 1 confronts us, unless something is done to bring about a more contented condition on the part of the men engaged in the service, my own judgment is that the Nation will be in sad distress in this important branch of our Government in the very near future.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I would like to call the Senator's attention to the remarks of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which he will find in the RECORD of the proceedings of last Monday a week. In that statement the Senator from Michigan explained that the Postal Salaries Commission have concluded their hearings, which were most extended, held in various leading cities of the country; that they have had the assistance of an advisory committee in collecting the information and in making findings based upon the information; and that the commission are holding sessions daily, working on schedules which they propose to recommend as the new basis for salaries.

It is well known by the employees of the Postal Service that it would not be possible for any further increases which may be granted them in salaries to take effect earlier than July 1 next, and it is the disposition of the commission to recommend, in the event Congress is unable to decide before July 1 on what advances, if any, shall be granted, that when granted they will date from July 1.

The fact is apparent that there has been a widespread propaganda, evidently put forward by some people who are opposed to the operations of the postal department, and for other reasons, stirring feeling among the communities, particularly in the large cities. One proof of this propaganda lies in the fact that the letters the members of the Postal Commission are receiving are almost identical in form, and that the publications given out by the various newspapers are along the same general lines, and in many cases are printed word for word in the different newspapers and periodicals of the United States. The fact remains that the commission have been exerting their best efforts to reach conclusions and make recommendations to Congress covering an increase of salaries, and that the recommendations to the Congress will be that July 1 shall be the date for such increases in salaries recommended by the commission.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Colorado for the information contained in his statement. I know that the Postal Salaries Commission are working diligently, but I felt, representing as I do the great State of New York, in part, on this floor, that I ought to add my word to what has been said on the subject. In the city of New York and other great cities of that State the condition of the Postal Service, because of the lack of competent men, brought about by the fact that there have been a great number of resignations and the inability of the department to fill their places with other competent men, has made the situation very serious indeed.

The Senator from Colorado speaks of propaganda. Unquestionably there is propaganda. I am receiving an average of 500 letters a day on the subject. But, Mr. President, these letters do not come from men who are easily influenced by the request of some one interested. They are from the great business organizations of the State, including the Merchants' Association of New York, the board of trade of all the leading cities of my State, all joining in the request that these postal employees shall be properly compensated.

A business man must meet competition in his undertakings, and also in the employment of labor. Everyone knows that the farmer and the manufacturer must pay their men in accordance with the prevailing rate. That is not the case with the Government, and particularly with regard to the Postal Service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] has well said on the subject, I might add that the Postal Salaries Commission has virtually completed its work. It has tentatively agreed on a revision of the pay schedule of the Post Office Department. I see no reason why that report can not be gotten out and made to the Senate by the end of the week, and I believe that there will be no dissent upon the part of any Senator.

As the Senator knows, that commission is composed of five Republicans and five Democrats—five Members of the House and five Members of the Senate. Apparently there will be no material disagreement among them. I see no reason why its report can not be put immediately into effect. I believe the report will commend itself to the Senate and the House, and I see no reason why it can not be enacted into law at the present session, before recess or adjournment, and I think that ought to be done. I think it is one of those matters which ought to be disposed of now, and I want to say for the Democratic side of the Senate that we members of the commission and those who are not members of the commission will help in every way we can in enacting this legislation into law before the recess.

If the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], with his accustomed activity and his great interest in everything that pertains to the welfare of his State and the country, will get busy with those who are in charge of legislation on the other side of the Chamber I have no doubt that this very worthy measure as reported out by the commission will be enacted into law before we adjourn. There is no reason in the world why it can not be done. I think the report of the commission will meet the approval of the postal employees and of the country.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his illumination of the subject. I know that the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Colorado have worked diligently on this subject; I know they realize how important it is; and I hope they are correct in their statement that the matter will be disposed of so that the increases may take effect the 1st of July. I shall join them and do everything in my power in that direction.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I merely want to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] or the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] if this commission expects to present a bill covering this subject?

Mr. PHIPPS. That is the intention of the commission. Perhaps I am a little more conservative than my colaborer on the commission, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], in his statement that it may be possible to report out a measure this week. I think he is perhaps a little optimistic, but it is the desire and the hope of the commission, and they are working to that end, that a bill may be reported so that it may receive consideration before a recess is taken.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 25, where the committee proposes to insert a new section, section 25, the Senator from Wisconsin moves to strike out the first paragraph, with the exception of the numerals designating the section, in the following words:

That the owner of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States and operated in foreign trade shall, for each of the 10 taxable years while so operated, beginning with the first taxable year ending after the enactment of this act, be allowed as a deduction for the purpose of ascertaining his net income subject to the war-profits and excess-profits taxes imposed by Title III of the revenue act of 1918 an amount equivalent to the net earnings of such vessel during such taxable year, determined in accordance with rules and regulations to be made by the board: Provided, That such owner shall not be entitled to such deduction unless during such taxable year he invested, or set aside under rules and regulations to be made by the board in a trust fund for investment, in the building in shipyards in the United States of new vessels of a type and kind approved by the board, an amount, to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury and certified by him to the board, equivalent to the war-profits and excess-profits taxes that would have been payable by such owner on account of the net earnings of such vessels but for the deduction allowed under the provisions of this section, or unless such owner, with the approval of the board (to be given only if because of the smallness of the amount involved the board deems it best for the interests of the United States), applies such amount on any mortgage indebtedness due to the United States for the purchase of ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to notice just for a moment some of the suggestions made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] with reference to the first paragraph of the section which is now under consideration.

The Senator from Wisconsin informed me yesterday afternoon that he had made all the address he desired to make on this particular amendment and that he would be to-day in a very important committee meeting. He will probably want to be here when we come to a vote, but he asked me to go on with the bill yesterday afternoon so that he could conclude his remarks upon it. So I do not think that it is necessary to send for him, because it would take him out of the committee meeting, and I think he would prefer not to have that done.

The Senator from Wisconsin suggested that this would work a discrimination against the coastwise shipping. As I suggested last evening, the coastwise shipping has a monopoly now. I do not think there could be any greater discrimination than they have against all other shipping. In fact, I do not think it would be any discrimination against them at all, because, as I said, they have a monopoly already.

Furthermore, this applies to the ships engaged in foreign trade. Those ships are not usually suitable for the coastwise trade. Of course, those in the coastwise trade between points like New York and New Orleans, or New York and Galveston, would be suitable for the ocean trade, but as a general rule what we ordinarily term coastwise ships are not suitable for that trade, and those engaged in the ocean trade are not suitable for the coastwise trade.

The Senator suggested that this provision is unscientific. I do not know but that we are prone to use too much science in the getting at matters of this kind. It may be unscientific, but I think it would be effective. However, one thing is certain. These shipowners would not be exempt from the excess-profits taxes unless they put those excess-profits taxes into new ships. It is the purpose of the section to get new ships built. If new ships are not built, then their excess-profits would go into the Treasury of the United States.

That, Mr. President, is a little bit different from the subsidy proposition that we have had presented for many years. One of the great objections I have had to those bills was that they were not so framed as to insure the building of new ships, even though we paid a subsidy. The subsidy might go to ships already built, and it would be in such case a pure gift to the operator of the ships. What I have always insisted upon in matters of this kind, in trying to aid American shipping, is to do something that would give us new ships. That is what we want.

The Senator from Wisconsin made what was to me a very strange suggestion, and that was that we should take this money and put it into a fund to build ships for persons who did not get large excess-profits taxes. In other words, he seemed to desire a sort of penalization on business capacity, on business success, and business energy. I can not look at it in that way.

With reference to the provision regarding depreciation, the purpose is to place our ships, in the matter of operating capital, as nearly as possible upon a par with foreign competitors. I do not think we ought to look so much at what might be done under the power given the commission, as at what a commission, constituted as this commission would be composed, is likely to do. It is composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the chairman of the Shipping Board, men not only of high personal standing and ability but men occupying high and responsible positions. In my judgment their sole purpose would be to do exactly what the provision of law indicates that we want done, and that is not to give our people an undue advantage, not to write off all the capital cost of the ship, but to so allow depreciation each year as to put them upon a parity with their competitors.

That is all that is desired, that is all that is sought, and that is all that is indicated in these paragraphs of the section; and, in my judgment, is all that the commission would do. The testimony shows that while our Treasury Department allows 3 per cent depreciation per annum, the general rule in allowing depreciation on ships is 5, 6, 7, 8, or 10 per cent per annum. The Shipping Board has adopted a rule with reference to the sale of Government ships allowing 10 per cent depreciation one year, 9 per cent the next year, then 8 per cent, and 7 per cent, and so on. This is left to the discretion of the board, so that they can meet the practices of other countries. If we were to fix a definite amount, say 10 per cent or 9 per cent a year, then all the other countries would have to do to put their ships above our ships or give them an advantage over our ships would be to allow a depreciation of 12 or 15 per cent.

It was suggested on yesterday that we ought not to offer this inducement to build ships; that it would be a precedent for similar legislation in other lines of industry and work. I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] rather suggested an idea like that. In the way I look at it, I can not see very much difference from what we do with reference to agriculture every year. We have already this year passed a bill calling for some thirty-odd million dollars for agriculture—to do what? To aid agriculture; to aid the different activities in agricultural lines. I am heartily in favor of action along that line, and the Senator from Idaho is no doubt in favor of action along that line.

But what is this? Shipping, so far as we are concerned, is a new industry in this country. It is just in the beginning of its development. We have a great many ships built, of course, now, but they were built by the Government and with the money of the Government. What we are seeking to do is to maintain that shipping in a prosperous condition and, if possible, under the American flag, and to put such conditions about it as will lead to its further development and its maintenance. Everyone wants that. The sole purpose of this provision is to aid in that, just as we desire to aid agricultural pursuits and the agricultural industry. In my judgment, the people of the country are just as heartily in favor of legislation of that kind at this time as they are with reference to the encouragement of agriculture. The people of the country do want an American merchant marine. They want it to be composed of the very best kind of ships. They are willing to have us do now whatever is necessary to accomplish that purpose. The committee looked at it in that way, and there was practically no division of sentiment as to our desire and our purpose to do whatever might be necessary to build up an American merchant marine.

I will say that the proposition did not strike me favorably at first. I did not like the idea of exempting any particular line from the payment of excess-profits taxes, but the more I studied the proposition, the more I considered the situation that confronts us, the more I was impressed with the great objects that we want to accomplish, and the more I became favorably inclined toward this as one of the ways, as one of the means, as one of the aids to bring about the great thing that we all desire.

For these reasons in general I am in favor of this section. I am not going to take further time, but have simply stated these general propositions.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I move that all of section 25, the committee amendment, be stricken out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I doubt if an amendment of that kind would be in order. Of course, if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin should be agreed to, then the Senator from Idaho could move to strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. NUGENT. I apprehend a vote can be taken on my motion, and if my motion fails, a vote can then be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from Idaho is not in order.

Mr. NUGENT. Then I desire to discuss the proposition briefly.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the ruling of the Chair based on the theory that the proposed amendment is in the third degree removed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is one reason.

Mr. KING. The reason I suggest, and to which the Chair assents, is, it seems to me, scarcely tenable. We are considering the section as an amendment to the original bill. I do not, therefore, understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho is in the third degree removed.

Mr. THOMAS. The entire section as reported from the committee is an amendment, and, consequently, it is an amendment in the third degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Wisconsin has a right to perfect the amendment, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho would not be in order on that account. The Chair thinks, also, that on the other ground stated the amendment would not be in order.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I am in entire harmony with the views expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] on yesterday in support of his amendment. The first paragraph of section 25 of the committee amendment provides that the owner of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States and operated in foreign trade shall be exempt from the operation of the laws imposing excess-profits and war-profits taxes.

I am utterly unable to understand why that discrimination should be made in favor of the owners of the vessels engaged in foreign trade and against the owners of vessels engaged in coastwise trade. It appears to me that the services performed by the men who are engaged in the foreign trade and in the coastwise trade are of equal value so far as the well-being of the country is concerned. It appears to me also that this is a gross discrimination in favor of the man engaged in foreign trade, and that the committee amendment so providing should not be agreed to.

I am opposed to the first paragraph of section 25 for another reason. It exempts the owners of ships engaged in foreign trade from the payment of excess and war profits taxes provided they invest the amount that they would be obliged to pay under the laws imposing the taxes mentioned in the construction of new ships. It appears to me that there is no reason for that discrimination, which is solely in favor of the shipowners. No such exemption is provided by law for men in this country who are engaged in any other business or occupation or calling.

I know of no reason why the shipowners should be the beneficiaries of this legislation as against all other classes of our citizens. Under this provision the profits of the shipowners are capitalized. That is about all there is to it. In other words, in very large measure this paragraph of section 25 provides for that which the people of the country generally are bitterly denouncing—that is, the stock-dividend proposition—and every man knows that the people of the country are bitterly resentful against the payment of these stock dividends, which relieve the men who are the recipients of them from the operation of the income-tax law.

It is contended in support of this amendment that it is a matter of vital necessity that new ships be constructed. I am in accord with that view, but there is no reason that I am aware of, no valid reason, why all men who construct new ships should be shown discrimination and relieved from the payment of taxes that all other people in the country are obliged to pay. I am utterly opposed to the adoption of the first paragraph of section 25 of the committee amendment for the reasons stated.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to an article by Raymond B. Fosdick, published in the New York World of May 16, and reading as follows:

LEAGUE OF NATIONS BUSY UPON MATTERS VITAL TO WORLD PEACE PROGRESS—BACKED BY NEARLY EVERY STATE IN EUROPE, ASIA, AND AFRICA, ALL OF SOUTH AMERICA AND CANADA, IT HAS BEEN A GOING CONCERN FOUR MONTHS, ACTIVELY FUNCTIONING, ALTHOUGH IDEA SEEMS TO PREVAIL HERE THAT IT DOES NOT EXIST.

(By Raymond B. Fosdick, former undersecretary general of the League of Nations.)

Most people around the country seem to think that the League of Nations has not yet been born. These speak of it as a theory, an academic proposition, and seem to assume that until the United States adheres to the compact there is no league of nations. Color is given to this belief by the statement of such men as Senators JOHNSON and BORAH, who are stalking up and down the country arguing the advisability of "killing" the league.

Nothing could be further from the facts than this impression. The League of Nations has been born and is a going concern. It is no longer a fancy, a project, or a plan. At this moment it actually exists, is actively functioning and is supported by nearly every nation in the world.

It includes Asia and Africa as well as Europe—the Western Hemisphere as well as the Eastern Hemisphere. It has drawn to itself Canada to the north of us and all of South America on our southern boundary. Outside of Russia and the Central Empires of Europe, Roumania and Jugo-Slavia are the only important countries that have not yet come in, and their accession is now merely a matter of weeks. China's accession is included in the Austrian treaty, which will shortly be signed.

The League of Nations came officially into being on January 10, 1920. This date is vitally important, and it must always be borne in mind in any discussion of the league. Obviously it would not be reasonable to expect the league to begin to function immediately as a fully developed organization. A certain space of time must be allowed to secure personnel, make and approve plans and set the machinery in operation.

What, then, has the league done to date? It has now been in existence for four months. What has it to show in the way of positive results? Has it really done anything at all?

The following statement, based on the latest available information, is an attempt to answer these questions. It is prepared without flourish or adornment, in tabloid form, simply setting forth the facts as regards the present state of the league:

29 STATES ARE MEMBERS NOW; FOUR HAVE ASKED ADMISSION.

Membership as of March 20, 1920: The following 16 States are members as having signed and ratified the treaty of Versailles: Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, British Empire—Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, India; Czechoslovakia, France Guatemala, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Panama, Peru, Poland, Siam, Uruguay, Greece.

All of the 13 States, neutral in the war, which were invited to join the league, had done so, namely: Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, Venezuela, Paraguay, Persia, Salvador, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland.

The following 10 States have signed, but not yet ratified the treaty of Versailles (Mar. 20): United States, Cuba, Ecuador, Haiti, Serbo-Croat-Slovene State, Hejaz, Honduras, Nicaragua, Portugal, Roumania.

I stop here long enough to say that in spite of all the statements of the opponents of the league for the past 15 or 18 months that the United States might be associated with Haiti and Hejaz, we find that three of the most prominent countries now outside of the league are the United States, Haiti, and Hejaz. I continue to read:

China abstained from signing the treaty of Versailles, but will join the league by ratifying the Austrian.

This is a remarkable statement in view of the fact that we have been asked not to ratify the league because it injured China. I continue to read——

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in a moment, as soon as I complete the reading of the article:

The following four States, not mentioned in the covenant, have asked to be admitted to the league: San Marino, Luxemburg, Iceland, and Georgia.

FOUR COUNCIL MEETINGS.

The council: A small executive body of nine men representing the five great and four small powers and serving as a readily available conference ground of the nations has held four important meetings. In every instance so far the unanimity which is essential before any recommendation can be made to the powers has been attained. The meetings were:

January 16, at Paris: Organized the council and appointed the Saar Basin frontier commission.

February 11, at London: Accepted Switzerland's accession to the league, adopted the rules of procedure of the council, appointed the Saar Basin governing commission and the high commissioner for Danzig, accepted the obligation offered in the Polish treaty for the protection of minorities, approved plans for the organization of the permanent court of international justice, for freedom of communication and transit, and for the international health office, and summoned the international financial conference.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be delighted to yield as soon as I have finished the reading of the article. I am nearly through.

March 13, at Paris: Approved plans for sending a league commission of inquiry into Russia and took the first steps for the prevention of typhus in Poland.

April 9, at Paris: Answered the request of the supreme council that the league take a mandate for Armenia with the statement that it would assume a general oversight, but did not have the necessary force to administer the territory directly.

NEXT MEETING'S BUSINESS.

The next meeting is scheduled for Rome on May 17, to approve plans already drawn for the accession of new States; the convening of the assembly; the permanent secretariat; the budget of the league, including its apportionment among the members, its audit, and the monetary unit in which it shall be collected; the constitution of the permanent armaments commission; the appointment of an international statistics commission; the report on freedom of communications and transit; the repatriation of ex-enemy prisoners in Siberia; reports on Central European relief and typhus in Poland; the Washington labor conference; and the registration and publication of all new treaties between league members.

The assembly: A meeting of three representatives of all members of the league, competent to discuss any matter affecting world peace, and the final repository of moral authority in international relations will be held some time in 1920, the date to be announced within a short time. Already the agenda is being made ready.

The secretariat: A permanent trained international staff chosen for special knowledge rather than for nationality and intrusted with gathering information, preparing plans, and carrying out recommendations has been organizing during the past year and now has a staff of about 100 men. It is located temporarily in London pending the establishment of the league at its permanent seat, and it is divided into sections corresponding with its work, as follows:

Legal, mandates, international health, transit, international bureaus, political, administrative commission, economic, public information, and financial.

LONG-SOUGHT HIGH COURTS.

The permanent court of international justice: In a sense the long striven for world supreme court for the peaceful settlement of international disputes was given its start, fittingly enough, as the first important business of the league, when at the council meeting of February 11 an organizing committee of 12 of the most famous jurists in the world was appointed, namely, Elihu Root, of the United States; Akidzuki, of Japan; Altamira, of Spain; Devilaqua, of Brazil; Descamps, of Belgium; Drago, of the Argentine; Fadda, of Italy; Fromageot, of France; Fram, of Norway; Loder, of Holland; Phillimore, of Great Britain; and Vesnitch, of Jugo-Slavia. Pending their convening, a special committee of experts has brought together all the pertinent data and prepared a general scheme, so that it is hoped the final plans may be ready within a few months to present to the assembly.

The International Labor Conference held its first session in Washington in October, 1919, and approved six draft conventions for the 8-hour day and the 48-hour week; the protection of women in industry by forbidding night work, and allowing mothers six weeks off with full aid both before and after childbirth; for the protection of children in industry by accepting 14 years as the minimum age of employment and forbidding night work for those under 18; and for the restriction of unemployment by dissemination of information and the establishment of unemployment offices and insurance. Besides this are six recommendations seeking to make industry less dangerous to health and employment less precarious. All these decisions are purely recommendations to the various nations, without any authority except their own moral justice and binding only when written into law by each nation's voluntary acceptance.

The international labor office is now pretty fully organized, with Albert Thomas, of France, as director general and a governing body of 24 representatives of Government, labor, and capital in the most important industrial States. It has held several meetings, begun assembly and publication of world labor data, and called another international conference to meet in Genoa in June on the subject of seamen's labor.

International health office, to bring together in common association the various national and semiofficial agencies seeking to improve health, prevent disease, and mitigate suffering throughout the world, is being organized now in London in conferences between representatives of the league, the Red Cross, the office internationale d'hygiene publique, and others.

Disarmament: The permanent commission called for in the covenant to draw up recommendations for the reduction of armaments, for the interchange of information on armaments, and for the removal of private profit in armament manufacture is to be constituted at the next council meeting. The small States especially are insistent on this subject.

FREEDOM OF TRANSIT.

Freedom of communications and transit: A permanent commission has been set up to carry out the special duties prescribed in the peace treaties to assure freedom of transit, especially for the new States, on certain most vital rivers which have been internationalized—namely, the Rhine, Danube, Elbe, Niemen, and Oder—and on certain railroads connecting different States. A world conference is soon to be called in order to work out plans for the greatest possible sharing in the great highways of nature and for the prevention of embittering discriminations between States.

Minorities: The league has definitely accepted the responsibility offered it in the special treaty with Poland to assure protection to racial, religious, and linguistic minorities in that country, and will shortly accept similar responsibilities in treaties with Czechoslovakia, Roumania, and Jugo-Slavia. Already certain infractions of these treaties are being threatened, with the result that data is being collected in case action is needed.

SAAR VALLEY AND DANZIG.

Mandates: With 13,000,000 natives of the former German colonies and possibly large blocks of the former Turkish Empire placed under the guaranty of the league, the special treaties defining the terms under which these territories are to be administered by more advanced nations have been drawn up and are ready for approval. Also the permanent mandates commission, which is to receive the annual reports of States accepting mandates, and see to it that the terms are carried out, is outlined ready for appointment.

The Saar Valley: A vitally important coal district with 650,000 people is now being administered directly by a governing commission appointed by the league. This commission was appointed by the council February 13, consisting of Rault, of France; Alfred von Boch, of Sarrelouis; Maj. Lambert, of Belgium; Count de Moltke Hyitfeldt, of Denmark; and Waugh, of Canada. It assumed its duties February 26, with a proclamation to the people notifying them of their administration by the league, and will continue in office until the plebiscite 15 years hence decides the permanent fate of the district.

Danzig: A vitally important seaport, German in character, but essential to Poland as an outlet to the sea, has been created by the treaty of Versailles as a free city under the protection of the league. It is being administered by Sir Reginald Tower as high commissioner on behalf of the league. He has drawn up plans for a constituent assembly, called an election for this month, and laid plans for a permanent constitution.

The international financial conference called by the council meeting of February 11 will be held in Brussels in May. The invitations, together with a detailed questionnaire as to taxes, budgets, debts, export figures, and the like, went out some time ago to all Governments, and it is expected that information and recommendations of the most important character will result.

The commission of inquiry on Russia authorized at the February council meeting has been appointed, but there is some uncertainty as to its reception by the Soviet directors.

The official journal began publication in February with an issue containing the covenant, the minutes of the first council meeting, the documents of accession of five neutrals, a report on the international labor conference. A special edition is being arranged for treaty publication.

The budget of the league has been drawn up, providing $600,000 for the organization period through March 30, 1920, and about $2,500,000 for the first fiscal year, a negligible sum when divided among the nations of the world. Already over half the money called for has been paid in, so that the league has an excess of funds. Canada, for instance, has contributed $64,000 as her share. At the present rate of expenditure the league can run for five years on what it would cost to build a single modern battleship.

Mr. President, I have read this splendid article, giving an exact account of just what the League of Nations has done up to date, for the information of the people of this country. It does seem to me that there has been so much misinformation given about the matter that the facts ought to be stated, and they are very clearly and succinctly stated in this article; and that is the reason why I read it.

While I am on my feet I may say further that the pertinent, strong fact shown here is that all the other great nations of the earth are taking part in this League of Nations, and they are taking part in world affairs, while the United States is sitting back and losing its place, its first place, among the nations of the earth. We are being relegated to the rear, while the other nations move forward in this time of great upheaval in the world. What we ought to have done was to ratify this treaty and take our place at the head of the table, instead of sitting back with Hejaz and Haiti.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am entirely familiar with the articles which have been written by the gentleman from whom the Senator from Tennessee has been reading. He has been busy in that work ever since he retired as assistant secretary of the league. But I get some comfort out of the supposed discomfiture of his article by reading this morning that the State of Georgia differs from Mr. Fosdick. Nothing Mr. Fosdick can say will disturb me while such news as that from Georgia is coming in. The Senator from Tennessee should have read this article yesterday before the convention in the State of Georgia met and repudiated the league. Perhaps it might have had some effect in that part of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let the Senator not shout before he gets out of the woods. I will guarantee that Georgia next November will stand by the league, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. BORAH. It is perfectly safe to make a prophecy six months ahead; but I am discussing now a fact, a thing which is in existence this morning. It is probable that the State of Georgia will go Democratic, and in that way I presume the Senator will get comfort out of the fulfillment of his prophecy. But I venture to say the men who represent it will carry some definite and ample instructions. The South has been right on this matter from the beginning.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, sir; because, after all, it is the votes that count at the election.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but I venture to say now that the San Francisco convention will not indorse the position of Mr. Fosdick.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is talking about something in the future about which I can not say, but I believe it will. It is just a matter of opinion as to whether the Senator is a better judge of what the Democratic Party is going to declare for at San Francisco or whether I am. I do not claim to be a prophet; I do not know what it is going to declare for; but if I happen to be a member of that convention, I know exactly where I shall stand.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. During the discussion of this important subject it was not only contended but iterated and reiterated that the United States was an indispensable member of the league; that they could not get along without the United States. From what the Senator has read from the facile pen of Mr. Fosdick, it would seem as though the league was functioning splendidly. Under the circumstances, I will ask the Senator whether it does not prove that the league can get along so well without us that there is no need of further considering our entry into it or our remaining out of it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. All I can say in reply to that is that I think the league is getting along well, just as Mr. Fosdick says. I think it will get along better with a great nation like the United States taking part in it; and I know the United States will get along better, will be more prosperous, will have a better and a more permanent place in the world, by taking her proper place, which is at the head of this league.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that the Treasury of the United States offers a great temptation to the rest of the world, which has been so anxious to organize this league; and I have no doubt that if the United States did identify itself with the league, the financial accession to the scheme would be so tremendous in its character and proportions as to make us the most welcome of all the guests sitting around the international table.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, this theoretical league about which Mr. Fosdick is writing has not exercised any influence at all upon the European situation. It has been supplanted, and its powers practically nullified, by another organization which has taken place, known as the supreme council, and which is the only organization in Europe that is functioning effectively.

There is before me an editorial which states this matter in as effective a way, I think, as it can be stated, and states it so briefly that I will read a paragraph from it.

On the same day that the council of the League of Nations was formally inaugurated at Paris another governing authority, having its seat in the same city, namely, the supreme council, took effective steps to render null and void article 11 and article 17 of the covenant and inferentially articles 12 to 16 as well by announcing a material modification of the partial blockade which has been maintained against soviet Russia.

Is Russia at war with anybody? If the answer is in the affirmative, as it must be, then, under article 11, the situation is a matter of concern to the whole league, calling for wise and effectual action to safeguard the peace of nations. Is Russia, which is not a member of the league, at war with Poland and Roumania, which are members? If the answer is in the affirmative, as again it must be, then, under articles 12 to 15, Russia should be summoned to the bar of the league for arbitral proceedings, and in the event of her refusal to accept such adjudication an automatic boycott should, under articles 16 and 17, be declared against her.

Instead of a boycott, automatic or other, or any intimation of one, we have the raising of the blockade.

By the council instead of the league.

Could anything be more contradictory or absurd? Evidently the council of the league is content to play second fiddle to the supreme council. The supplies which, owing to the policy devised, fertilized, and hatched out by Lloyd-George, will now go to Russia will strengthen its present rulers in their war against Poland and Roumania and enable them, if they are so minded, to undertake fresh aggressions elsewhere.

The whole proceedings show the powerlessness of the league to prevent threatened wars or to bring existing wars to an end. And this is the body, ideally conceived, which was to bring as if by magic peace to a war-worn world. This is the body to the Constitution of which the greatest and most independent Nation on earth was to give its adhesion without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." A little more of such experience, and it will no longer be a question of accepting it, even with reservations. It will be a question of rejecting it in toto, of repudiating it, of refusing to have anything whatever to do with it.

It is better that enlightenment should come now than when it is too late.

Mr. McKELLAR. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. BORAH. I think that is from the New York Sun, but I have not the date and I am not sure of the paper.

I did not take the floor, however, to give any considerable attention to the article of Mr. Fosdick. I would much rather hear a speech from the Senator from Tennessee. I call attention, however, to the fact that there are a great many internal conditions in Europe about which the people of the United States ought to be informed in connection with this very subject matter which the Senator from Tennessee has been discussing.

The great moving power behind the league from the beginning has been international finance; and, as the Senator from Colorado has just stated, if it were not for the great material resources and the Treasury of the United States, all interest upon the part of Europe in having the United States join the league would cease. The entire campaign now is conducted not for the purpose of having the United States join the league with a view of preventing war, because no one any longer believes that this League of Nations, based upon military force and organized for the purpose of holding in subjection hundreds of millions of people, is going to prevent war. It is a thoroughly war-organized machine, and the reason why they are interested in having us join the league at this time is not the ideal reason once promulgated, that it would prevent war, but because the Treasury of the United States and the taxpayers of the United States are essential to the prosecution of war in Europe and to the maintenance of the imperialistic schemes of European nations. That is the power which is now behind the League of Nations, and it is the only power left that has any virility or any capacity to secure results, and that power will be the same if we enter the league, whether we have reservations or whether we do not. There is not a reservation adopted nor has a reservation ever been proposed that has the slightest effect upon the power of international finance to control the league in the interests of their scheme in case we should once enter the league.

I read a few days ago in the New York Sun the following:

PARIS, May 19.

That French efforts still are as persistent as ever in trying to obtain American cooperation in any scheme to improve foreign-exchange conditions is shown by the wide attention being given by French newspapers to a plan proposed by Henry French Hollis, formerly United States Senator from New Hampshire, and Mr. Evian, an engineer of Chicago, who is now engaged in port reconstruction in Havre.

Paul Hossier, a member of the Chamber of Deputies, devotes half of the front page of his journal, the Premier Nouvelle, to a discussion of the Hollis scheme, which is put forward with the contention that it will certainly effect the desired results. As usual, an American consortium is essential to its success, and leading American industries and financiers are expected to provide the working capital of $4,000,000,000, or about 64,000,000,000 francs, according to the present rate of exchange.

Half, or perhaps three-fourths, of this capital is to be used to purchase raw materials and industrial and agricultural machinery, which is to be disposed of to French industrialists and farmers at an exchange rate of 8 francs to the dollar. The novelty of the scheme lies in the fact that the remaining capital is to be used for the purchase of francs in the open market for the benefit of the consortium, as Hollis believes that speculation on such a large scale would immediately throw the exchange rate down to 10 francs to a dollar.

WOULD NOT BUY OUTRIGHT.

Again, the French would not be expected to buy the machinery outright, merely paying a tax for its use, this to be applied toward the amortization of the initial outlays by the American groups.

Mr. President, I call attention now to an article over the signature of Robert Dell, formerly a correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, upon the nature of the situation not only in France but, as could be shown, in Europe generally that we are expected to deal with by entering into closer relations with those nations through the League of Nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator speaks of the financial difficulties, especially with regard to exchange rates. Does not the Senator believe that if, by adjustment and arrangement, the rates of exchange could be bettered—if I may use that word—so that we could sell our goods to Europe more readily it would be advantageous to the people of America?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but it is not necessary to sell the independence of the United States in order to get a lower exchange.

Mr. McKELLAR. No one believes that, I am sure. We do not want to sell the independence of the United States at all. No one is proposing to do it; it can not be done.

Mr. BORAH. Of course it can not be done; that is now quite evident.

Mr. McKELLAR. But that is no reason why we can not correct what is manifestly wrong now, and that is that the financial situation between the countries of Europe and this country is such that we can not sell our goods to European countries.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in favor of restoring the commercial and business relations between this country and every European nation. I am thoroughly in favor of invoking the ordinary economic rules and industrial conditions which produce beneficial effects. I am simply opposing what some require as a prerequisite to our doing that, that we surrender a portion of the independence and the sovereignty of this Government to the domination and control of a foreign tribunal.

Now I read. This is an article dealing with the financial and industrial conditions in France.

But it has been aggravated—

This condition has—

by the insane financial policy of every successive Government since the beginning of the war. On the one hand the national expenditure has risen steadily every year since August, 1914; on the other hand no effort has been made to increase the national revenue in the same or anything like the same proportion. The only method by which enormous sums of money can possibly be raised is the method that has been adopted in England, in America, and in Italy—that of imposing a heavy income tax, especially on large incomes. To this the wealthy classes in France have obstinately refused to consent, and, as no Government is more completely under the control of the capitalist classes than that of France, no Government has dared to defy them. There is now an income tax, but its rate is absurdly low; it is neither properly enforced nor properly collected, and it yielded last year only about 250,000,000 francs, whereas the income tax in Great Britain yielded £359,000,000. In the same way the excess-profits tax, which yielded in Great Britain last year £290,000,000, produced a trivial sum in France, because people were allowed to evade it as they evade the income tax. It has to be said that had a French Government called on the rich to pay during the war they would immediately have demanded peace at any price. It was possible to continue the war only by humoring every class of the population. Even indirect taxation was not greatly increased during the war.

Mr. President, there are more wealthy men and more men of vast wealth in France to-day than at any time in its history. We have suffered from profiteering in this country. We are now asked to take part in underwriting and bracing a situation in foreign countries which is being brought about and made serious by virtue of the profiteering which is going on in those countries. This exploitation of the people, this extortion which is planting the seeds of revolution everywhere, has no greater hold anywhere than in France. Yet we are asked to tax our own people in order that those in France who have escaped their just proportion of the burden may continue to escape.

I have no doubt the American people are perfectly willing to perform any duty which devolves upon them as members of the human family to ameliorate suffering anywhere, but the time has come, Mr. President, when the American people should let two things be known, that they do not propose to underwrite a situation in Europe which is based upon a profiteering system such as characterizes a portion of that Continent; and, secondly, that before the American people undertake to feed and clothe Europe, Europe must settle down and go to work. The people of Europe have shown no disposition to work, to save, to produce, and to stop their eternal contentions. Scarcely a day but some one enters a plea for some people in Europe, and yet Europe is showing little willingness to help herself.

The consequence was that only a very small proportion of the expenditure during the war was raised by taxation and all the rest was borrowed. The taxation barely met the normal expenditure of the country, and all the cost of the war remains to be paid. Even the interest on the loans was not paid out of taxation, nor any considerable fraction of it. And the greater part of the money borrowed was borrowed at short term; by far the greater part of the addition to the national debt caused by the war is floating debt. M. Klotz introduced the desperate expedient of resorting to a reckless issue of forced paper currency to meet expenditure; it has been continued ever since and still continues. From August 1, 1914, to the end of 1918 the national expenditure was 147,000,000,000 francs, of which only 15.5 per cent was raised by taxation. Of the remainder, 37.6 per cent was raised by loans at long term (consolidated debt), and 46.9 per cent by loans at short term, paper money, etc. In 1919 20.6 per cent of the expenditure was raised by taxation, but of the deficit only 11 per cent was added to the consolidated debt and 68.3 per cent to the floating debt. From the beginning of the war to the end of 1919 the proportion of the national expenditure raised by taxation was 16.6 per cent; 26.9 per cent is represented by consolidated debt, and 56.5 per cent by floating debt. During the same period England raised 35 per cent of her expenditure by taxation, and Italy—a far poorer country than France—30 per cent.

This year it is proposed to raise about 35 per cent of the expenditure by taxation; but, as was the case last year, nearly all the new taxation proposed is indirect. Indirect taxation in France is already carried to straining point. It is one of the causes of the appallingly high prices, which are making it difficult for persons with small incomes to live at all. According to a return published by the British food ministry, the increase of food prices in March over those of July, 1914, was 133 per cent in Great Britain, 190 per cent in Paris, and 201 per cent in other French towns. Twenty-five francs in Paris now go no further than 8 shillings in London in buying food. People that live at all well have to spend 25 francs a day per head on food alone. A family of four persons living very simply, never eating meat more than once a day, and generally exercising the most severe economy, must spend 250 francs a week on food. Salaries and wages have not risen in anything like the same proportion as prices; for instance, the wages of a railway porter in Paris district are 110 francs a week. One of the principal new taxes now proposed is a tax on the turnover of all wholesale and retail traders, except bakers, which is estimated to yield about 4,200 million francs. Like the "luxury tax," which it replaces, its yield will probably be disappointing; in any case it will seriously hamper trade and will fall on the wretched consumer in the form of still higher prices. Although the financial situation is desperate, and there is no longer any question of obtaining support for the continuance of the war, the Government still refuses to tap the only fruitful sources of revenue; it will do anything rather than tax the rentier—the owner of unearned income. And the rentier class, with the whole social order crumbling under its feet, still obstinately refuses to be taxed. Last January, when the present Government came into power, that typical organ of the grande bourgeoisie, the Temps, actually proposed the abolition of the income tax, small as it is. Avarice carried to such lengths becomes insanity.

It reminds one of the days of Louis XVI, when Turgot asked him to permit the levy of a tax upon incomes and upon the great estates, and he proposed that his minister of finance should do so; but the powerful influence behind the property interests of the country declined to be taxed, and the result was that the income tax was not laid on and the great estates were not taxed, and the second result was that the King of France lost his head.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who stand in opposition to aiding the people of France or to aiding the people of Europe. I believe the American people are perfectly willing to share their loaf of bread with any person on earth who is hungry. I never want to see that disposition changed in the slightest. But it is utterly impossible for the American people to feed Europe under the system of finance and under the industrial system which Europe is now maintaining or under which she is operating. If we undertake to do it there will be only one result—instead of relieving Europe and instead of bringing about a condition of affairs such as we would like to see in Europe, the reflex action will visit us, and we will be in a condition no better than the European countries at the end of our effort. If those people want to commit suicide by keeping up their present system of taxation, of finance, of profiteering, of contention and strife, it is not within our power to prevent it. But if they will put their house in order, if they will settle down and go back to work, the American people as a people will help them.

There is another feature to this situation in France to which we may well give our attention. This article says, "But it is in military expenditure that the greatest reduction could and should be made. In the second year after the armistice France is spending on the army nearly three times as much as the whole national expenditure before the war." This is very interesting in view of Mr. Fosdick's article from which the Senator from Tennessee has been quoting. If the league is in existence and is operating all over Europe, it does not seem to have very much effect upon the question of armaments. It only proves, as I have often said, that this league means greater armaments than Europe ever saw before.

Further, the writer says, "This is the result of aggressive militarism and vainglorious imperialism, with the country on the verge of national bankruptcy, the general staff dreams of a French hegemony in Europe and Marshal Foch aspires to emulate Napoleon. Although the French colonial empire was larger before the war than France could conveniently manage and so badly administered that nearly all the colonies were run at a loss, it has now been increased. Syria is in revolt against French domination like Egypt against British, and if France wants to keep the country she will have to conquer it. It will be another Morocco." In other words, a part of our duty would be to help conquer Syria and to help conquer Egypt. Part of our duty would be to pay the expenses of this aggressive militarism and to hold those subject peoples in subjection.

In closing this article the writer says, "Nobody can help France so long as she has her present rulers and the present policy continues. A foreign loan would be poured into the bottomless pit of military expenditure or used to relieve the rich of the small amount of taxation they now pay." This article is fully supported by other facts gathered in other quarters, and the truth is that the rich are escaping taxation in France and expenditures for militarism is increasing every day. Can we be expected to enter into a copartnership with such a situation? These things would be none of our business as a Nation and we would not discuss them if it were not for the fact that it is seriously urged that we shall financially underwrite the situation and politically police the whole country of Europe.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator distinguish between loans to Governments and loans for the purpose of establishing credits in Europe under which and with which raw materials may be purchased in this country?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but the final effect, in my judgment, is just the same. If they are not going to adopt a system of revenue in that country which will fairly tax those who are able to pay, which will place the burden upon those who should bear it, it is utterly impossible for us to carry our program to a successful conclusion. It is difficult enough for us to carry our own burdens in this country under the profiteering system which we have. We certainly can not take on another system from other countries.

Mr. KING. I agree with what the Senator says, and particularly his criticism of the fiscal system which has been employed and is now being employed in France. But I had particularly in mind when I addressed my question to the Senator the situation in Serbia, in Czechoslovakia, in the Jugo-Slavic territory, and, indeed, in Poland. Those countries are very much in need of products of which we have a surplus, and they will be very glad to purchase them. I do not pretend to state the character of it now, but it is quite likely that they can purchase, if some governmental assistance were rendered, large quantities of our surplus products, to the advantage of those in this country who have those products and, of course, to the ultimate advantage and the immediate advantage of the people of those countries.

Mr. BORAH. We have a surplus in this country of natural or material wealth, but just now it is not "get-at-able," even in our own country, owing to our transportation system and other conditions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I will yield in a few moments. At the expense of repeating, I am not opposed to any humanitarian system which will take care of the situation, provided Europe puts herself in a position where we can help her successfully.

Mr. Davison, of Morgan & Co., advises the Congress of the United States to at once appropriate $500,000,000 to feed the people of Europe. An easy suggestion. But it is not so simple when it comes to performance. In the first place, I do not know where we get the authority to appropriate $500,000,000 and tax the people of the United States to raise money to use for that purpose.

If we can, through taxation, transfer money or property from a citizen of the United States to a citizen of some other country because that citizen is in need, then have we not the power to transfer, through taxation, the property of Morgan & Co. or other men of vast wealth to the hungry and unclothed of our own country? May we not lay on a tax which will take all incomes over a hundred thousand dollars and utilize it to feed and clothe the unfortunate, the hungry, and the naked? In this coming winter I fear that the poor will go hungry and ill clothed. Shall those who are so fortunate as to possess great wealth urge the Congress of the United States to appropriate $500,000,000 to feed those people and raise it by a system of taxation which would in effect be a mere transfer of one man's property to another? Many people reading Mr. Davison's suggestion to Congress may exclaim, "A Daniel come to judgment." There are other advocates of that system in this country besides Mr. Davison, although I believe Mr. Davison and those people have not been supposed to be in close touch.

What will $500,000,000 do in the way of regenerating and rehabilitating Europe if Europe continues to refuse to go to work and continues to operate under its present financial and economic system? It will have no more effect than the $100,000,000 which we appropriated a few months ago. It perhaps at the time saved a few people from immediate want, but it was purely transitory in its effect. It passed over in a few days. Europe, it is claimed, is in a worse condition than ever, although we were assured that $100,000,000 would start them on the way to permanent recovery. If we appropriate $500,000,000 or a billion dollars and take it to Europe under present conditions, in six months from now under the same policy the condition in Europe will be precisely what it is now or worse. Certainly we will be in worse condition.

What I am insisting upon is not that we shall not do our part, for we have always done it, we have never turned a deaf ear to those in want, we have never refused the call of humanity, and we never will do so. But it is worse than idle to talk about the taxpayers of the United States or the people of the United States feeding for all time to come those in Europe who refuse to produce or settle down and go to work. It is a task which would ruin us and would not save them. No one can save Europe except Europe; others can help if they help themselves, not otherwise.

I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Idaho says on this subject. I think it would be entirely idle. I agree with him about the taxing systems in European countries, or many of them. They are on the wrong basis. But how can we help them if we pursue a policy of isolation such as the Senator has said, in this body, that he has stood for?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho has never stood for a policy of isolation, nor has any other man of real sanity in the United States. That is one thing which the advocates of the league seem to fear more than all others, that the United States will shirk some part of the responsibility and renounce the leadership which they say fate and circumstance have imposed upon her—retire, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, into her so-called isolation. Perhaps no word of mine can carry consolation to the Senator from Tennessee or any of the advocates of the league; but, after all, how groundless the fear, how utterly it misreads American history, and how utterly it misconstrues national aspirations.

Isolation? Selfishness? Seclusion is one thing, a thing which the American people as a people have never known, a thing which Washington nor any other statesman ever taught. But the uncontracted volition, the untrammeled and unpawned freedom of the people to determine for themselves in every crisis and in the face of every confronting situation what it is their duty to do and what is in the interest of humanity and civilization to do, is another thing, a thing which, I venture to say, regardless of what the Senate may do, the American people will never surrender.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. May I ask the Senator whether the suggestion of isolation is not pretty effectively disposed of when we look over the roster of 5,000,000 men and the accounts of $30,000,000,000 for the peace of the world?

Mr. BORAH. Indeed it is. But I wish to pursue a little further the idea that because we are opposed to surrendering the control of our affairs to a European tribunal, therefore we either have pursued or will pursue a policy of isolation. It is not isolation. It is simply retaining the power upon the part of this Republic to judge for itself in every emergency, as the facts are presented and as they arise, what it shall do.

Selfishness? When have we been selfish? When have we refused the call of humanity? When have we turned a deaf ear to those who are pleading for their independence, except at Versailles? What other nation ever gave of its treasure and its blood to purchase the freedom of oppressed and helpless people and then gave them the freedom thus purchased with our sacrifices, as in the case of Cuba? For nearly 150 years this Republic has exerted a world-wide influence for peace, for liberty, for justice, and for humanity, and it will continue to exert that influence, and if need be it will measure up to the sacrifice and the obligation when the hour comes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator explain how we would be in any better position than we are at present to relieve the distress of Europe by contributions of money and credits if we had a delegate sitting in the council of the league?

Mr. BORAH. Of course we could not do anything more than we would do now, because I presume that even the most earnest advocate of the league, even the Senator from Tennessee and Mr. Fosdick, would not be in favor of giving the council power to appropriate money.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. For us?

Mr. BORAH. For us. So he would have to come back here. In that particular there would be no difference in the situation. But those who advocate that we must either surrender some of the vital powers of government or that we must be charged, and successfully charged, with selfishness, with narrowness, with isolation, with being a hermit Nation, overlook the entire history of the United States and overlook the fact that there is no safer tribunal to pass upon humanitarian movements or upon propositions which involve aid to the human race than the men and women in whose keeping has been intrusted this Republic.

No appeal has ever been made to them in vain, and, in my judgment, no appeal ever will be made to them in vain, and while they are doing their duty as a member of the family of nations, in my humble judgment, they will retain unto themselves, uncontrolled and unhampered, the power to decide it for themselves. Europe need have no fear, if Europe will put her house in order and do those things which Europe can do—settle down and go to work instead of continuing war over boundary lines and conditions which do not concern us at all—that undoubtedly the people of the United States will lend every assistance possible.

But, Mr. President, looking at the situation in Europe for a moment now, let me read a statement from a former distinguished Democrat. He may be a Democrat still, although he is no longer in the Cabinet. Speaking of trade relations, what possible reason is there why we should not resume trade relations with Russia? The thing from which the world is dying is economic evils, and we have no remedy for economic evils except political remedies. You can not always cure economic conditions or evils by the applying of merely political remedies, and it is an economic condition of affairs in Europe with which we have to deal, and to it we must apply like remedies.

The treatment which Russia has received at the hands of the Allies for the last two years has been contrary to all sound principles, so far as trade relations or economic conditions are concerned. I am not speaking now about the political situation in Russia. In the first place, we established a blockade and now we propose to refuse to establish trade relations with Russia in any form whatever. What is the result? I read a paragraph from Mr. Redfield:

> Not only is the Russian problem around our necks—it is on our feet also. Russia is one of the world's great sources of supply of calf skins. The want of this supply is reflected in the price of leather and of shoes. We have been and still are running the great leather and shoe industries with a large part of their raw material cut off because we can not get it from Russia.
> Thus seated, let us say, at our domestic board with our families around us and with the Russian problem adversely affecting our heads and our feet—literally touching us from head to foot—think you we have finished with the matter? Not so—there is more to follow. The price of the bread upon our tables, the cost of our food, is affected directly by the absence of the Russian food supply from the markets of the world.

Here is one great source of raw material in the world, a great source of supply for food and those things which are so essential now to bring living within the reach of every citizen, and it is cut off, it is isolated. We have refused to trade with them. Why? Because we do not like the political situation in Russia, because the political conditions there are offensive to the American people, or I presume to most of them. But if we are going to continue to apply political remedies to industrial and economic conditions in Europe, we may expect to see a continuance of economic conditions which now prevail in Europe. So far as I am concerned, I think it is no less than a blunder which, as Napoleon said, may amount to a crime for us to refuse to restore trade relations with Russia. Europe is suffering from conditions brought about by unwise policies, by policies based not upon sound finance or business rules, but policies born of political ambition, of fear, of imperialism, of hatred, and of vengeance.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Would the Senator resume trade relations with Russia if to do so involved the necessity of the recognition of the Lenin government?

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe that is inevitably involved; I do not believe that is a necessity.

Mr. THOMAS. It was announced three or four days ago that Lenin had imposed that as a condition.

Mr. BORAH. I know that that has been announced, and the opposite has been announced also.

I have no desire to take any step which will establish or aid the things for which Mr. Lenin and Mr. Trotski stand, not even in Russia, and certainly not in this country, or anywhere else. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I recognize it to be the right of the Russian people, if they see fit to do so, to establish a soviet form of government; and I am perfectly satisfied that the manner in which we have been dealing with Russia has been a substantial aid to Lenin and Trotski. One of the purposes we had in appropriating $100,000,000 was to feed Bolshevism out of Europe. It was said that if we could feed those who were hungry, if we could clothe those who were naked, if we could dispose of the discontent in Europe by satisfying the hunger, that of itself would end Bolshevism. If that be true, then, certainly the best way to get rid of Bolshevism in Russia is to establish trade relations which will enable those people to take care of themselves, to build up a stable and sane democracy, and to dispose of the conditions which at this time prevail. On the other hand, if we can not end Bolshevism in that way, or if we can not end the soviet theory of government in that way, then it must be that the people of Russia are determined to have that kind of a government. If the people of Russia are determined to have that kind of a government, so far as I am concerned, whatever the responsibility of the declaration may be politically, I am willing for the people of Russia to have it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator know that, notwithstanding the lifting of the blockade and the efforts made by many European countries to develop trade with Russia, it has been absolutely unavailing, first, because Russia had no products to dispose of; and, second, because Lenin and Trotski have insisted that before any trade should be carried on it should be under the direction of the soviet government, and that the soviet government should have the right in those countries with which it traded to carry on the propaganda for the disorganization and destruction of their governments?

Mr. BORAH. My information with regard to Russia leads me to believe that our trade relationship with Russia is not hurting Lenin and Trotski at all; and neither is the suffering, which now is almost universal in Russia, a condition which affects those who are particularly known as the Bolshevists or those in control of the Government. The people who are suffering and dying in Russia are the common people, the masses, men, women, and children, who are not responsible in any way for the condition which has been imposed upon them by their leaders, if I am correctly informed. But what are we going to do? Are we going to refuse to establish trade relations with Russia until the soviet form of government fails or until Lenin and Trotski utterly fail? I see little indication of their failing. They have the largest and most effective army to-day, outside possibly of one nation, on the face of the earth. They could not sustain it at all if the people were not in sympathy with the things for which they are standing; and the argument which they are using upon the masses of the people to make them support them is the relationship which the other nations bear toward Russia. They are convinced that the other nations propose to bring Russia to a condition where the old Czar régime will be restored. That is almost a universal belief among the Russian people, that England and France and now the United States—although that formerly was not true; at least, they did not think it was true—that these countries propose, through one method or another, to restore the old régime in Russia. The Russian people, if I am correctly informed, do not propose to have that. They are willing to suffer anything before they will suffer that. I do not blame them, for as cruel and inhuman and indefensible as the Lenin and Trotski government is, compared with the suffering, the barbarity, the cruelty, and the indescribable wrongs of the last 150 to 200 years of the reign of the Czars, I do not blame the Russian people for at least wanting to try some other kind of a barbarous government. The Russian people are oppressed by their present rulers, no doubt, but they seem unwilling to take one step back to the old system, and I can well understand why they feel that way.

So I say, Mr. President, knowing full well that it will be said that I am in favor of the soviet form of government, that I am in favor of restoring trade relations with Russia. I am in favor of it upon humanitarian grounds and also upon business principles. I do not believe it would require recognition of the soviet government. But I repeat that the people of Russia have a right to establish their own form of government, and if they are going to have that form of government we have got to trade with them at some time.

Now, Mr. President, I know that the establishment of trade relations alone will not redeem Russia. I know there is vastly more to be done. I know her limited supply of gold and her condition generally will make it impossible for her to get more than a limited benefit from the establishment of trade relations. But it is the first step. It is the step of justice. It is the step of common sense and Christian decency, and therefore I am in favor of taking it. And let me say further and a little more explicitly, that if I had to advise the Russian people I would certainly advise them against their present rulers and against the kind of government for which their present rulers stand. In any event, we do not want it in this country, and I have no fear of our having it. Nevertheless I insist that we can not deny Russia the right to establish her own system of government. Mr. Pitt, prime minister of England, said he would not trade with France or recognize the French Government because it was an "armed system" which, if once recognized, would uproot and destroy all stable governments and all orderly and regulated liberty. Mr. Fox replied to him in a speech which has never been excelled in the English tongue. But Mr. Fox was not so conclusive against Mr. Pitt as the logic of events. The French people in their own way, through turmoil and strife, through bloodshed and suffering, and along the path of revolution and by the guillotine, established their system of government. It was worked out into a reasonable, sane, and stable republic. I have no doubt that the future form of government in Russia, which we all hope will be more stable, more sane, will nevertheless be worked out along the path of sovietism. What it will cost in suffering Heaven alone knows. But we do not help the situation by our present course.

To conclude, I repeat that I would establish trade relations with Russia. If this involves a recognition of the soviet government, to that extent I would recognize it. I would do it upon the theory and the hope that that would be one way by which to uproot and destroy Bolshevism in Russia, and, secondly, that the Russian people have a right to establish their own form of government, whatever it may be. I understand, of course, perfectly the criticism which I invite by this statement. But I believe it is the wise course and I believe time will prove it to be the just and humane course.

PROFITEERING AND THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should not take the time of the Senate away from the shipping bill if there seemed to be any immediate prospect of its passage. I understand that the steering committee has decided that the shipping bill, the Army appropriation bill, and the bill for a woman's bureau in the Department of Labor, and possibly one or two other bills, shall be passed, but that they deny any place in the legislative program to the bill for the regulation of the great packer monopoly, the only bill pending here that really affects the cost of living to the people of this country. That being the situation, and there being the remainder of the session for the consideration of the appropriation bills and the bill of the Senator from Washington, there seems to be no hurry in our deliberation; and I shall proceed very leisurely to discuss a subject which, I think, is of tremendous importance to the American people, and which was discussed yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

I wish, however, to say in passing that I do not subscribe to the program of the steering committee. I do not recognize the right of any small assembly of men on either side of the Chamber, after bills have been reported from committees to the Senate, following full discussion and consideration, to say that such bills shall not be considered by the Senate except as they may say; and I serve notice now in my humble way that I shall strive, as other Senators who are interested in the bill to which I refer shall, to bring it up at every opportune moment from now until the close of the session. We are not asking anyone to vote for the bill, we are merely asking that it have its day in court.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator does not mean to misrepresent anything.

Mr. KENYON. I do not.

Mr. LODGE. No place was denied to any bill; no committee of which I have any knowledge has any right to deny anything of the kind; but it was the opinion of the steering committee, which was appointed in the usual way, that it was the duty of the Senate now, as a recess is certainly approaching and also the 1st of July, first to dispose of the great appropriation bills. Of course, if the Senate is going to vote with the Senator from Iowa to lay them aside, we will all accept that decision; but it was the feeling of the steering committee that the great appropriation bills ought to be disposed of and that the shipping bill now pending, which has been before the Senate for some days, should also be disposed of. The committee has no power to deal with anything except the order of the business; and that is what they recommend. All they can do is to make recommendations to the Senate. They deny no place to any bill. It is for the Senate to take up any measure it sees fit; and if the Senator wants to ask the Senate to take up his bill, he can ask that that be done, and we will have a vote.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it is not my bill. It is a joint bill reported by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. LODGE. The bill of the public, or whatever the Senator chooses to call it.

Mr. KENYON. I understand perfectly well that the steering committee can not deny a place to bills, but I understand full well just how the matter is brought about and nobody is deceived by it at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have been very much interested in what the Senator has said, and therefore I wish to direct an inquiry to him. There is a bill of some moment that has been pending for a long period of time and was pending during the last session. It is of moment, of course, only to employees of the Government who are in minor positions of employment, and perhaps for that reason there has not been the consideration given to the bill that might be given if they were not minor employees. I refer to the minimum wage bill. Do I understand from the Senator that that bill has been pocketed by the steering committee?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have talked to some members of the steering committee about that bill. We reported it from the Committee on Education and Labor. I doubted if it would ever see daylight in the Senate. It is the bill of the Senator from California and of Representative NOLAN. It deals with a humane question, namely, the question of a living wage for Government employees. That bill, like the packer bill, the Senator must understand, is not denied a position, but it is never reached by the steering committee. They do not deny a bill a place, but they never reach it. I hope the Senator will endeavor to bring that bill up; and if he does, he will have my support.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator will yield for a moment, I simply give notice that I will endeavor to bring the bill up. I realize, as the Senator does, that the endeavor may be in vain, just as he says the effort may be in vain in respect to the particular bill in which he is interested and in which all the country is interested as well; but I will make the motion, and I will ascertain exactly whether or not a bill of the character to which I have referred can come up before the Senate or whether it is to be relegated to the obscurity to which it has been condemned by the steering committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me a moment, there has been no pocketing of any bills by the steering committee. The minimum-wage bill was not suggested by anyone, so far as I have heard; it was never mentioned in the committee.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that I have talked to members of the committee about it, and I have been led to believe it would have a place on the legislative program.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be very glad to see it have a place.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will try to give the Senator the opportunity.

Mr. KENYON. We shall endeavor to see that it has a place.

Mr. LODGE. I was simply trying to say as a member of the committee—I am not its chairman—that we attempted to pocket no bill. We tried to arrange the necessary business of the Government so as to get the great supply bills out of the way, and then it is for the Senate to say what they will take up next.

Mr. KENYON. Let me say then——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senators do not want to do that, if they do not want to pass the supply bills before the 1st of July, all power is in their hands.

Mr. KENYON. The shipping bill was reported to the Senate from the committee on the 4th day of May, I think, and is now before the Senate. The bill in regard to the packers was reported on the 4th day of February, and never has had a chance to see daylight in the Senate. The minimum-wage bill, in which the Senator from California is interested, was reported to the Senate at least a month, if not two months, ago.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KENYON. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say that when the Democrats were in charge of congressional legislation they stayed here until September and October of every year and disposed of practically everything on the calendar. Speaking only for myself, I am willing to continue to do so.

Mr. KENYON. I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I merely wish to remark in response to what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts, that if there is no disagreement in respect to the consideration of the legislation suggested there is then a very easy and a very ready mode by which the legislation may be brought before the Senate, and, accepting what the Senator from Massachusetts says, of course, we will all unite in bringing the particular bill in which I am interested before the Senate at a very early date.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. My opinion is that it is the duty of the Congress to dispose of the supply bills necessary to carry on the Government before the 1st of July. I shall vote to take those up in preference to everything else in order to get the business of the Government done—the necessary business to carry it on. The shipping bill, which has occupied the attention of one of our committees for a whole year, which is a House bill, and a bill of very great importance, I think ought to be disposed of now. After that it is open to any Senator to suggest any bill that is before the Senate, and let the Senate decide what they want to do. In fact, they can set aside the supply bills if they want to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will refresh his memory, this measure has been before the Senate for three or four years in some form or other.

Mr. KENYON. Not that I know of. I think not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can turn to the RECORD. It was not then embodied on paper; but the general principle, the disembodied spirit of it, was floating about this Chamber quite frequently.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, it has been here in speeches made by the Senator from Illinois and by myself and by others.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. KENYON. It has been in Congress for 20 years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Both the Senator and myself knew precisely what we were alluding to, too. There was no misunderstanding, I am quite sure.

Mr. KENYON. Possibly not.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; and so there is now no particular discrimination that I can see by the steering committee against this bill. I have had measures here eight years, off and on, that I was desirous of reaching, but I have not got to them yet. A person must be possessed not only of patience but of a very sublimated quality of it; and I will say to the Senator that if he expects to get this bill up and pass it without discussion at some length, he will exceed my most sanguine expectations, if I retain my health.

Mr. KENYON. I knew when the Senator returned a few day ago that it would be impossible to pass the bill without extended discussion, and we welcome extended discussion by the Senator. The only thing we are asking is to have it come up. The Senator does not object to that, does he?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I do not know. I will see about that when I get to it.

Mr. KENYON. I wanted to hear the Senator discuss it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will probably be gratified if it comes up.

Mr. KENYON. I have no doubt we will.

Mr. President, perhaps now we have cleared the atmosphere a little on that subject. The opportunity will be presented to the Senator, I will say, to vote on taking it up many times between now and the Chicago convention. But I rose more particularly to make a few observations with relation to the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] on yesterday.

I am very much in accord with his suggestions, except that I think possibly the Senator from Massachusetts placed too much blame upon the Republicans instead of placing the blame where it might more properly be placed, upon the Democratic administration; but it was a courageous address, and will challenge the attention of the country to present conditions. I express my appreciation, as a humble American citizen, to the Senator from Massachusetts for striking out boldly as he has on these questions.

Mr. President, the Senator has touched the question above all others in which the American people are vitally interested at this time, and that is the high cost of living. They have the somewhat mistaken idea that Congress can do everything to help in righting it, and Congress is blamed because it does not act. The people do not seem to realize that there are certain fundamentals entering into the high cost of living which can be remedied only by the people themselves. The situation can be helped by the people wearing their old clothes and their old shoes, as many are doing; and no one need be ashamed of patches on clothes or shoes. They are badges of honor, and it is a time of essential sacrifice and already the failure of the people to buy is having some effect on prices. Prices are being reduced all over the country. A few weeks ago Wanamaker & Co., the leading merchants of the Nation, cut prices 20 per cent. That has been reflected throughout the country. I do not think the prices were cut so much because of any great moral purpose as because the people were stopping buying, and they could not carry on their business so successfully. But the need of more production is at the base of our trouble, and there is no apparent prospect of more production.

There will be less farm acreage this year than for many a year. Farmers can not secure labor, and the people may as well understand that farm products will continue to be very high. Some day, when those in the cities realize that they are entirely dependent upon what the soil produces, there may be a movement back to the farm; but the whole trend now is toward the cities. There are many organizations of city folks who never did a day's work on a farm in their lives, and whose organizations consist almost entirely of letterheads, advising the farmers how to farm. If many of these organizations would dissolve and go to work on the farm, it might help the situation. There can be no real solution of this problem of production unless the question of farm labor is solved, and there seems to be no solution of it. The most important question for every American person is not the League of Nations, but the question of three meals a day, or possibly two. If present conditions continue, we are facing a world famine in a few years, and we may as well realize it. Hungry stomachs will begin to drive people back to the farms, and that day is not far distant.

I do not want to spend much time, however, in a discussion of that proposition. It is so absolutely plain that all except those who will not see can understand it. Of course there are many other fundamentals in this question of the high cost of living—the expansion of our credits, the extravagance of our people—and those things possibly may not find a remedy; but there is one phase of the high cost of living that can be remedied that was discussed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and that is profiteering.

I know that people differ and economists differ as to the amount of the increase of the cost of living by profiteering. I read the views of one eminent economist the other day who stated that it was not over 5 per cent. Others have stated that it was 50 per cent; but certain it is that profiteering has entered into the high cost of living.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I regret to say that I have been absent this morning because of a meeting held by the Grain Corporation. I want to emphasize what the Senator has just stated with reference to labor. There was present at this meeting a Mr. McDowell, from North Dakota. He stated that 75 per cent of the school children had been taken out of the schools—that is, 75 per cent of the boys, and some of the girls—in order to get the work done. In North Dakota we have a compulsory educational law, and parents who wish to keep their children out of school have to furnish affidavits to the principal of the school, so that it is an easy matter to keep account of it. The situation, so far as labor is concerned, is extremely serious; and, if the Senator will permit me, Mr. McDowell made another statement. He said that the cost of putting in 1 acre of wheat was $13, just for the seed and the labor, up to the present time. I simply want to say that to emphasize what the Senator has so well said.

Mr. KENYON. I am much obliged to the Senator; and that illustrates the theory, at least, of this agricultural proposition which the people of this country do not seem to realize.

As to the movement of city people going back to work on the farm, I do not know how successful that may be. Most city people know nothing about farm life. The majority of them would be an incubus rather than a help, and I doubt if that furnishes much of a solution. It will only come about when the time of hungry stomachs arrives, and people will be forced to go back and raise the necessary things.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator if he does not really think that it will come when you can make as much money in farming as you can make in the regular lines of city business, and that people will go where they can get the greatest remuneration for a given amount of expended energy? If they can make as much upon the farm as they can in the cities, and have the same opportunities, they will naturally go to the farm; and the very fact that all of our efforts are to increase wages all along the line in our cities, and allow greater earnings to such an extent that the farmer can not compete with them, is the real cause of driving the people to the cities from the farm.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; that is true as a theory, of course, but, notwithstanding that, suppose the day comes of a shortage of food—and, according to the Secretary of Agriculture, if he is correctly quoted, that shortage is near at hand. I saw a statement the other day that our production from the farms this year would be not over 72 per cent of what it had been before. Now, if it comes to the hunger point they are not going to wait for equal conditions on the farm. They will go where they can get something to eat. Of course, these ideas of making farm life more attractive are splendid—having community centers and taking the moving pictures and the lectures to the country. That is fine and that must come in the natural order of things, but I am afraid we shall have serious trouble before those problems can be worked out.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator will have to agree with me that it would be impossible for a person, because he was hungry in the city, to go out and buy a farm and take the time necessary to raise a crop on it before he had anything to eat.

Mr. KENYON. He could not buy the farm, but he would be willing to go there and work, would he not?

Mr. McCUMBER. So I do not think that rule would apply very well. We might possibly get some people there to work for a less amount of money, and that is the only way in which the Senator's argument would be applicable. The whole trouble to-day, and the trouble that has existed right along, it seems to me, has been that the remuneration in the cities is so much greater than upon the farm that it is driving all of our young men and young women from the farm to the cities.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; there is no doubt about it. When a boy getting $40 a month and his board on the farm can go to the city and get seven or eight dollars a day, and only work eight hours a day, you can not keep the boy on the farm.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. The cause is basically deeper than equal compensation. If the compensation on the farm were precisely what it is in the cities a large portion of the population is of such a morbid instinct or habit of life that you could not take a dweller in the city out on the farm and make him stay. There are not enough cigar stores, not enough grafonolas, not enough confectionery establishments and ballet dancers to suit their habits of life and modes of thought.

Mr. KENYON. And pool halls.

Mr. SHERMAN. And pool rooms, I am sorry to say, which are worse than any of the others, not even excepting the last I named; and until that is changed and until their natures are bred differently we will not get them to leave the city and go on the farm. I have seen it tried.

I unwittingly insulted a friend of mine who was temporarily in search of remunerative compensation, to use the language of my friend from North Dakota, by suggesting that if he were out of work and money and wanted three meals a day I knew where I could get him a very remunerative place on a farm, and he flushed in the face and said he was no "rube." When I find a man of that sort, Mr. President, who has some conscientious scruples about being called a "rube" I would rather see him hungry a while; it would do him good.

Mr. KENYON. He will be willing to become a "rube" when he is hungry.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; rather than to be hungry.

Mr. KENYON. That is the trouble in the country; we have not enough "rubes," as the Senator speaks of them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; we need a good many more of them. The basic difficulty with the dweller in the city begins there. Of course, compensation, as the Senator said, has something to do with it, but the other is a much deeper cause of the evil.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I was diverted a little from my remarks, and am glad I was. I think we got down to a fundamental of the great trouble in agriculture—the difficulty and impossibility of securing labor on the farm.

But I want to go back to this profiteering question. I believe it is safe to say that approximately one-half of the increased cost of living is due to profiteering, and that can be demonstrated by figures. The people are tired of it. They are cursing the profiteer; they are damning Congress because it does not do something, although they are not clear just what Congress should do or could do; and there is a spirit of hate developing in this country, as the Senator from Massachusetts pictured yesterday, which is ominous. Is it any wonder there is discord, unrest, discontent among the people when they observe the shrinking purchasing power of their earnings, when they read of the tremendous profits that patrioteers have gathered to themselves during and since the war, and with what unction they wrap the flag about them and denounce everyone who questions their right to rob the American people as Bolshevists, pro-Germans, and creators of unrest?

I have heard the suggestion made since the speech of yesterday that that kind of a speech on the floor of the Senate creates unrest among the people. The way not to have unrest is to keep quiet and be plundered, according to the theory of some people.

These gentlemen who seem to think the right of plunder belongs to them and that the American people are the legitimate objects of their plunder had better wake up. They had better not sleep on while the ominous rumblings of the oncoming storm can be heard by all except themselves. To me it is amazing that men seem to believe they can continue to plunder and despoil the great American people and get by with it. They are the most shortsighted of all the citizens of the Republic. They are likewise the most harmful, and are producing more Bolsheviks in this country than all the Bolshevik propaganda could do. They are making people hate their Government, and to-day the profiteering of the patrioteer is the real menace of the Nation, the greatest national curse. Some of these profiteers and patrioteers are among our strongest talkers for Americanizing of this country. No one needs Americanizing as much as they do. They are just as much traitors to this country as was

Benedict Arnold, as they are undermining the very foundations of the Republic and they are destroying the hope and confidence of people in this Government.

Out of this war has come the demon of greed. This is evidenced by blue-sky promotions going on all over the country—stocks representing nothing but wind. In all the towns of the country can be found smooth gentlemen selling these stocks to the unsophisticated, and aided in so doing by some of the prominent citizens of the community. The people of my State, it has been estimated, have been robbed of at least two hundred millions in blue-sky promotions. I assume the same ratio holds in other States. Some of these robbers are leaders in the community, some of them leaders in churches, loaning their names to such schemes and helping in the wholesale robbery of the people. Compared to the patrioteer and the blue-sky plunger the highway robber is a Christian gentleman, and compared to men occupying high positions in churches and communities who pray with their mouths and profiteer with their hands the hold-up man is entitled to a high seat in the synagogue.

Greed is the curse of the American people. Nearly everyone seems to be trying to get while the getting is good. The jail is too good for the profiteer who is robbing his fellow man, but even jail sentences are novelties. There have been speeches made on this floor and otherwise on profiteering—and, of course, speeches can not solve the question—but they may help to arouse public conscience, and public conscience once aroused will brook no further trifling with this subject.

We have passed an amendment to the Lever Act under which some of the profiteers at least could be prosecuted. That act is limited to excessive profits in necessaries. And necessaries is construed in rather a limited way. However, shoes, clothing, and foodstuffs would be covered by the term "necessaries." And as to those things the Department of Justice had better marshal its energies.

Senator CAPPER on the floor of the Senate a week or so ago set forth some startling figures as to profiteering.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before the Senator leaves what he has just been referring to, permit me to say that I received a letter this morning from one of my constituents which portrays a situation that is very bad, and yet she presents her story in such a considerate sort of way that it appealed very strongly to me, and if the Senator will permit, I think I shall read an extract from the letter, and ask the Senator whether or not he can give me any suggestion, or whether there is any idea that he can suggest which I can convey to this lady which will give her any comfort. I know the Senator has given this matter a very great deal of thought and a great deal of study. This lady writes as follows:

> What change can a family with five small, hearty children, the father possessing only a moderate (in these days almost meager) income, hope to see in the sugar situation, so that in the coming months we may can the fresh fruits so necessary to the small child's diet? I think everyone was prepared for a certain condition of reconstruction and readjustment, and I am not inclined to be unjustly critical of anyone nor to anticipate trouble. My children's ages range between 1 and 9 years, and I am learning how carefully a mother has to watch the diet and how necessary certain of the simpler food elements are in the children's proper development into good, healthy, happy citizens. Sugar is one of these vital elements, and its use with the fresh fruits in the home canning one of the most necessary combinations. At the present prices of sugar we can not do this canning, and the expenses nowadays staggering to a small home will only be greater in working out substitutes for this expensive food.
> Is there any way in which plain, everyday citizens can make a protest effective? I understand that there is not really a shortage of sugar. I dare to hope that there may be some way in which the wrong condition may be made right soon, affecting as it does so seriously the homes and the welfare of children. I have no "political influence," but I have many earnest friends. Can you—will you suggest anything we can do?

Is there anything the Senator can suggest which we could do? Is there anything that Congress can do to meet a situation like that? Or have we done all we can do, and does the responsibility rest somewhere else?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think we have done all we can do. We enacted into law, as the Senator knows, a bill introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], under which it was felt this situation might be remedied, that we might purchase a part or all of the Cuban sugar crop and handle it. It has not been done. Sugar is going on up, and there seems to be no prospect for any reduction in it. We have exported large amounts of sugar to Britain. It seemed to me we should have possibly placed an embargo on sugar at the time.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KENYON. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I think yesterday or the day before the papers announced that the Attorney General had made the statement that the Cuban sugar crop had not been purchased under the offer which was made some time last fall, I think, because of lack of congressional authority. From what the Senator just said, I apprehend that a statute was enacted under which the purchase could have been made.

Mr. KENYON. I think there is no doubt but that it could have been made under the McNary bill. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator recall any instance in which the administration has availed itself of legislation by Congress to help the private consumer? I will admit that the Government has at times been able to buy, especially during the war, under these powers delegated to the Executive or the departments at more reasonable figures.

But has the private consumer been benefited in the purchase of what are denominated necessaries by the action of the Government under the powers conferred in the Lever Act? We know they have not in the case of sugar.

Mr. KENYON. I would not have eloquence enough to convince the consumer of sugar that we had, but it may be the Senator from Illinois, being more eloquent, could convince him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Or the consumer of canned goods or any of the necessaries? Under these powers has the Government relieved the private consumer in the matter of price, except at rare intervals, when they were selling surplus stocks not needed for the Army and Navy?

Mr. KENYON. I have not been able to discover it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nor have I. I have vigilantly searched for it, too.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if he has discovered any action on the part of the confectionery manufacturers shutting down their factories when the private family could not get enough sugar for their coffee?

Mr. KENYON. I have never made an investigation of the confectionery factories. Possibly the Senator could enlighten us in that regard.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have never heard of any of them closing, and I think they are all still doing business, as they were doing business when the private individual could not buy half a pound of sugar to use in his family.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. KENYON. I am very glad to yield. We are in no hurry. We have until adjournment time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Confectionery does not come under the head of necessaries. It is not included under the Lever Act.

Mr. KENYON. But sugar would come under the head of necessaries.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it is manufactured into something that is not indispensable to life. It is a mere luxury or convenience.

Mr. KENYON. It is said to be almost indispensable in dry communities.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is because of the autointoxication that might follow if a person's system were right.

Mr. KENYON. I was diverted again, Mr. President, and return to my subject.

These figures presented by the Senator from Kansas on two occasions in the Senate were rather startling.

The April issue of the Searchlight, a paper published in Washington, devoted to telling the truth, which entitles the Searchlight to a unique position in journalism, on April 1, 1920, contained an article by Basil Manly on the same subject, pointing out some of the enormous profiteering.

Recently Mr. W. Jett Lauck, before the United States Labor Board, has presented a most complete analysis of the situation as to profiteering. Mr. Lauck is one of the best students and clearest, conscientious thinkers on this subject to-day in the American Republic. His presentation is worthy the consideration of every thoughtful man and woman.

Senate Document No. 259, sixty-fifth Congress, second session, is a veritable mine on the subject of profiteering. This document is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to a Senate resolution of June 6, 1918, and has been printed and the matters therein made public since July 5, 1918.

On August 21, 1919, the Federal Trade Commission reported on the leather and shoe industry of the country. I might say that possibly the Federal Trade Commission is not entitled to consideration. A resolution was introduced in the Senate on the 20th day of October, I think it was, of last year for an investigation of the Federal Trade Commission, because it was full of socialists. We were told and the author of the resolution at the time suggested that so many other departments of the Government were filled with socialists that from time to time resolutions would be introduced investigating that question in other departments. That was about the 20th of October. I would be glad if any Senator could rise and inform me what the committee has done under that resolution that passed the Senate in relation to the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. It happened at a time when the Federal Trade Commission had made a report on the packers of the country or was suspiciously close to that time.

Seven months have passed. I have tried to find out what the committee or the subcommittee have done in the investigation of the socialistic tendencies of the Federal Trade Commission and the Bolshevism that we were told existed in that body. It is certainly dangerous to have that matter going on any further without some investigation. Nor have I been able to find any other resolution for any other department of the Government introduced by any Senator to investigate their socialistic proclivities and tendencies.

This report of the Federal Trade Commission——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to state to the Senator that there is a bill pending here, introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], with which the Senator from Iowa is familiar, that has not yet had consideration by the Senate. It may be that the investigation to which the Senator has referred is being deferred so that it may go on contemporaneously with the consideration of the Kendrick-Kenyon bill.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator was out of the Chamber when I commenced. That is what led to this whole discussion, but this bill for the regulation of the packers, that has been considered by the committee for almost a year and reported unanimously to the Senate on the 4th day of February, can not secure any hearing or any place from the steering committee of the Senate.

If the resolution of investigation is to fare the same way, it will be a long time, but I am under the impression that the parties behind the resolution of investigation might have more influence in securing its report to the Senate than those of us who favor the packers' bill.

This document has been public property since August 21, 1919, with all of this profiteering made public. I must dissent from the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts of the Republicans for not doing something on this subject.

The Department of Justice has the law, they had all these public matters, and it was their duty to prosecute the profiteers. In the committee hearings investigating the two situations testimony was introduced by one of the assistant attorneys general that there had been three people sent to jail for profiteering, but they were none of the big profiteers. A few of the big profiteers landed in jail would have a restraining effect upon future robberies by these national pirates.

These prosecutions seem to have amounted to practically nothing. I think one of the reasons why a certain candidate for the Presidency, running in the primaries without organization or without money, has received such a tremendous vote is because of the feeling that he would do something as President to smash the profiteers; that he is the friend of the average, everyday folks.

It has seemed to me, and I do not want to be critical, that the Attorney General could have done vastly more by enforcing this law if he had not been so interested in running for the Presidency.

From these various documents made public I want to place in the RECORD a few observations and quotations.

SHOES.

The Federal Trade Commission in its report, after an analysis of the retail price of shoes, says:

> Taking into consideration all the circumstances, the high prices of shoes in 1917 and 1918 can not be justified. Leather manufacturers, shoe manufacturers, and retail shoe merchants all made unprecedented profits.

On this subject in Mr. Lauck's argument is found the following:

> Four of the large shoe manufacturing companies of the country publish their financial reports in Moody's Manuals. These reports show an increase in net profits from $4,800,000 for the years 1912–1914 to $10,000,000 for the years 1916–1918, an increase of over 100 per cent.
>
> The astounding thing about the shoe industry is the proportion of the price which goes into the various margins, especially when this is contrasted with labor's share of the price. In 1914 all the labor from the hide to the finished shoe absorbed less than one-sixth of the price paid by the consumer, while in 1917 this share of labor had decreased to one-ninth. On the other hand, the profit items in 1914 absorbed nearly one-half the price paid by the consumer, or nearly three times the total labor costs, while in 1917 the profit items amounted to approximately three-fifths of the total price, and to over five times the total labor costs. The question as to who is responsible for the increased cost of shoes can be quickly answered when we realize that of the $3.50 increase in the price of a pair of standard shoes labor received 15 cents, while the margins of the various manufacturers and merchants absorbed $2.75. Very obviously, if the various profiteers had been satisfied with the old margin, the price of shoes need not have advanced very seriously.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Iowa is familiar with Senate joint resolution No. 146, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate with the profits tax and income tax from the report for 1918. The Senator also knows that I tried for months here, and he aided me, to get that joint resolution before the Senate, but failed. It has been sleeping in the Committee on Finance. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I would like to make a motion to bring the joint resolution before the Senate, and show just what the profiteers are making and what have been their profits the last few years. If Congress will do nothing to reduce the high cost of living, we should at least let the people know the enormous profits of the profiteers. I do not believe there will be any discussion upon it if the Senator will allow me to make the motion.

Mr. KENYON. If there would be no discussion of the matter, it might be considered. The Senator from Washington has charge of the proceedings this afternoon, and I am speaking on his bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Would the Senator from Washington be kind enough to yield for that purpose? I think he favors the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to the joint resolution to which the Senator from Georgia refers, but it is my recollection that there are some Senators who have opposed it, and if he were to call it up there would probably be a call for a quorum. I think the Senator can get it up to-morrow morning in the morning hour.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I will not press the request at this time.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator found any opposition to bringing up his resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. I have not found any opposition in the Committee on Finance to bringing it up. Several did object to its being considered without going first to the committee. It has been in the committee three months and a half.

Mr. KENYON. That is a short period of time for a resolution of that character.

On page 7 of Mr. Lauck's printed presentation he sets forth a table showing the increase in net income and percentage earned on capital stock of corporations in specified industries during the period 1916–1918, as compared to the years 1912–1914. This table shows an enormous increase in the present net income. For instance, certain basic-metal industries—57 in number, the subject of the study—that had an average net income in the first period, 1912–1914, of $172,729,194, had increased their net income for the period of 1916–1918 to $590,138,605. The average annual net income of 19 clothing companies, which in 1912–1914 was $19,033,503, had increased for the period of 1916–1918 to $55,172,311. In the fuel, light, and building industries, involving such commodities as coal and coke, petroleum products, and building material, the average annual net income had increased for the same period from $100,242,419 in 1912–1914 to $246,703,996 in 1916–1918. So that there was a grand total of the particular corporations, the subject of the study, from an average annual net income of $438,663,427 in 1912–1914 to $1,234,359,688 in 1916–1918.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. What was the gross increase of capital in those various companies?

Mr. KENYON. Very slight, if any at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I will say that I can conceive that the business increase might also bring a greater amount of net increase in profits.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but these studies of Mr. Lauck show that on practically the same capital the net income had increased in the proportions that I have given.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there any place where we could obtain, with regard to the various companies on which the Senator bases his computation, the amount of increase in their capital?

Mr. KENYON. I think so. I think the information might be obtained from Moody's Manual, possibly, but if the Senator from Nevada will secure from Mr. Lauck his report to the War Labor Board he will find it is all set out.

Mr. PITTMAN. I merely wanted to have the information for the purpose of computation.

Mr. KENYON. I understand. I am proceeding on the theory that the capital of these concerns has remained practically the same.

Mr. Lauck says concerning the table to which I have referred:

The outstanding fact in this table is simply stated. The corporations listed—including all with incomes of $1,000,000 or over in any one year in so far as they are listed in the financial mnauals—earned during the years 1916–1918 an average income of nearly $1,250,000,000 a year, or nearly 24 per cent on their capital stock. This appears to be nearly three times the average for the prewar years 1912–1914, and the figures for production, where these are available, show conclusively that these increased profits were not due to increased production.

Of course, that is an important element.

They were due in large measure to the fact that the corporations took a larger proportion of every dollar spent by a purchaser. This fact will be shown conclusively in another part of this study. Here it is sufficient to note that for the three years 1916–1918 the annual profits of these corporations averaged approximately $800,000,000 more per year than during the three-year period preceding the war, 1912–1914.

This is a startling fact. Basing our calculations upon the reported net corporation income as shown in the income-tax returns these corporations represent about one-sixth of the total corporate income of the United States. If these other corporations did as well as those of which record is available, and there is reason to believe they did, then the combined corporations of the country earned approximately $4,800,000,000 more per year during the three war years 1916–1918 than during the three prewar years 1912–1914.

A total of $800,000,000 means $40 per family of five throughout the Nation. A total of $4,800,000,000 means $240 per family of five throughout the Nation. Consider that each family of five paid as a toll, not to so-called legitimate profits, but to excess of war profits over prewar profits, $240 per year, and one gains an idea of the total burden which profiteering meant to the country. Yet it is a conservative estimate of what actually happened, and it must be remembered that this huge figure does not represent the whole profit, but only the part in excess of the prewar level.

These seem to be facts that can not be disputed and they are startling. It perhaps is not out of place to suggest that these figures do not tell the exact truth, because there has been every kind of device invented to conceal profits.

The Government in many instances has been cheated out of enormous sums, some of which have been paid back, but, as I understand, the gentlemen who have robbed the Government in some of these instances have not been tried in the courts. I wonder why. In due time we shall probably know.

The commodities that the average, everyday people have to buy—clothing, shoes, food, and other necessities that enter into their daily existence; building material, if they have homes; iron and steel, crockery for their kitchens, bedding for their beds, medicines—all have been the vehicle through which the robber profiteers have been adding more to their already swollen incomes.

I think Mr. Lauck does not go high enough in his figures, because I believe it can be demonstrated that the average American family of five has during the period from 1916 to 1918 been fleeced out of at least $800 per year because of corporate profiteering in the things that a family must have. Yet certain people in the country wonder that there is unrest and discontent!

Senate Document No. 259, to which I have referred, has furnished much evidence to the country of profiteering and is further evidence that income-tax returns should be made public. Why not? If men in communities in retail business are robbing their fellow men, as they are doing, they would hesitate if their fellow men knew the extent of their robberies. As the Senator from Massachusetts argued yesterday, by making public income-tax returns, which some of us have tried to bring about here many, many times, we could be advised of just the extent to which we are being robbed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point just for a moment?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had last summer and through the late autumn an investigation as to prices in the District of Columbia. It was repeatedly demonstrated that retail dealers in various articles of family necessity made all the way from 50 to 200 per cent. That is known here in Washington. A man who had $800 invested in a meat market—he had no capital stock, but just kept his capital in a bank—as the uncontradicted proof shows, and as was admitted by him, made $8,000 in one year, with no risk whatever, except the amount invested in a cleaver, a meat block, and an ice box.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, was not all this done to beautify Washington and to make it the great Capital of the Nation, which everybody would be glad to visit?

Mr. SHERMAN. I presume so. As the Senator from Minnesota has suggested, it was done under various pleas, but that condition has been known for a long time. I have, however, heard no great outcry, no public indignation among nearly a half million people here. They are still going right along and paying the same prices for sausage and chicken as they did before.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator what the testimony before his committee showed as to the profits in shoes?

Mr. SHERMAN. We did not go into that especially; the primary purpose of the investigation was in regard to foodstuffs.

Mr. KENYON. I thought there was testimony of one of the shoe dealers here as to his profits.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was only incidental; that was not the main subject of the inquiry; but the meat-market man to whom I have referred made $8,000 in a single year.

Mr. KENYON. When the Senator says the people do not care, does he mean to say that he has not heard any complaint about conditions?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, in isolated cases, yes; but no great uprising.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no; of course not.

Mr. SHERMAN. There have been no resolutions of denunciation. It seems like they have reached the passive stage of suffering.

Mr. KENYON. Yes. The poor people never have many uprisings; they submit and go on hoping to get through the day and the next day, and meanwhile watch the profiteer ride by in his fine automobile.

The analysis of the document to which I have referred, being Senate Document No. 259, is worth the while of anybody who is at all concerned about the state of affairs in this country. Here will be found the incomes of approximately 20,000 of the little over 30,000 corporations in the United States reporting incomes over 15 per cent of their capital stock. The chief value of that document is found in the part commencing with page 365. I will call attention to some of the figures.

In the chemical group—page 363—one concern with $18,000,000 capital stock had a net income in 1917 of $7,246,448; it paid in taxes a total of $906,170; its per cent of net income to capital stock in 1917 was 40.26. Another concern in the same group listed a per cent of income to capital stock of 139.38.

Another one of the same group, with a capital stock of $2,500,000, listed a per cent of net income to capital stock in 1917 of 105.93. Another one, with $30,000,000 capital, listed a per cent of net income to capital stock in 1917 of 29.14, and one of $1,000,000 capital stock listed a per cent of net income to capital stock in 1917 of 270.35.

I do not know that these are the particular industries which clamor for the dye bill, which has gone to an early death, and claim that they would be destroyed without a prohibitory tariff; but if so, it was well that Congress was not overpersuaded by their tears or by their threats.

THE MEAT PACKERS.

We have read in the newspapers from Portland, Me., to Portland, Oreg., the advertisements of the packers showing the very small profits made by them. Their statements hardly tally with the figures in Senate Document No. 259, heretofore referred to. On page 365 we find one packing house with a capital of $100,000,000 which in 1917 made a net income of $49,139,147. After the payment of its taxes it had remaining $43,810,948, or a per cent of net income to capital stock, after deducting taxes, of 43.81. Armour and Swift are the only companies that had in 1917 a capital stock of $100,000,000. So that the figures must relate to one of those companies. The names of the companies are not given, but numbers designate the different studies.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, merely for information, I should like to ask the Senator whether in computing the profits they are based on capital stock alone or on capital stock plus surplus? In other words, whether they are based on actual investment or whether they are based simply on the capital stock?

Mr. KENYON. On the capital, as I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. Without reference to the amount invested?

Mr. KENYON. No. There are a large number of headings. If the Senator will take the document, he will observe, for instance, "Per cent of total tax to net income," "Per cent of net income to capital stock," "Per cent of net income to invested capital." It carries that figure, too, in parallel columns.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I judge, from the report sent out by the packers—the printed report of one of the big companies, where they claim they have only made a small amount of profit—that they base that not only on their own capital but also on the amount of money they borrowed in the business.

Mr. KENYON. I am not certain in regard to that, but I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. NELSON. Why, I know it is so. When they stated that they had only made, for example, 3 per cent profit they included in the basis of that 3 per cent profit their capital, their surplus, and all the money they had borrowed and used in their business.

Mr. KENYON. And then claimed that they had made a very small return.

As I stated, there were only two of these companies that had a capital stock of $100,000,000 in 1917, so it must be one of those companies; and that return is hardly in keeping with the advertisements that are put out by the lobbying institution at Washington known as the American Institute of Meat Packers.

The published reports of Armour and Swift for that year showed profits of Armour of $30,628,157 and Swift $34,650,000. There seems to be considerable discrepancy between the reports published for the public and the returns to the Treasury Department. If the income-tax returns could be made public, as they should be, it would enlighten the public as to the profits of these concerns and the truthfulness of their advertisements relative to the small profits received.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, on that subject—I know the Senator wishes to get the whole of the evidence that may bear on it—does the Senator know whether the surplus, or whatever should appear to remain after the payment of expenses for the year, is in cash or in inventoried property account?

Mr. KENYON. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me ask the Senator, further, if he does not know that if a portion of it is in inventoried property account it depends upon the fluctuations of the market what that inventoried property at the end of a given period might show, whether a profit or a loss?

Mr. KENYON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator know—I am sure he does—that that is one of the points of difference between the Federal Trade Commission and the packers in the method of accounting? The Federal Trade Commission insists that the accounting on all inventoried property of the companies should be at cost, whereas the method adopted by the packers in accounting is the market value of the property at the time the inventory is taken. Very largely it consists of finished meat products, either entirely ready for the market or in various stages of preparation. If the latter be taken, the market value is subject to fluctuations on the market, as other pieces of property are. If the low valuation of cost be taken, then it shows, according to the Federal Trade Commission—or would if that basis were adopted—correspondingly large earnings on the invested capital, or what is called in some of the columns "Invested net worth." There would be a vast deal of difference between the cost of the inventoried property and the market value of the property at a given period. It might in ordinary war times—the last three years, that we know as war years, or nearly so—show a very high market value. If that were to be depressed following the close of the war, it would show a loss.

So, basically, when the Federal Trade Commission talks of profits on the invested net worth, or on capital, or on capital and surplus, it depends very largely upon the basis of the system of accounting, does it not, and it will change accordingly?

Let me inquire further if the Senator knows of any very large, successful business concerns that in inventorying take property other than cash at cost; or do they not pretty generally, or in most cases, take it at the market value of the inventoried property?

Mr. KENYON. I think they take it at the market value.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that method is pursued oftener than any other.

Mr. KENYON. I think that is true. Of course, I realize that the packers have been able to grow rich, tremendously rich, and figure that they were making no profit. They pay men very high salaries to figure that out, and it is a difficult matter to understand; but since the Senator has suggested this, I am going to read in this same study what Mr. Lauck says on this subject.

He says, speaking of the packers:

> On the other hand, profits have actually increased between 300 and 400 per cent. Four of the big packing houses earned during the years 1915–1917 $140,000,000. Such profits were made despite the deduction of enormous amounts for excessive salaries, advertising, and overhead charges. Altogether in the period of 1912–1918 these concerns took one-quarter of a billion dollars in profits, or nearly double the prewar value of their stock. Three-fourths of the new stock issued to conceal these huge profits was stock dividend representing no real investment. In this profiteering enterprise the five big packers have been assisted by their control of affiliated and subsidiary companies, such as stockyards and rendering plants. These companies were acquired, with practically no real expenditure, through stock dividends, etc. They have paid large profits, especially since the war. It is such accumulating profits that cause the high cost of living.

The Federal Trade Commission in its report of June 24, 1919, stated that "the Big Five packers," together with their subsidiaries and affiliated companies, not only have a monopolistic control over the American meat industry but have secured control, similar in purpose if not yet in effect, over the principal substitutes for meat, such as eggs, cheese, and vegetable-oil products, and are rapidly extending their power to cover fish and nearly every kind of foodstuff.

Further, on page 32 of volume 1, report of the Federal Trade Commission, they say:

> The power of the Big Five in the United States has been and is being unfairly and illegally used to:
> Manipulate live-stock markets;
> Restrict interstate and international supplies of foods;
> Control the prices of dressed meats and other foods;
> Defraud both the producers of food and consumers;
> Crush effective competition;
> Secure special privileges from railroads, stockyard companies, and municipalities; and > Profiteer.
> The packers' profits in 1917 were more than four times as great as in the average year before the European war, although their sales in dollars and cents at even the inflated prices of last year had barely doubled.

Notwithstanding all of this, Mr. President, and the practical conceding of the facts by the packers in submitting to a decree—which decree is probably like the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trust decrees, accomplishing nothing—it seems, as I have stated, impossible even to secure consideration of the bill now on the calendar to regulate this monopoly. That bill was unanimously reported from the Agricultural Committee on the 18th day of February, the calendar day of February 20, 1920. Bills that have been reported from committees since that time have been given a place on the legislative program by the steering committee. The shipping bill, now before the Senate, was not reported out until the 24th of May, and it has been under consideration here for many days and will shortly be passed. So, may I inquire, is it a public matter that a bill of this character can receive no assignment by the steering committee? Is the public interested in knowing whether or not a bill shall even have a chance to be considered? We are not insisting on its passage. We are not trying to limit anybody in arguing the bill. We are simply saying that this bill is entitled to its day here, and it is going to have it before this Congress adjourns if we are able to prevent an adjournment in that situation, and I think we will be.

Producers in this country who now find their stock going down while the prices of meats are going up to the consumers—a legerdemain explainable only by the high-priced experts of the packers—are getting anxious to know why this bill does not receive some consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator will find some Senators upon this side of the aisle who will join hands with him in trying to secure needed legislation not only to deal with the important question to which he refers but to deal with the question of trusts and monopolies generally. There are trusts and monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade that are operating to-day, and if the present law is not sufficiently drastic to deal with them we ought to amend it; and I hope the Senator from Iowa will join with some Senators on this side of the Chamber for the purpose of securing the needed legislation to deal more effectually with trusts and monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad to hear that from the Senator. I am very closely joined at least to one Senator on the other side of the Chamber in trying to get consideration of this bill, and that is the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], one of the great meat producers of the country, who knows the subject from their standpoint better than any other man in this Chamber. He does not make a practice of taking large amounts of the time of the Senate, but he likewise is deeply interested in securing a hearing for this bill. Between the two of us we will do the best we can to get it up.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa what explanation was made why the packer bill should not be given a place? What is the reason?

Mr. KENYON. I think the bill has never been reached for consideration by the steering committee. There have been so many other important matters that they could not reach it. I do not know any other reason assigned.

Mr. OWEN. The bill is of such an important character, dealing with the food supplies of the country, it seems to me, Mr. President, that if they can reach anything at all they ought to reach it.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator realizes, does he not, how the Senate is conducted? You can have a bill and consider it for a year, report it unanimously from a committee, as this has been reported, and then a steering committee can prevent it from coming up here.

Mr. OWEN. What becomes of the self-government of the Senate itself?

Mr. KENYON. I ought not to say that they can prevent it from coming up. They can not. They can make it difficult to bring it up by not giving it a place. Then, when the bill which is before the Senate is disposed of, the next bill which the steering committee had decided on gets the right of way. I hope the Senator will join with us in trying to bring this very bill up and see whether a few men can prevent a bill of this kind from coming before the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. Why can not a motion be made to bring it up, and bring it up to-day?

Mr. KENYON. It will be made as soon as the pending bill is disposed of.

Mr. OWEN. I will certainly give it my most cordial support in every way. I think it is a bill of the first importance. Here is a case where for over 30 years, to my certain knowledge, there has been effort after effort made to control this Beef Trust. I remember when George Graham Vest, I think 30 years ago——

Mr. KENYON. Did they have a steering committee in those days?

Mr. OWEN. They had a steering committee which steered it right. They steered it so that the people never could get what they were entitled to. You talk about having a Government where the people rule. If the people rule, why do not the people get what they want? They do not get what they want. They are being ruled by artful processes which divert them from their proper ends.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in other words, when this criticism of the steering committee is boiled down, it comes to this: When it gives you what you want it is right, and when it refuses it is wrong.

Mr. KENYON. Not at all. The chairman of the subcommittee of the steering committee is the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I have always said that the Senator from New York, whether he favored a bill or was opposed to it, was so fair and so square and so honorable that the bills he was against he would be willing to give the same kind of a chance as the bills he might be for, but it is not the province of the steering committee to say, "The bill is reported from the committee, but we are opposed to it. Consequently we veto it." That is all. Is the Senator from Illinois in favor of a steering committee which can kill legislation?

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator has asked the question, I will say that I have never been in favor of a steering committee acting that way, but I am in favor of a steering committee preparing a program for legislation, and then, if orderly processes are to be arrived at, I think that program should be adhered to. That seems to be the basis of the criticism here.

Mr. KENYON. What bills shall have preference?

Mr. SHERMAN. They shall be given preference in the order in which they shall come.

Mr. KENYON. This bill has been before the Senate since February 4. The bill of which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is in charge has been here since May 4. Is it just fair, no matter how the Senator feels about that particular bill; is that a fair proposition?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly it is, Mr. President. It is not priority of birth; it is the merits of the bill, or the order in which the committee finds it proper to advance legislation, giving to some priority, even if they be not reported out of the committee as early as others, or earlier, as the case may be. It is not the order in which the bills come out of the committee. If it is to be seniority of bills, then there is an end at once of action by an advisory committee, or anything else of the kind. It becomes then a struggle for the gateway.

Mr. KENYON. I would expect this bill to be killed by the Senator even before birth, if he could get hold of it. But it has been born, and it is not going to be killed right away.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] submitted a resolution yesterday, which I earnestly hope may pass, to get at some of these questions. He discussed bituminous coal, and I want to add a word to what he said.

Mr. President, if there is anybody who deserves a warm place in the next world it is the bituminous coal operator, for he has made it mighty difficult for people to keep warm in this one.

In this document referred to—Senate Document No. 259—it is shown that out of 392 bituminous coal companies given, 334 show net profits, after every possible deduction, of over 25 per cent; 218 showed earnings of over 50 per cent; 118 showed net profits of over a hundred per cent. As to this Mr. Lauck says:

> Turning to the financial manuals we find the net annual profit of 17 bituminous companies for 1917 nearly four times the prewar figure. This proportion appears not only in the absolute figures where the increase is from approximately $13,000,000 in 1914 to nearly $48,000,000 in 1917, but also in the percentage earned on capital stock, which increased from 7½ to over 27 per cent, as well as in the net profit per ton, which rose from 20 cents to 66 cents. As a matter of fact the operator's margin showed a larger proportional increase than any other item in the price of coal paid by the consumer. If the average profit per ton shown by these companies was representative of the industry, it indicates that the operators during the four years—1916–1919—gathered a clear profit totaling over $1,000,000,000. This means a tax on every man, woman, and child in the United States of $10 to pay the four-year profits of the bituminous coal operators. Had the operators been satisfied with normal profits the Nation might have been saved hundreds of millions of dollars in its coal bill.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] referred to the American Woolen Co., and I will not spend time on that, further than to say that it was capitalized at sixty millions, and the annual net income during the prewar years was $1,600,000. In 1916–1918 it was around $9,000,000, which represented an increase in the per cent on capital stock of from 2.7 per cent to 14.9 per cent. In 1917 its earnings were $13,883,155, a return of about 23 per cent on the capital stock.

The American Thread Co. had a profit in the prewar period averaging around $970,000. This went up in the war period to over $2,000,000. Its profits were twice as large in the war period as the prewar period, and these increased profits can not be attributed to increased production.

I will not refer to the anthracite coal situation. The double profiteering in production and in transportation has long been suffered by the people with apparently little hope of relief.

It is hard to speak with moderation of the coal profiteer. Poor, struggling people, with little children sick in unheated homes, are the product of the coal profiteer. If there is not a hell there ought to be one for these men. They are some of the gentlemen who are wondering why there is discontent in the country.

The profiteering in petroleum is almost beyond the wildest dream of the wildest imagination. The Standard Oil Co. of Indiana certainly managed to keep the wolf from the door.

I refer to them among the Standard Oil companies. Again quoting from Mr. Lauck:

> Thus the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana took from the country during the prewar years profits which averaged more than 1,000 per cent on the original capital stock, which represents the whole real investment. In those years the profits averaged over $10,000,000 per year. The percentage of profits to capital stock for the years 1916–1918 was more than two and a half times as great, the earnings being approximately $26,000,000. Of course, in the published reports it does not appear that this corporation earned so enormous a per cent on its capital stock, for in 1912 the capitalization was increased from $1,000,000 to $30,000,000 by a 2,900 per cent stock dividend. The return on investment then appears to have risen from approximately 33 per cent to approximately 85 per cent, an increase in profits which is significant enough, for it means that in 1916 the corporation took profits equal to the entire value of the capital stock, which has been increased to thirty times the value of the original investment.

Can you beat it?

> In other words, 1916 was a marvelous year to the original stockholders, for they received profits in a single year equal to thirty times what they had actually put into the business. Such facts suggest an explanation of the present prices of fuel oil.

Practically the same thing was enunciated by Mr. Manly in his article many months ago in the Searchlight. Mr. Manly has been denounced on this floor as a socialist in connection with the proceedings of the Federal Trade Commission. Anyone who disagrees with you nowadays is a socialist or a Bolshevik or a pro-German. Mr. Manly is a man who has in his heart some sympathy for the everyday toiling people of this country, and the investigation of Mr. Manly seems to have "died aborning." There has been no denial of these figures from any source. Undoubtedly the managers of this company, with a dividend of 2,900 per cent, are greatly concerned over the spirit of unrest in this country. They can not understand it. Do the owners of these great corporations imagine that the people of this Nation are going to quietly continue to submit to such plunder as is evidenced by these figures?

It is not only manufacturers who have engaged in the pleasant pastime of profiteering, but retailers have been equally busy. Statements before the District of Columbia Committee, investigating the cost of living in the District of Columbia, showed enormous profits made by certain shoe dealers and others. The District of Columbia harbors as choice a nest of robbers along this line as can be found anywhere in the United States. I do not care if any of them might happen to have wandered into the galleries. You will probably find that many of them are undoubted leaders of the best thought in the community, much in demand as after-dinner speakers and at various conventions and church meetings.

Mr. Manly in his article in the Searchlight before said:

It must not be imagined that manufacturers were the only ones who reaped enormous profits while the Nation was at war. The report of the Treasury Department shows 2,068 clothing and dry goods stores, one of which earned 9,826 per cent on its capital stock—

I can hardly believe that figure. I am giving this as something stated by him, and not as my own—and nearly 10 per cent of the entire number earned more than 100 per cent on their capital stock. Out of 313 department stores, one earned 757 per cent on its capital stock, and 26 earned more than 100 per cent. There are 577 furniture stores reported, of which 78, or nearly 15 per cent, earned more than 100 per cent on capital stock, and one earned 781 per cent. We have heard a great deal about the high cost of building in the last few years. In nearly every case an attempt is made to attribute the high cost to the wages paid building labor, but this report shows that out of 809 contractors and construction companies, 154, or more than 15 per cent, earned profits of over 100 per cent on their capital stock, and one of them earned 1,390 per cent, or nearly fourteen times its total capital in a single year.

Senator CAPPER in one of his speeches before the Senate stated that during the war the American people had paid for the coal mines, the steel mills, the textile factories, and every other essential branch of industry. It did not seem possible that that could be true, and yet the facts bear out the statement.

One result of the war seems to be a large crop of millionaires. In 1917 we had 6,664 millionaires as compared with 2,348 in 1914. It is interesting to note the following from Mr. Lauck's address:

These individuals had an aggregate income of $1,709,365,988 or over one-eighth of the entire taxable income of the United States. Seventy per cent of this income, or over a billion and a quarter dollars of it, came from property. In fact, as we examine the data available we find that the higher the income the greater the proportion coming from property, and also that the higher incomes tended to increase more rapidly than the lower ones. Statistics of income for 1917 show that income from property constituted only 12½ per cent of incomes between $3,000 and $4,000, while it constituted 92 per cent of incomes over $2,000,000. When we pause to consider the fact that the very wealthy are the ones who receive the greatest share of the stock dividends and other capital distributions, it becomes apparent how large a sum is going annually to support these millionaires, not on the basis of real investment but on the basis of their strategic position.

In general the outstanding facts which are revealed in the statistics published by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may be summarized as follows:

(1) As a result of the war the number of millionaires in the United States has practically trebled. This does not tell the whole story; it merely indicates a much more general increase in the wealth of the comparatively wealthy. The number of incomes over $100,000 stood at 2,348 in 1914. In 1917 they numbered 6,664. Incomes between $400,000 and $500,000 show the highest rate of increase, from 69 in 1914 to 245 in 1916. In 1917 there were reported 140 incomes of over $1,000,000 as contrasted with only 60 in 1914. In 1916 the figure for these incomes of over $1,000,000 stood at 206, nearly three and a half times as many as in 1914. All along the line the tendency is for the large incomes to increase more rapidly than the small.

(2) These new millionaires were products of the war. They developed most rapidly in the centers of war production and finance. Their ranks were recruited chiefly from the ranks of capitalists, investors, corporation officials, and manufacturers. Their development is closely paralleled by the mushroom growth of corporate income.

(3) This tendency of the rich to grow richer is found not only in the centers of wealth, but also in the communities where the general level of incomes is lower. In each community examined the tendency is for the relatively higher incomes to increase more rapidly than those in the lower ranges.

(4) This is to be explained by the fact that the higher the income the greater the proportion of it which is derived from property. In other words, it means that property "profiteered" out of war conditions.

The result can almost be stated as an equation in proportion—the rate of increase in income as a result of the war is directly proportional to the percentage of the income representing return on property. It might be suggested here that the higher the income the greater the probability that much of the stock from which it is derived was originally "water."

(5) The close relationship between this enormous increase in the number of large incomes and property becomes even more apparent when we see that it reflects growth of corporate income. The corporate net income of the country increased between 1914 and 1917 from approximately $4,000,000,000 to over $10,500,000,000. Accepting all deductions made by the corporations, and further deducting 10 per cent on new capital, together with all excess-profits taxes, it will be found that the remaining net profits of 1917 were $3,500,000,000 above those of prewar years.

(6) This first-hand evidence of profiteering is accentuated by the huge undivided profits which are about to flow out to the wealthy in stock dividends, following the recent Supreme Court decision. This means that the figures already examined are short of the mark. Profits were held in reserve for a favorable moment of distribution. The increase in large incomes will continue.

(7) This survey proves that in the division of national income between labor and property, property has received a much larger share than it did prior to the war. Labor, therefore, must have received a smaller share. This means that the strategic position of property has been strengthened, that of labor weakened.

(8) The real significance of this is that, as a result of the period 1914–1918, there are at least three times as many people living primarily off large blocks of the Nation's property. In other words, the production of the country must, as a result of the war fortunes, carry a heavier overhead than previously. This does not mean that there is to-day more property in the country for which rent must be paid. It means that the property which existed before the war has been given a higher money value. In other words, as a result of war profiteering a greater proportion of national income must go to those who have given their share of the Nation's property a higher paper value. It means to the worker that a smaller proportion of the total production of the country will come to him as wages.

Mr. President, I have referred to these stock dividends. Since the Supreme Court has declared that stock dividends were not the subject of excess-profits tax there has been a tremendous issue of stock dividends. I may be wrong in my conception of it, but it does seem to me almost disloyal at this time, when the Government is raking every field of industry for taxation, for these great corporations, which have made unprecedented profits, to try and escape just taxation by means of stock dividends. And yet this goes on, and people wonder that there is unrest in the country.

There is not a day but what we read in the papers of some concern issuing a great stock dividend. I have just clipped here to-day a number of them. Here is one of them:

LIBBY, M'NEILL & LIBBY ISSUE BIG STOCK DIVIDEND.

CHICAGO, May 7.

A 50 per cent stock dividend of 640,000 shares, with a par value of $6,400,000, has been authorized by the directors of Libby, McNeill & Libby, manufacturers of food products. Payment is to be made August 14 to stockholders of record June 5.

Here is one of the Royal Worcester Corset Co. declaring a stock dividend of 200 per cent from its surplus and voting to increase its capital stock from $800,000 to $2,400,000. I suppose that could hardly be considered a necessary.

Again, New York, May 8, clipped from a little paper out in Indiana. The people are reading these things. This says:

NEW YORK, May 8.

A flood of stock-dividend announcements came forth in the last few days, five companies making declarations of this character. These were the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., which declared a 200 per cent stock dividend on both classes of common stock; a 400 per cent stock dividend by the Whitaker-Glessner Co.; 33⅓ per cent stock dividend by the Chandler Motor Car Corporation; 10 per cent by the Endicott Johnson Co.; and 33⅓ per cent by the Brown Shoe Co.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I had something to do with the framing of the stock-dividend clause in the last revenue bill. I have not changed my opinion as to its taxable character under an income tax because the Supreme Court has decided otherwise. Of course, the Supreme Court decision is law. I felt satisfied that, apart from the merits of the proposition involved in that case, the economic consequences of a decision similar to that which the court rendered would be precisely what the Senator has called to the attention of the Senate.

But I think it fair to state in this connection that the income which is invested in stock dividends does not entirely escape taxation. The corporations pay the normal tax, which I think is 8 per cent at present, upon these earnings. The effect of the conversion of the remaining income into stock dividends is to deprive the Government of the benefit of the surtax which would otherwise be levied and collected.

Mr. KENYON. And it would be a very large sum.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; a very large sum. So it is not entirely correct to say that the money invested in the stock dividends wholly escapes taxation. It is subject to the normal tax, but it escapes the surtax after distribution.

Mr. KENYON. It is fair to say that it escapes a portion of the taxation.

Mr. THOMAS. The larger portion.

Mr. KENYON. It escapes the larger portiton of the taxation.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. If I understand the decision of the Supreme Court correctly, it practically holds that we have no right to tax stock dividends for the reason that they are capital. The court takes the same position they did years ago under the old law—that rents derived from real estate or other property could not be taxed except by applying the rule of apportionment. So here in this decision of the Supreme Court, if you will examine it, you will see the vice is not in the law passed by Congress, but the court put it on the ground that the income is capital and that you can not tax it by such a tax without applying the rule of apportionment.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; the law as it passed Congress and was approved by the President is all right.

Mr. NELSON. The law goes as far as it could; but the court takes the ground that such a stock dividend is a part of the capital, and that you can not levy that kind of a tax on stock dividends except by the application of the rule of apportionment.

Mr. THOMAS. The majority opinion of the Supreme Court also holds that the transformation of income into capital stock relieves it from the burden of further taxation as income; in other words, that as soon as the transformation is complete, then the fund becomes capital and ceases to be income.

The opinion of the dissenting minority, which seems to be unanswerable, demonstrates, I will not say the fallacy, because I have too much respect for the Supreme Court to say that, but it demonstrates the unwisdom of such a decision, because if the money was the subject of a dividend to stockholders, coupled with the privilege of investing an additional amount of stock, and went from the treasury of the company to the stockholders and instantaneously passed from the stockholders back to the treasury in the purchase of stock, it would be taxable; but if the transformation is direct from the treasury to the stock, without passing through the hands of the stockholder, it becomes capital. That may be good logic, but it is too refined for my comprehension.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, many of the gentlemen who are disturbed by the unrest in the country, through their corporations, take advantage of what they believe would relieve them from a large portion of taxation, as it does in the surtax, and it is interesting to know that since the 8th day of March the amount of stock dividends that have been declared.

I refer to the paper known as the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, of New York, May 8, 1920. A list is given up to that time, but they do not include certain issuances that they have seen in the papers as having been issued, but just those that they know have been issued or voted.

Mr. President, in this list as given on page 1923 of the issue of May 8, 1920, which I am going to ask to place in the RECORD, are the percentages of the different stock dividends and their amount. For instance, here is one company with a 75 per cent stock dividend, and the amount of the stock dividend is $38,330,886. That is the American Tobacco Co. That bears heavily on my friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. [Laughter.] Here is one dividend of 1,900 per cent; many of them of 100 per cent; many of them of 200 per cent; some of them of 300 per cent; one of them of 400 per cent; and in that case the stock dividend was $19,348,500. Those stock dividends amount—and, mark you, that is since March 8, a little over two months ago—to $324,127,213.

In addition to that, there are large numbers of stock dividends issued, which are referred to, the amounts of which are not given; but here is one, the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., as to which reference is made to the press report from Youngstown—they do not vouch for the truth of the statement, but take the press reports and say:

> A press report from Youngstown says that the directors "have decided to issue a stock dividend of more than 400 per cent, or more than $80,000,000," thus increasing the capital stock to $100,000,000.

If you take the issuance of stock dividends the values of which this report does not show and take the $80,000,000 of the Youngstown company, the stock dividends issued by these corporations since the 8th day of March will equal $500,000,000.

Talk about the loyalty of great wealth! There ought to be some way of reaching those stock dividends. If the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], one of the ablest lawyers in this body, and I would say one of the greatest Senators who ever sat in this body, can not devise some way in the Finance Committee—he was a member of that committee when the present law was framed—to cover this question, I should despair of its being covered; but it does seem as if there should be some way of reaching that question. Does it produce unrest in this country when people who have to struggle along to pay their little taxes and can not get out of it see profits to the extent of $500,000,000, that ought to be taxed to support this Government, put into stock dividends and escape a large portion of just taxation?

How shortsighted are the men who are doing these things! Are they living only for the day? Do they regard only their own pocketbooks? Can they not see what it means in creating unrest in this country?

Now, Mr. President, I ask that this table from this paper, which is a reliable financial paper, be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

STOCK DIVIDENDS SINCE THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT DECISION.

In view of the great interest attaching to the matter, we bring together in the following table all the declarations of stock dividends that have come to our notice since the decision of the United States Supreme Court on March 8 declaring that stock dividends are not taxable as income under Federal law.

We show (1) the amount of stock or shares outstanding at the time of the stock declaration; (2) the rate or percentage of the dividend; and (3) the amount in shares or stock by which the capital will be increased through the dividend.

Stock dividends voted or recommended by board.

[1] The final steps in the matter of a stock dividend are yet pending and no announcement can be made at present.

[2] Quarterly.

[3] The directors have voted to pay a stock dividend (amount stated above), provided the shareholders, at a meeting called for the purpose, shall authorize the proposed increase.

[4] No par value.

[5] The stockholders will vote on June 1 on increasing the common stock and to declare an additional stock dividend (amount not fixed).

[6] The new stock distributed as a stock dividend will be designated as Class "B."

[7] As recommended by the board. The stockholders voted May 6 to increase the stock from $1,000,000 to $4,000,000, and the directors, it is said, will formally declare the 200 per cent dividend next week.

[8] General Motors Corporation 2½ per cent stock dividend is payable on the $155,957,200 common stock ($100 par value) or its equivalent in shares of no par value, 10 of which are being issued for each $100 share.

[9] Par value $25.

[10] Paid in March.

[11] Payable in July.

[12] About.

[13] The directors have declared four quarterly stock dividends of 2 per cent each, payable upon authorization of the stockholders, who will vote on same May 19. See V. 110, 1857, 1754, 1744.

[14] Includes $40,242,400 common stock now outstanding and $10,865,448 Class "B" common which will be outstanding after conversion of the $12,072,720 scrip.

[15] Not yet determined.

[1] To be paid out of surplus when the $325,000 common stock offered at par is paid for; $175,000 outstanding Apr. 27.

[2] Includes 664 shares reserved for exchange for outstanding shares of preferred and common stock of the Union Bag & Paper Co. in accordance with consolidation plan; outstanding, 99,336 shares.

[3] Assuming that all of the holders of the second preferred stock exercise their option to exchange the same for common, prior to June 15 the stock dividend will be paid on a total of $5,000,000 common and will increase the outstanding issue thereof to $7,500,000.

[4] A stock dividend of 8 per cen has been declared (4 per cent payable in 1920, 4 per cent 1921).

[5] The directors have voted to pay a stock dividend (amount stated above), provided the shareholders, at a meeting called for the purpose, shall authorize the proposed increase.

[6] A press report from Youngstown says that the directors "have decided to issue a stock dividend of more than 400 per cent, or more than $80,000,000," thus increasing the capital stock to $100,000,000.

The following stock dividends have been reported by various newspapers, but have not yet been verified by us, and therefore are not included in the table above: Belton Mills, 100 per cent; Easley Cotton Mills, 300 per cent; Electric Welding Co., Boston, 50 per cent; Electric Welding Co., Baltimore, 25 per cent; Fafnir Bearing Co., 100 per cent; Honolulu Iron Works, Territory of Hawaii, 140 per cent; Riverside Manufacturing Co., 100 per cent; Royal Worcester Corset Co., 200 per cent; Traut & Hine Manufacturing Co., 100 per cent; Woodside Cotton Mills, 100 per cent.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think that perhaps I should not take very much more time, though I have no apologies to make for taking time, inasmuch as we have our program all laid out now and our cloth cut. I shall take more time day by day, I think, on these various subjects; but in view of the showing from the various articles and publications to which I have referred and the further fact that most of these matters have been before the American people for weeks and months, and, further, that there has been no denial of these facts, is it any wonder that the spirit of unrest in this country is growing?

This Nation, in the last analysis, must look to the great middle class to save it in its hour of stress. They will stand the plundering, but they will try to find some remedies for it. The great middle classes of this country—on the farms and in the shops and around the firesides—branded, if you please, as "rubes," as they have been referred to here to-day, although in not an uncomplimentary way, or branded as creators of unrest, will save this country. They are not American citizens simply for what they can get out of it. They believe in the ideals, the splendid purposes and opportunities of this country; but men who will rob their fellow men as the profiteers have been doing, as the Senator from Massachusetts showed yesterday and as I have tried to show to-day, are not safe rulers for this Nation. They would rob their Government; they would sell the great birthright of American citizenship for a pot of profits. Laws can curb them to some extent. I have tried to point out that laws can not do it all, and that there are great fundamentals involved in the question of the high cost of living, but a great awakened public sentiment in every community ought to sweep these men to social oblivion and scrap them on the junk heap of disrepute.

The profiteer is not new and a product of this age. Pharaoh was one of the first and wisest of all the profiteers. The humble Nazarene found profiteers in the temple at Jerusalem. He overthrew their tables, saying unto them, "It is written My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves." So this land of liberty, keeper of the hopes and prospects of humanity, guardian of the day of opportunity for the children who are to come, has been made a nation where thieves are plying their trade as they did in the temple of Jerusalem.

Congress supposed it had given enough law to the Attorney General to make effective a campaign against profiteering. If the law is not sufficient, there is no question that Congress will enact more law, but law is not sufficient to end, though it may curb, human greed. The public conscience and spirit of America must awaken, and it is awakening. Communities and individuals must assist in a general campaign against the profiteer. Why not organize antiprofiteering societies in the various communities of the United States and make public the doings of certain distinguished citizens who are robbing the community?

We had antihorse-thief societies in the early days in the West that tended to conserve the number of horses in a community; why not antiprofiteering societies? If the remedy calls for sacrifice, let us make the sacrifice. The American people are sacrificing now. If it calls for drastic action, let drastic action come. The condemnation of an awakened public sentiment, coupled with such help as can be given by law, will at least help to some extent in curbing the plundering of the American people by the criminal and conscienceless profiteers.

INCOME AND PROFITS TAX RETURNS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 146) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate certain detailed information secured from income and profits tax returns of taxable year 1918.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on that motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, under the rule, such a motion to be considered requires unanimous consent; otherwise it must go over for one day. I do not feel that I can consent to its consideration now. While I myself have no objection, yet I object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow morning I shall ask the Senate to consider the motion.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the distribution, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER rose.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator from North Dakota desire to address the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; my desire was to call for a quorum. I think undoubtedly the Senator would like to have a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; not in the sense in which the Senator speaks. Of course, I should like to have a quorum present, but I know that a quorum is impossible. The Senate can secure an answer to a sufficient number of names to make a quorum, but when that ceremony shall have been ended there will be just about as many Senators in their seats as occupy them now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope, at least, the ceremony will be gone through with, and, therefore, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	McCumber	Simmons
Borah	Harrison	McLean	Smoot
Calder	Henderson	McNary	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Thomas
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	New	Trammell
Comer	Kellogg	Nugent	Underwood
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Wadsworth
Dial	Kenyon	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Gronna	Keyes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Hale	King	Robinson
Harding	Lodge	Sheppard

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. LENROOT, Mr. KNOX, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. JOHNSON of California, Mr. BALL, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. CULBERSON, and Mr. PHELAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I hesitate somewhat to trespass further upon the time of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] in a discussion of subjects which are not particularly germane to this bill; but in view of the very able presentation yesterday by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] of what he conceives to be the causes of unrest in the country, and with which I take no issue, and of the addition to that discussion just furnished by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I feel constrained to submit a few observations relative to the general subject, designed not so much for the purpose of combating any facts which have been stated as to emphasize what I think are the real causes of the high cost of living and the need for understanding them before we can hope for that relief, the necessity of which is too urgent to admit of argument.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. There is a joint resolution on the calendar which was reported yesterday. A similar joint resolution came over from the House to-day. I am sure it will not take over five minutes to pass it. I dislike to interrupt the Senator from Colorado, but I should like to have the joint resolution put on its passage.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator with pleasure, if it will not provoke any discussion.

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN BONDS.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 351.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota to what the joint resolution relates?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read by title.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 351) extending the provisions of an act amending section 32 of the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, to June 30, 1921, was read twice by its title.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is a request for unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution?

Mr. GRONNA. If it leads to any discussion, I will not press it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know it is a very important measure, and I would like to see it passed. If it will lead to no discussion, I will make no objection to its consideration.

Mr. THOMAS. I may say to the Senator from Washington that I yielded with the understanding that it would not provoke discussion.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that the Senate joint resolution proposes to extend the law of 1918, permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to buy Federal farm-loan bonds up to $64,000,000. The House passed the joint resolution in exactly the same form, except that it added a provision limiting the purchase of bonds to loans before March 1, 1920, and it involves only $26,000,000. The Senator is familiar with the action of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court asked for a reargument. A great many of these bonds are now held by little banks all over the country, and the object is simply to relieve the situation. We have requests from not only the little banks but from the big banks of the South and West and all through the country. I can tell the Senator how it would affect his own section. Where is the Federal land bank which would affect the Senator's State?

Mr. ROBINSON. At St. Louis; but I am not particularly interested in the operation of the act as to any one district. What I want to understand is the effect of the act as a whole. What is the basis of the act? What is it designed to do?

Mr. GRONNA. In 1918 there was a law enacted authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to buy $100,000,000 worth of bonds. There was only about $40,000,000 of that authorization used.

Mr. ROBINSON. Farm land bonds?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. So there remains still an authorization for $64,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator's joint resolution proposes to authorize the expenditure of that sum?

Mr. GRONNA. My joint resolution proposed to authorize that amount, but the House authorized the expenditure of $26,171,225.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the amount carried by the House joint resolution adequate to meet the requirements of the situation in the opinion of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. A statement was sent to me by Judge Lobdell, the chairman of the Federal Farm Loan Board, in which he stated that practically all the mortgages that were taken up to March 1, 1920, would be taken care of.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Farm Loan Board regard the House measure as adequate to meet the requirements?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; the Farm Loan Board believes so. Mr. Lever was here this morning, and both Judge Lobdell and Mr. Lever recommend its passage.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 18, 1918, entitled "An act to amend section 32 of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916," be, and the same hereby are, extended to the fiscal years ending June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1921, to the extent that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized, as by the terms of said act, to purchase during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1920, and June 30, 1921, or either of them, any bonds which he might have purchased during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1918, and June 30, 1919, or either of them, under the provisions of the original act: Provided, That he shall purchase no bonds issued against loans approved after March 1, 1920.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from North Dakota has considered the proposition of the dates, March 1, 1920, being the limit as to the approval of those bonds?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think that is too early a date, and that it ought to be eliminated, or at least put up some time? I understand the Supreme Court does not meet until October, and all the applications that might be made for loans from the 1st of March to the 1st of October, if the joint resolution passes in that form, would not be considered.

Mr. GRONNA. I will state to the Senator the situation. To-day throughout the country, in the 12 Federal farm-land banks, there are about $26,000,000 worth of mortgages. The House joint resolution would take care of practically all the mortgages. It would take care of all the mortgages approved up to March 1, 1920, and it would give great relief to the agricultural sections of the country.

Mr. HARRISON. It renders a great service, I will say to the Senator, and I am in thorough accord with the legislation. I was in hopes, though, that the judgment of the Senator, the judgment of the Banking and Currency Committee, and of the Senate would be that we should eliminate the time, so that we might apply it more generally.

Mr. GRONNA. Personally I should favor that very much, but I think it is impossible.

Mr. HARRISON. The judgment of the Senator is that we had better accept it as it is?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator feels that it would be impossible to get any legislation at all unless this is accepted?

Mr. GRONNA. That is my understanding.

Mr. PHELAN. I understand that unless this legislation passes, the farmers to whom commitments have been made will be deprived of the money which they expect for the movement of their crops?

Mr. GRONNA. That is true.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 196) extending the provisions of an act amending section 32 of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, to June 30, 1921, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is quite welcome.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield that I may make a brief statement?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I did not want to delay the passage of this legislation, and I thank the Senator from Colorado for yielding for a brief statement. I was very much in favor of this legislation, and introduced a bill last week, which went before the Banking and Currency Committee, touching this same proposition. If that bill had been favorably reported it would have allowed applications which will be made for loans from now until the decision of the Supreme Court in the pending case.

This legislation, however, will take care of all the applications upon which loans have been approved up until the 1st of March, which I understand approximate something like $40,000,000 or $50,000,000. As to $8,000,000 of those loans, as I understand, mortgages for some have been placed upon record.

For that reason I did not offer the amendment which was voted on in the House yesterday and which was defeated by a majority in the House of Representatives, cutting out the time limit, so that this legislation could apply to applications which might be made this summer and until the Supreme Court settles the matter.

When we passed the legislation creating the farm land banks it was violently opposed by certain interests in this country, mainly the mortgage companies in the United States, and, personally, I have no doubt that they are behind this litigation that is now pending in the courts, and that they were the cause of the instigation of the lawsuit, and are very hopeful that the Supreme Court will not render a decision for a long time to come. In substantiation of that I want to read a bulletin that has been issued by the chairman of the membership committee representing the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America.

This is a startling revelation of the work of the mortgage companies against the farm-land banks and against this legislation and the decision by the court. This bulletin says:

MAY 12, 1920.

GENTLEMAN: We inclose herein Special Bulletin No. 66, issued by the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America. This is only one of a series of bulletins which are issued from time to time, sometimes three and four times a month, to the members of the association, and shows the way the wind is blowing each time.

You will note the remarks in regard to the Supreme Court in the matter of passing on the constitutionality of the tax-exemption feature of the land bank bonds.

The bulletin further says:

Most of us believe that the Supreme Court did not care to render their decision, which I interpret to be unfavorable to the land banks but favorable to us, until after the next election. At any rate, the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association, I think, is directly responsible for the Federal land bank and the joint-stock land bank not being in operation to-day and not being able to operate until sometime next year.

Claiming credit for the delay of the Supreme Court in rendering a decision which will affect them either for good or bad, which will tie up these millions of loans to the farmers of the country by the Farm Loan Board, it says:

At any rate the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association, I think, is directly responsible for the Federal land bank and the joint stock land bank not being in operation to-day and not being able to operate until some time next year.

They know that when the farm land banks lend money on long term, low rates of interest, it hurts their business, and, of course, they are hoping for delay in the decision and are against this legislation. The bulletin reads further:

I am wondering if this fact alone is not worth considerable more to you than the small fee which we charge for membership in the association. And, as a matter of fact, don't you think that the association is entitled to support, both financial and moral, in their work for the betterment of farm-mortgage dealers? If you agree with me, will you kindly fill out the inclosed application and send it to me with your check for $25, which will pay your fee until September 1? The check should be made payable to E. D. Chassell, secretary and treasurer, but send it to me.

Respectfully, yours,

W. M. HECKLER,
Chairman Membership Committee.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the Senator that the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I happen to be a member and of which the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] is chairman, reported out a joint resolution which I introduced the next day, I believe, after it was submitted. I am sure that no complaint can be made against the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, because, as I said a moment ago, it would have taken care of some sixty-odd million dollars of farm mortgages. The Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, regardless of whether the members came from the New England States, where they are getting no benefit, I will say to the Senator, from this act, have been just as anxious to have legislation passed in order to relieve the situation as have the Senators from the West and the South.

Mr. HARRISON. I am quite sure of that, and I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that I congratulate him and the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate and the House on its speedy work in this matter. It is splendid of them to have brought it out so quickly and passed it through the Senate as they have done. But I incorporated this letter to show the work of the mortgage companies against this legislation and against the decision of the Supreme Court. Such a policy as is disclosed by this letter shows this association to be a set of selfish and unconscionable money leeches desirous of destroying their prey through the extraction of unreasonable and exorbitant interest charges.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have listened attentively to the reading of the circular by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I heartily approve of the joint resolution. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I voted to report it favorably, and I think it an excellent thing just at this time, when interest rates are so abnormally high, that we have this fund available for loaning money on bond mortgages on the farms of the country.

I want to say just a word regarding the condition in the cities of the country. At the beginning of this Congress I introduced a bill which would permit the utilization of the cooperative building and loan associations of the Nation to finance the building of city homes.

The income on farm-loan bonds being exempt from taxation and the interest on Federal, State, county, and municipal bonds being likewise exempt from Federal taxation, these securities very naturally form an attractive investment; and because of this fact and also that attractive railroad bonds are yielding 7 and 8 per cent to-day and the maximum rate of interest to be charged on real estate bonds is fixed by law, little or no money is now available for financing building operations; in other words, the present system discriminates against the home builder in the city.

It is true that cooperative savings banks and insurance companies furnish a market where some money can be obtained, but this nowhere nearly meets the demand, and there has been a complete let down during the past few months in building operations, and this can be attributed very largely to this system by which we exempt one class of securities from taxation and tax the other.

The home-loan bill which I have offered would be most helpful if enacted. It would permit building loan associations, through the home loan banks to be created by the bill in the several Federal reserve districts, to issue bonds the payment of which would be fully guaranteed and safeguarded through first mortgages on real estate. This would furnish at once, in my judgment, at least a billion dollars for this purpose, and it would do that without calling upon the Government to loan a dollar or pledge the security of any bond issued under this system.

This is one way to relieve the present difficult situation affecting the shortage of homes in the cities, and the Banking and Currency Committee, to which this bill has been referred, can help to solve the problem.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there can be no question about the widespread evil of profiteering. There can be no question of the truth of the specific examples to which the attention of the Senate has been called wherein profits far beyond the dreams of avarice have been garnered by those dealing in the necessaries of life and in those articles of merchandise which are essential to the carrying on of commercial affairs. If this were a unique situation, either nationally or historically, the conclusion which has been so vigorously insisted upon here, that the profiteers are the cause of high prices, would be irresistible. No man would have the temerity to question it.

The recital of this list of profiteers, naturally arousing the resentment and the indignation of the public, makes the assertion that these are the causes of present industrial conditions in this country easily accepted. I believe thoroughly in the need for minimizing this situation. I am an advocate of any measure within the power of Congress to enact which, properly and vigorously applied, will eradicate the evil if that can be accomplished; hence I am not at all disposed to the postponement of any legislation upon the subject which addresses itself to my judgment, although I believe that statutory prohibitions will be found in their practical operation to prove as disappointing as those which have been resorted to in times past under similar conditions.

Mr. President, this situation, so eloquently depicted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], finds its duplication in every country on the face of the globe, civilized and uncivilized. It is confined to no nation and to no people, but flourishes everywhere, and because it has the same origin. I read the other day a little squib in one of the daily papers calling attention to the fact that the price of wives in Africa had risen 100 per cent. In the good old prewar days an African chief could get a wife for 5 head of cattle, and now it costs him 10, and I suppose as a consequence he will either have to economize in the business of securing wives and get along with his old ones as best he may or go to profiteering.

The press accounts which reach us from France, from England, and from Germany, conquered and conqueror, all tell the same story. Even in Russia profiteering has merely been transposed from the class of people indulging in it ordinarily to the governing powers, and those controlling that unfortunate Empire are gorging themselves with the plunder of the people. If that is so, and I do not think it can be successfully controverted, then it must follow, as the night follows the day, that the high cost of living is not caused by profiteering, and therefore the evil can not be cured by abolishing the profiteer.

I recall very distinctly that the rise in the cost of living had become so marked in 1912 and before that time that the Democratic convention at Baltimore arraigned the Republican Party as the cause of this movement and pledged itself to the people that in the event the reins of Government should be intrusted to it the evil would be removed. My distinguished friend, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], between 1913 and 1916 never lost an opportunity to remind this side of the Chamber of the making of that pledge and of the manner in which it was being performed. The evil, in other words, has its origin in deep-seated causes antedating the war, and received tremendous acceleration because of the war, which added new causes, new conditions, all of which tends to the same end.

I contended away back as early as 1910, not alone but in company with many of my fellow citizens, that the increased number of corporations and the constantly growing tendency to issue fictitious capital on the one hand, coupled with the enormous increase in the issue of time securities upon the other, found a reflection in the rise of prices in the necessaries of life. I believed then, and I believe now, that that had much to do with starting that industrial condition, at the end of which we have not yet arrived.

What occurred during the war, not only here, but in the other belligerent countries on both sides? We all know that war makes extraordinary demands. In modern war, time is more important than money and preparation must continue, where unpreparedness exists, with feverish haste and without regard to expenditures at the given moment. Of course, that means an enormous expansion of credit. In countries like ours it means an enormous expansion of taxation, and in all countries it means an enormous expansion of circulating medium.

If there is an axiomatic proposition of political economy, it is that the value of money depends upon its quantity measured in all other commodities of man. As the volume contracts the value increases and prices fall. As the volume expands the value decreases and prices rise.

You can no more escape from the operation of that law than from the law of gravitation. It began to manifest itself in increasing volume, just in proportion as these practices were enlarged.

The value of money, I say, depends upon its quantity, but the expansion of credit, of Government credit, is the equivalent, or almost the equivalent, of an enlarged circulating medium. In the first place, it is necessary to enlarge the medium directly to enable the people to buy the Government securities; and in the next place the securities themselves are convertible at any time at some figure into needed funds. Therefore the price of commodities respond to that condition; they are bound to respond to it; and all the legislation that the wit of man can devise can not prevent it.

Then comes a volume of taxes, necessarily seeking new avenues of wealth as well as new methods of assessment, resulting in the passing on of the tax, whatever its form, to the ultimate consumer. The man who can devise a system of taxation, fixed in its character and not transferable, will confer the greatest benefit upon humanity that any man who ever lived has conferred. It can not be done. The only taxes of which I am aware that are not passed on to the consumer are inheritance taxes and that part of the income tax which is levied upon fixed incomes, the latter to some degree being exempt from the operation of this law.

We have been taxing the people of the United States by thousands of millions of dollars ever since the good year 1916 by the imposition of income taxes, excess-profits taxes, war-profits taxes, stamp duties, excise taxes, taxes of every known description except taxes of a direct character. These taxes are added to the cost of living, just as increased wages and the increased price of raw material necessarily enter into the calculations of every business man as overhead charges and find their ultimate lodgment in the cost of production and are then revealed in the higher cost of material, whatever its character.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have been much interested in the observations of the Senator and have speculated somewhat in my own mind regarding the proposition which he is discussing. Of late, however, I have had my mind dwell more particularly upon some features of statistics which I have seen. The Senator refers to the passing on to the consumer of the taxes levied upon corporations, referring, doubtless, particularly to the excess-profits taxes.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I referred to all of them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will modify my statement. The Senator did include all. Now, it seems to be the fact that during the last three years the net profits of the corporations of this country, after payment of all taxes, have been, on the average, just about three times their net profits prior to the recent war. That has rather indicated to my mind that corporations dealing in the necessities of life have been accustomed during that period to charge to the consumer all that the traffic would bear, and that that same charge would probably be made whether the corporations paid any taxes or not.

Of course, I can understand how the excess-profits tax and other taxes might be used as an excuse for the raising of prices; but when we are confronted with facts of this nature, so startling to me, when we realize that production has not been very much greater than it was prior to the war, and when we are told that after the payment of all taxes and after writing off for depreciation and depletion, still the net profits of these corporations are two or three times what they were before the war, is there not some cause for us to hesitate upon the proposition that all of these taxes are passed on to the consumer?

Mr. THOMAS. On the contrary, Mr. President, in my judgment it proves it beyond all controversy. The man who passes a tax on—and the individual does it just as much as the corporation does it—never fails to add something for good measure. One of the fundamental evils of indirect taxation is that when passed on it always carries an accretion with it, and I think that generally is what the traffic will bear, as the Senator from New Mexico suggests. Of course the tax is passed on. It may be that much of the taxation which is imposed by the Government is evaded. I do not undertake to say as to that, because I do not know whether the increased income of the corporations of the country, after the deduction of Government charges, is at present three times as great as it was before the war. That may or may not be the case. Of course it is not the case when you average all taxpayers. It is always a misfortune that the chief sinner stands out prominently and unconsciously becomes an example of the average. A bad man in a town sometimes gives the whole community a reputation that it does not deserve. One commercial sinner may bring upon the community where he resides the condemnation of the State or of the entire country. I know of a great many corporations—and I say again I am not defending these enormous profiteers—I know of a great many corporations and a great many individuals who have difficulty in making both ends meet, and I think they are the majority. They, together with the consumers of the country, are the victims of this unfortunate situation, which should not exist.

The Senator said something about production, and that brings me to a proposition that I have iterated and reiterated here until I am afraid that I have become a sort of nuisance to this body. It is that until production in everything that enters into our modern economic life shall have increased, and increased materially, until it shall have reached and passed the prewar standard on the one hand, accompanied by the practice of old-fashioned thrift and economy which our parents used to practice on the other, we may stand upon the floor of the Senate and upon the hustings and denounce the profiteer until judgment morning; we may enact repressive legislation and impose penalties upon the officers of justice who fail to carry it out according to our notions as to how it should be carried out, but conditions will continue as they are.

In his great lecture upon the Lost Arts, Wendell Phillips years ago said that every modern political and economic question that can be thought of had been discussed to tatters in Egypt before the days of the Pharaohs. The Senator from Iowa quoted scripture a few moments ago in proof of the existence of the profiteer away back before the beginning of the Christian era, and antiquarians have deciphered from the hieroglyphics of the ruins of ancient cities the same old story of human greed and human avarice. They come with opportunity, and until human nature shall have been transformed and spiritually purified it will persist through all the tides of time. Hence, Mr. President, I contend that the great American public have the remedy in their own hands, and it is the only remedy that will prove ultimately effective.

Some time ago an overalls campaign was started and ran riot over the country. It was a good thing; it was a protest against the high cost of clothing. The New York newspapers are to-day full of telegrams from different parts of the country—in fact, from all parts of the country—announcing a widespread reduction in clothing. Was it brought about by legislation or by men wearing overalls? I have a suit of clothes on that I bought four years ago. They are pretty well patched on the inside. I have on a pair of shoes that I bought in January, 1916; but I do not propose to buy any more clothes until prices go down, even though I should subject myself to arrest on the streets of Washington because of a lack of sufficient clothing. I am no more virtuous or self-denying than my neighbor, but let every man and woman in the country practice such economy, and as a consequence I predict we will get our clothing for something near the ancient prices.

I am able to live on corned-beef hash; and if that becomes too high, upon hash made of rabbit meat; and if that gets out of the market, then upon no meat at all until the prices of the packers come within reason.

When we do that, Mr. President, we will have cheaper food; until we do that we are going to have the high cost of living, which, when we consider the vast number of men who disdain labor in these days, might properly be designated the "high cost of loafing."

Thrift and economy, Mr. President, necessarily mean saving; saving means an increase of capital in the banks, and when that kind of saving shall be again practiced the contraction of the currency will become comparatively easy. I listened very intently yesterday to the speech of my good friend from Oklahoma, Mr. OWEN, who is bitterly opposed to the raising of discount rates by the Federal reserve banks, because, he says, it prevents honest men from securing money needed to save their business. If that be the effect of it, I am with him.

The Senator says that the discount rate should be utilized only against the man who speculates. There, again, I am with him; but I am unable to perceive how the Federal reserve bank can distinguish between the Senator from Utah desiring money to tide him over in his business and myself desiring money with which to speculate. The man who speculates will not have conscientious scruples in misrepresenting the purpose for which he wants money. A great many good men have gone wrong because of the opportunities for speculation which seems so attractive and have been forced into a life of deception with discovery as the final consequence. You can not make that discrimination.

We must therefore contract our currency in some way—slowly, imperceptibly if you please, but contract it nevertheless—or prices will continue to rise, or at least remain at their present high standards.

Ever since the close of the war Germany and Austria have met increasing demands by increasing money issues, with the result that prices have risen with every increase, and they will continue to rise with every increase. Of course, the consequent suffering is terrible; but if, instead of pursuing such a course, the volume of currency had remained stationary, the financial, the economic, as well as the moral effect upon the people, would have been invaluable. I think the people are beginning to see that. They almost always do.

The first impulse is to legislate. Mr. MacMaster, in his "History of the People of the United States," informs us that immediately after the War of the Revolution was over the Massachusetts authorities, appalled at the price of living, met and resolved that they would legislate and thereby control the price of food and clothing. Fisher Ames informed them that such a subject was beyond the province of legislation and demonstrated it by historic examples. That sustains two things: First, that the conditions now everywhere prevalent were then prevalent in Massachusetts; second, that the impulse to cure them by a statute with an appropriate preamble yielded to the common sense and calm reasoning of one of Massachusetts's greatest lawyers.

Historians recall that not only were prices fixed in the time of the French Revolution by the constituent assembly but the penalty of death was imposed upon the man who, having goods, refused to sell them at those figures, and the result was that the people in the cities came very near starving to death before the law was repealed. You can lead a horse to the trough, but you can not make him drink; and economic law will assert itself in this poor human world in spite of all our efforts to the contrary.

I do not mean to say that profiteering should be permitted to proceed with impunity. On the contrary, let us punish it, and punish it vigorously; but let us not become bewildered by the notion that the profiteer is the cause of all of our economic ills, instead of being a result of conditions for which perhaps he, in common with the rest of us, is to blame.

A day or two ago Lord d'Abernon, one of the leading financiers of the British Empire, said that no large and permanent relief from high prices could be anticipated from any probable increase of production, desirable as this undoubtedly is, and that, taking prices as a whole, it is doubtful whether profiteering has added 5 per cent to their level, and it is doubtful whether control of prices makes as much as 5 per cent difference in the cost of living. Our own Bureau of Labor Statistics said a few weeks ago that if every profiteer were taken out and hung—or words to that effect—the amount of their profiteering would not sensibly affect the level of prices in America. I think that is true. It affects it in some degree, of course; and in individual cases, as I say, the extortion which is represented by profits is not only indefensible but it ought to be made and punished as a crime against the public.

I do not know how much the profiteer collectively may be said to reap from this situation; but let us suppose that it is five thousand millions or, perhaps, to be within bounds, let us say that it is three billions. Three billions distributed among a population of 110,000,000 would not sensibly add to the common income. There are said to be 15,000,000 laborers or workmen in the United States outside of the farms. A dollar a day increase would be five billions or $5,400,000,000 a year, very much more than the amount of the profiteering, collectively considered, unless my figures are entirely wrong.

Now, this addition goes into the cost of consumption, unquestionably. There is no doubt about the fact that the movement finds acceleration through these practices. There is no doubt about the fact that each adds its mite to the common result; but the way to get rid of the profiteer is to ostracize him socially and punish him legally. Both can be done. Both ought to be done. Some of them have placed themselves beyond the pale of decency or of respectability. Some of them have no conscience in their dealings with the people. Some of them are so carried away by the infernal desire to make money out of the present unsatisfactory conditions that they are perfectly willing to risk all the social consequences that may result from their conduct.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator think there is a sufficient number of them so that they can form societies of their own and ostracize the other fellows?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not think so.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think they are doing it.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, perhaps. There are a great many of them; and there is another trouble, Mr. President. We denounce the big fellow. Why is our moral indignation aroused against him? Is it not rather our envy that in the field of profiteering he should become more successful than we have become? I do not know of a man—there may be such—who has failed to take advantage of existing conditions in the effort to better his own, and I do not blame him; but let us remember that profiteering is a relative term, and that the man who by profiteering makes $25 and unlawfully and wrongfully gets it from his neighbor's pocket, morally or legally, or both, is just as much of a profiteer as the man who makes a million.

Some of these methods, as I say, should put a man who practices them beyond the pale even of the law, and might justify a resort by the victim to that wild system of justice which, in the frenzy of the moment, is resorted to on, alas, too many occasions. As illustrative of this class of human ghouls, I read an editorial taken from the columns of the Washington Star of day before yesterday; and I commend this particularly to my friend the Senator having charge of the bill, in the hope that possibly a repetition of this conduct, or a continuation of it, may be prohibited by the enactment of the bill which he has in charge:

> With food prices soaring in the United States, the astounding fact appears that American foodstuffs are being shipped abroad, and then shipped back and sold here for higher prices than can be obtained in Europe. Not only that, but sometimes these cargoes make two round trips before they finally reach the American consumers.

That is an astounding statement if true, Mr. President. It comes from the columns of a perfectly respectable journal and is a comment of the editor upon what he assumes to be a fact, and I have no doubt justly so.

> What is to be done about it? Nothing, say the Government officials who have discovered the fact of this merry-go-round of trade. Nothing, simply because the law does not reach the men who deal in foods in wholesale and buy and sell them in cargo quantities and are free to seek the highest market. These shiploads of butter, fruits, and other articles pass through several hands before they get actually to market. They are bought and sold in some cases without leaving the holds of the vessels.

This is a most vicious speculation. It keeps the foods out of use pending the deals and voyages. It adds to the ultimate price of all commodities. And, furthermore, it brings finally to market foodstuffs of lowered quality. For the cold-storage transportation back and forth across the ocean necessarily lessens the actual food value of the goods. And for this less valuable material, so urgently needed by the people, the highest prices are ultimately exacted.

And yet nothing can be done about it. Can there not be some method of marking goods once exported so that they can be identified when they have been reshipped? With such a distinctive and ineradicable mark they may not command as high a price in the market upon being returned. Usually surplus goods—and these are, in truth, of that nature—are regarded as "seconds."

The cold-storage system is believed to be the cause of much of the high price tendency in this country.

So believing, we enacted a law upon the subject—at least, the Senate passed a bill upon the subject—within the week, as I remember.

Added to that is now the Atlantic ocean storage method of keeping goods out of the market until they can get peak prices. The consumer wonders and hopes, and wonders still what the end will be.

Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say that the owner of the vessel who would load it with necessary foodstuffs and sail across the Atlantic, and continue his voyage until the prices of those stuffs in the home markets were so high as to justify a handsome profit over this added expense, should be taken from his vessel when it lands at the home port for the discharge of its cargo and hung to the yardarm of the vessel, if they have such things on modern steamers.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. KENYON rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield to the Senator who is nearest me, and then I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just wanted to ask the Senator if there is anything there to indicate the source of this information?

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not believe that a thing like that occurred. Of course, if it did, it ought to be prohibited, if there is any way by which it can possibly be done.

Mr. THOMAS. If I had encountered it in some journals of the country, I should have thrown it aside, but its appearance in the Star as an editorial convinced me that there must be some fact behind it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the date?

Mr. THOMAS. Day before yesterday.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall make inquiry to find out where they got that information, and the name of the ship.

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad to know that the Senator will follow it up. I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to inquire if the Senator does not realize that such language as is used there tends to create unrest and disquiet in the country?

Mr. THOMAS. I think action upon my suggestion would tend to allay unrest. I think it would be regarded as an act of common justice, because there be profiteers and profiteers, but that sort of profiteering, if it exists—and I sincerely trust that the statement is incorrect—if there is no remedy, would justify resort to a remedy outside the law. That, to my mind, is a most extreme instance of wholly indefensible methods of securing high prices in any country that has been called to my attention, and if the vessels which we have constructed, and those which are to be constructed under this measure, are to be used in that sort of trade, then it would be more creditable to the reputation of the United States if they hoisted the black flag and resurrected the old practice of piracy upon the high seas.

So, Mr. President, while I shall cooperate with my friend the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] in every effort which he makes and is making for the elimination of the profiteer from our economic life which addresses itself to my sense of justice, I want to impress upon him the great truth that he will but have skimmed the surface of affairs; that he will have attacked a consequence and not a cause; and that he should join with me and others, as I am sure he will, in seeking at all times to impress upon the good people of the country that the remedy is an old-fashioned and a simple one, yet a severe one to practice, but through whose agency, and whose agency alone, will come a return to happy and prosperous conditions in America.

I have the same abiding faith in the great middle class of the United States that the Senator has. It is that section of our people, law-abiding and God-fearing, men and women who believe in Anglo-Saxon institutions and the principles of Anglo-Saxon liberty, who regard their Government as the agency for security to life and limb, and who appreciate the institutions which their forefathers won through the expenditure of so much blood and so much treasure, through centuries of strife, who will continue to be the sheet anchor of the Republic.

But, Mr. President, these are hard pressed between the upper and the nether millstones, the huge corporate interests, arrogant, wealthy, and powerful, and those great associations of men demanding the same legislative methods and insisting upon being clothed with the same authority.

The middle class, Mr. President, the hope of the country, must be aroused to these conditions, if, indeed, they have not been aroused, to the end that they may realize that all the crises which have marked the progress of their country in the past are not so great as the one with which we are immediately confronted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to offer a perfecting amendment to the paragraph to which the motion to strike out is directed. On page 26, line 8, after the word "section," I move to insert a colon and strike out the remainder of that paragraph, down to line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That at least two-thirds of the cost of any vessel constructed under this paragraph shall be paid for out of the ordinary funds or capital of the person having such vessel constructed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state to the Senator from Utah that that strikes out the feature with reference to applying a part of the excess proceeds on a mortgage, and provides that wherever the exempt taxes are applied in the construction of a ship, at least two-thirds of the cost of the ship must be advanced out of other funds or money of the person having the ship constructed. It makes the section rather more onerous upon the ship owner.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator intend to press for a vote on this amendment to-day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not on the amended provision to-night, because we would have to have a quorum to do that, and I doubt if we would be able to get it this evening. However, I would like to have this perfecting amendment agreed to.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I would like to accomplish a little something further. I would like to pass over this amendment temporarily and return to section 23, the provision extending the coastwise laws to the island possessions of the United States, and offer a perfecting amendment to that, which I think will meet with no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 24, add at the end of section 23, to come in after the word "therefor," in line 23, the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That until Congress shall have authorized the registry as vessels of the United States of vessels owned in the Philippine Islands, the Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized to adopt, from time to time, and enforce regulations governing the transportation of merchandise and passengers between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The effect of that, I will say, is to relieve the interisland traffic from the coastwise laws.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is a wise provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, Mr. President, of course I would like to go on with the bill, but I do not think we could do it without a quorum, unless there is some one who desires to speak on some provision. We could not get a vote.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to move, to-morrow at least, to amend section 29 by striking out all the remainder of the section after the word "act" on line 16; but I do not think it proper to move it at this time. However, I should like to take it up in the morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Senator will have an opportunity to do so then. As the Senator knows, we have an amendment pending, the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], to strike out the first paragraph of section 25. I assume that that will come up first to-morrow. Then we will get on with the others as rapidly as possible. I am hoping that we shall be able to complete the consideration of the bill to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall present my amendment to section 29 when there is a quorum present, so that the reasons for moving the amendment may be stated when there are more Senators here.

RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, May 20, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 19, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Be Thou our Guide while life shall last,
And our eternal home.

Let the sunlight of Thy love penetrate the dark and lowering clouds which hover above us in the terrible crisis through which we are passing and which troubles our souls, that the "Ship of State" may pass through the turbulent and tempestuous sea to a safe and peaceful harbor and the Constitution which we love with its holy institutions live on to bless future generations; and Thine be the praise in Jesus Christ our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF THE PENAL CODE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 7629 from the Speaker's table, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7629, with a Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7629) to amend the penal laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House several weeks ago. It amends the penal code by simply including obscene motion-picture films among the articles that are not permitted to be transported in interstate commerce. In passing the bill the words which the Senate has inserted by way of amendment were inadvertently left out of the House bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. In a moment. They are now a part of the penal code, and the Senate simply reinserted them to make that conform to the penal code.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. The bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. There was no objection to it from the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. What I wanted was to have the gentleman more particularly explain just what change there is in the bill in my hand.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman would look at the Senate amendment he would see that that language was left out of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. GARD. The only change that I see in the House bill is the insertion of the words "to any other place."

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is not looking at the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARD. Yes, I am:

To any other State or Territory or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to or subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

Mr. WALSH. That was inadvertently left out of the bill. It is now a part of the penal code, and when the bill got to the Senate it was discovered that that language was eliminated. It should be in there.

Mr. GARD. I note in the bill H. R. 7629, as it now appears on the Speaker's desk, an interlineation on page 2, line 1, and the interlineation is not correct.

Mr. WALSH. That is simply a pencil note, to indicate where the amendment comes in.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

PUNISHMENT FOR WRONGFUL CONVERSION OF MONEYS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10072 and agree to the Senate amendments to that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10072 and agree to the Senate amendments to that bill. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10072) to provide for the punishment of officers of United States courts wrongfully converting moneys coming into their possession, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, this amendment adds the requirement that a demand be made before a person can be charged with embezzlement under this bill, which is designed to punish various trustees, clerks, and others who may be intrusted with Government funds.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do.

Mr. GARD. I notice from this amendment that it requires a demand. How does the gentleman interpret the law? If a marshal or clerk embezzles money, which this law provides for, then it is necessary to make a demand on him for the return of the money before he is guilty of embezzlement?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My recollection is that under the common law you must make a demand, to show an illegal retention or show an actual conversion.

Mr. GARD. I do not believe it is the policy of the Government to pass a law which would protect in that way a man acting in a fiduciary capacity. Here is a law to protect the clerk who is guilty of embezzlement, who retains money belonging to a suitor or belonging to the Government, and he can not be deemed guilty unless the suitor or the Government makes a demand on him for the money he is supposed to retain.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I want to say that this simply reenacts the common law.

Mr. GARD. I am not talking about the common law. I am talking about this law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Where a person obtains property legally, it is necessary to show a demand before he can be held for converting it, unless it can be shown that he has actually converted it.

Mr. GARD. I do not think we should limit the question of the responsibility of the clerk in that way.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think this does. I think it simply reenacts the common law as it exists in every State I have no objection to the amendment for that reason.

Mr. GARD. But I do have an objection to the amendment. I do not see why, if a man is guilty of embezzlement, you should have to call on him to restore the property before he is guilty of larceny.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It must be shown that he is guilty of embezzlement.

Mr. GARD. If the record shows that he is keeping that money, then he is guilty of larceny.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The law gives him the right to keep that money. Before you can hold him liable criminally you must either show an actual conversion or that he is withholding it illegally. You do not need to make a demand if proof of conversion can be made. Read the second amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, that is the State law in every State that I know of—that if an accounting officer comes in you must make a demand on him and demand an accounting. Unless you can show that there is an absolute conversion of the funds, you can not hold him as guilty of larceny.

Mr. GARD. This does not do that; the point I make is that it requires a demand under any circumstances. I believe the law ought to be such that if proof is extrinsic and can be made to show that he did embezzle the money there would be no necessity for making the demand.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will read the rest of the amendment, he will see that if you can show actual conversion he is liable without a demand. But in cases where you can not show that there is a conversion you are required by the common law, and I think you ought to be under the statute, to make a demand.

Mr. GARD. I do not so read the amendment as having the alternative which the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think by reading the whole sentence the gentleman can not escape the conclusion that if a conversion can be established a demand would not have to be made.

Mr. GARD. This is the amendment: Page 1, line 6, after the word "shall," insert "after demand by the party entitled thereto"——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Or——

Mr. GARD (continuing). "Or who shall convert to his own use or to the use of another any moneys received or on hand," and so forth. Does the gentleman think that would control the case of a clerk who without demand having been made upon him, other evidence showing that he had embezzled money—does the gentleman think this law would cover it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no question in my mind but that would cover it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote agreeing to the Senate amendments was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 18 they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 13555. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

THE KLAMATH TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 5163 and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5163. An act authorizing the Klamath Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the Senate eliminated the interest that the Indians would have been entitled to under the House bill—3 per cent per annum for any lands the court might find they had lost. The Senate eliminated that.

Mr. GARD. What is the tribe of Indians?

Mr. SINNOTT. The Oregon Klamath Tribe.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

CESSION OF NATIONAL PARKS BY THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12044, accepting the cession by the State of California of jurisdiction of certain national parks and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12044) to accept the cession by the State of California of exclusive jurisdiction of the lands embraced within the Yosemite National Park, Sequoia National Park, and General Grant National Park, respectively, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

ARMY REORGANIZATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Army reorganization bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum here.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Butler	Crago	Eagle
Baer	Byrnes, S. C.	Crowther	Ellsworth

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California withdrew the motion that he made last night.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the conference report upon the Army reorganization bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up the conference report upon the bill H. R. 12775, the Army reorganization bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

[For conference report and statement see proceedings of May 18, 1920, pp. 7265–7267.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further disagree to the amendment of the Senate and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to ask for instructions to the House conferees in respect to the matter that is now pending between the Senate conferees and the House conferees. It involves the organization of our National Guard. The House conferees have insisted upon the provisions of the House bill as it passed the House; that is, the organization of the National Guard under the militia clause of the Constitution. The Senate is insisting upon the Senate provisions as carried in the amendment to the House bill, which provides for the organization of the National Guard under the Army clauses of the Constitution.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The conference report having been disposed of, there is nothing at present before the House.

The SPEAKER. Technically there is not. The gentleman from California, the Chair takes it, proposes to move to instruct the conferees.

Mr. CRAMTON. If we had that motion before us, we would know more about where we are at.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan raises the point of order that there is nothing before the House.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conferees of the House be instructed to recede from their disagreement to the National Guard sections of the Senate amendment and agree to the same with some amendments which are incorporated in the statement which was read last evening and which are printed in the RECORD this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California submits a motion, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan reserves the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, would it not be better practice if the gentleman would refer to the sections by number instead of in the indefinite way in which the motion was put?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no number, as the Senate amendment is one single amendment.

Mr. KAHN. The Senate amendment is one amendment. Of course, the gentleman can find those sections under the National Guard provision of the Senate amendment, which, I think, begins at section 60 of the Senate bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would it be in order to offer an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from California to instruct the conferees to not agree to section 69 of the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. Is that one of these same sections?

Mr. McKEOWN. No; that is a section on another matter, respecting the liability for military service.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, that is not one of the sections that is in controversy between the conferees.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order now, until this amendment has been reported. Then the Chair will decide the matter. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KAHN moves to instruct the conferees to recede from their disagreement to the National Guard section of the Senate amendment and concur with an amendment which has already been reported.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is a very vague proposition to put before the House. I have a point of order which I desire ultimately to make to the motion, but I think we should first have the motion made by the gentleman from California properly reported.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if anyone desires it—I take it, the gentleman means what was read last night—he can insist upon that being read again.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, it is already printed in the RECORD this morning. I stated that at the time that I made the motion.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman from California, instead of having the motion made as read by the Clerk that the conferees recede, which they can not do to a particular part of the amendment, that he submit the motion that the managers on the part of the House be instructed to concur, in substance, to the following provisions.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the motion that the gentleman from California makes is so indefinite that nobody has any idea of what he is trying to do.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why does not the gentleman state to the House what it is. No one knows.

Mr. KAHN. I intend to state very fully to the House what the purpose is, but I can not state it in the motion.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the purpose of the gentleman is to move that the House conferees be instructed to agree to the substance of the amendment which he offered last evening, which was then reported, and which is printed in the RECORD this morning. Of course, if anyone desires it, he can insist upon that being read again this morning.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be again read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I make this suggestion to the gentleman from California: Would not this whole proposition be put fairly and squarely to the House if the gentleman from California will move that the managers on the part of the House be instructed to recede from the House provisions and accept the compromise measure by which the National Guard is to be organized under the Army clauses rather than the militia provision of the Constitution?

Mr. KAHN. That is practically the substance of the motion that I have made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, we can not instruct the conferees to recede and concur in the Senate amendment in part. We can instruct them that they shall concur to certain provisions in conference.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama has stated this proposition as if the compromise were to organize the National Guard under the Army clause of the Constitution. The compromise, as he will remember, is that the States shall have the option whether they shall organize under the Army clause or the militia clause.

Mr. DENT. I meant, of course, each State under the compromise plan.

Mr. KAHN. I think the Clerk has the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KAHN moves that the managers on the part of the House be instructed to agree in conference in substance to the following provisions as amendments to the Senate amendment, section 59 to 69 of the Senate amendment, inclusive, as follows:

"SEC. —. Strength of the National Guard of the United States: The maximum strength of the National Guard of the United States, as established under the provisions of this act, and that may be organized in any State in time of peace shall be equal to 800 officers and enlisted men for each Senator and Representative in Congress and a number, to be determined by the President, for each Territory and the District of Columbia: Provided, That in States which have but one Representative in Congress the maximum strength of the National Guard of the United States therein organized shall be determined by the President: Provided further, That the word Territory, as used in this act relative to the National Guard of the United States, shall include and apply to Hawaii, Alaska, Porto Rico, and the Canal Zone. Except as otherwise specifically prescribed herein, the organization of the National Guard of the United States, including the composition of all units thereof, the location of such units, and the assignment of such units to the brigades, divisions, and corps of the Army of the United States, shall be as provided in sections — and — of this act.

"SEC. —. Enlistment in the National Guard of the United States: Whenever any State or Territory shall have provided by law for enlistment in the troops of such State or Territory of all persons resident in such State or Territory who enlist in the National Guard of the United States, and shall have otherwise complied with the conditions of this act for the keeping of State or Territorial troops, any person resident in such State or Territory, and liable for military service in time of war, except enlisted men of the Regular Army and the enlisted Reserve Corps, may, within the limits as to number provided by section — of this act, be voluntarily enlisted in the National Guard of the United States, and while serving therein shall be exempted from other military service: Provided, That such person shall at the same time and by the same enlistment contract enlist in the troops of the State or Territory of his residence: Provided further, That the period for which such person enlists in the troops of the State or Territory shall be such that his State or Territory enlistment will terminate concurrently with his Federal enlistment. Such enlistment in the National Guard of the United States shall be for a period of three years, except as specifically provided for in section — of this act, with the privilege of reenlisting for additional periods of not less than one nor more than three years. The qualifications for enlistment in the National Guard of the United States shall be the same as those prescribed for enlistment in the Regular Army, subject to such modifications as the President may direct. Enlisted men in the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall, with their consent, be recognized as members of the National Guard of the United States under the provisions of this act for the unexpired portion of their present enlistment contracts. All persons enlisting for service in the National Guard of the United States shall sign an enlistment contract and take and subscribe to an oath in the following form:

"'I do hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted this —— day of ———, 19—, as a soldier in the National Guard of the United States and in the troops of the (State) (Territory) of ——— for the period of three years under conditions prescribed by law, unless sooner discharged by proper authority, and I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America, and that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and of the officers appointed over me according to law and the rules and Articles of War. And I do solemnly swear to bear true faith and allegiance to the (State) (Territory) of ———, and to obey the orders of the governor thereof subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States.'

"An enlisted man discharged from service in the National Guard of the United States shall receive a discharge in writing, in such form and with such classification as is, or shall be, prescribed for enlisted men of the Regular Army. In time of peace discharges may be given prior to the expiration of terms of enlistment under such regulations as the President may prescribe.
